this afternoon, so the servicemen may enter the Tabernacle. We shall appreciate it.

We acknowledge the presence of the following distinguished visitors and others who hold prominent positions in educational circles, and in the state. I am not sure that we have been able to observe all who are present, but we mention the following: Senator Wallace F. Bennett; Congressman H. Aldous Dixon; Mayor Adiel F. Stewart of Salt Lake City; Superintendent of Salt Lake City Schools M. Lynn Bennion; Lamont Toronto, Secretary of State; President Ernest L. Wilkinson of the Brigham Young University. There may be others whom we have not been able to observe, but we mention these and assure you that you and all others unmentioned are welcome at our services.

We have before us also our mission presidents from United States, Mexico, Central America, Canada. We have stake presidencies, bishoprics, all temple presidents, and General Auxiliary officers. To all we extend a hearty welcome and express satisfaction and pleasure in your presence and your co-operative spirit in these exercises.

The singing for this morning's session will be furnished by the Brigham Young University Combined Choruses, with Elder Ralph Woodward conducting, and Elder Alexander Schreiner at the organ.

We all know that the Primary Conference concluded last evening, and it is a note of interest, very significant, to know that there were so many in attendance that they could not accommodate them in this large Tabernacle, and so they held two sessions, and they were very inspirational—according to reports, exceptionally so. I think that the Primary General Presidency and Boards should be happy this morning on the success of their great Conference.

The Brigham Young University Combined Choruses will now sing, "The Heavens Are Telling," with Ralph Woodward conducting.

The opening prayer will be offered by Elder Arthur J. Godfrey, president of the Santa Barbara Stake.

PRESIDENT DAVID O. MCKAY

MY BELOVED brethren and sisters: If you knew the weight of the responsibility of this moment, you would gladly answer the prayer of my heart—that I might have your united support and the inspiration of the Lord. I know what I should like to say and will try to say it, but it is a question whether I can get that message over to the thousands who are listening as I should like to give it, and, I hope, as the Lord would have it given.

"... verily I say unto you, ... [that] marriage is ordained of God unto man.

"Wherefore, it is lawful that he should have one wife, and they twain shall be one flesh, and all this that the earth might answer the end of its creation." (D & C 49:15-16.)

That passage from the Doctrine and Covenants indicates the message I have in mind to give this morning—some helpful hints for happy homes.

First, however, I should like to say a few words relative to the general conditions in the Church. A most outstanding accomplishment since our conference last October is the completion and dedication of the Los Angeles Temple.

On the original twenty-four acres purchased by President Heber J. Grant, assisted by Elders David Howells and Preston D. Richards, there are now, besides the temple, the following Church edifices, all finished and paid for: the Westwood Ward chapel, recreation hall, and classrooms; headquarters of the California Mission, bureau of information, central heating plant, and sufficient lot space for an inter-stake auditorium.

During the pre-dedicatory visiting days, December 19, 1955, to February 18, 1956, 660,000 persons availed themselves of the opportunity of viewing this sacred edifice. Forty thousand attended the eight dedicatory services held March 11 to March 14.

It is highly appropriate to express to this general conference appreciation of the contributed efforts, time, and means of the thousands of men and women who had the responsibility of directing and caring for the convenience and comfort of the hundreds of thousands of visitors, sometimes as many as 25,000 a day.

First, this appreciation applies especially to the stake presidencies, high councils and bishoprics in the temple area, and all the members of committees appointed by them; second, to the architect and his associates; and third, to the contractor and assistants; fourth, to the faithful women who constituted a reception committee, who were at their assigned posts of duty every day for over nine weeks, outside and inside the temple; fifth, to the presidency of the Temple Mission and directors of the Bureau of Information; sixth, to the eleven doctors who were on hand to render first aid. Incidentally, forty-seven persons received medical care. We express appreciation also to our own committees and those in California—the committee on transportation and accommodation; the committee on the printing and distribution of tickets; the committee on press and radio and public relations; the committee on seating those thousands of people; and, I might say especially, the committee who, through KSL, installed television in the various rooms, thus adding to the interest and convenience of over 5,000 members to attend each of the eight sessions of the dedicatory services.

We wish to express appreciation for the welcome extended by the governor of the state, Governor Goodwin Knight, and his commendation and words of appreciation for that sacred edifice; also the message sent by Mayor Norris Poulson of Los Angeles; and for the receptions given and messages sent by the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce and the Los Angeles Rotary Club. We appreciate their attitude and their entertainment. Great as that temple is, beautiful as it is, we shall ever associate with it the attitude of the people toward it, members and non-members alike.

We appreciate the contributions given by people in the temple district, every promise fulfilled, and more—voluntarily given.

Finally, we are appreciative of the tithes and offerings of the entire Church, making that edifice and others possible.

Brethren and sisters, one hundred and twenty-six years ago today, the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints was organized in the home of Peter Whitmer, Sr. Six members founded the organization, though there were others present.

About fourteen months prior to that organization, a revelation was given to the Prophet Joseph saying, a marvelous work was about to come forth among the children of men.

In that revelation we read the following regarding the spirit of the Church:

"Therefore, O ye that embark in the service of God, see that ye serve him with all your heart, might, mind and strength, that ye may stand blameless before God at the last day. . . .

"And faith, hope, charity and love, with an eye single to the glory of God, qualify him for the work.

"Remember faith, virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, brotherly kindness, godliness, charity, humility, diligence." (D & C 4:2, 5-6.)

Compared with the nearly two thousand years since Jesus Christ, the Son of God, established his Church in the Meridian of Time, one hundred and twenty-six years constitute a very brief period, yet the growth and progress of the restored Church during that time have been remarkable. From a membership of six, the Church now numbers over a million and a quarter, divided into 227 stakes and forty-four missions. It has built twelve temples, with two more under construction, and 2,646 other houses of worship are completed and under construction.

In educational matters, its accomplishments are highly commendable. Besides the general interest of the members in the University of Utah, the Utah State Agricultural College, and other state institutions, the Church supports an educational system of which it may justly be proud: Brigham Young University, Ricks Junior College, 140 seminaries and institutes, and is now building junior colleges in New Zealand, Hawaii, Tongatabu, Tonga, Pesega, and Mapusaga, Samoa.

The Church supports twelve hospitals, and through its welfare department needy persons are either rehabilitated or given necessary assistance from fast offerings and tithing funds. Though temples, tabernacles, and other Church edifices cost millions, all dedicated buildings are wholly paid for, and the Church is entirely free from debt.

On behalf of the First Presidency and other General Authorities of the Church, I take great satisfaction in reporting that all departments of the Church are progressing very satisfactorily and express gratitude to our Heavenly Father for his divine guidance and inspiration.

An Appeal for Stability and Harmony in the Home

But I am not so sure whether we are maintaining the high standards required of us in our homes. I feel constrained, therefore, at this opening session to make an appeal for more stability, more harmony and happiness in home life. It has been truly said that "the strength of a nation, especially of a republican nation, is in the intelligent, well-ordered homes of the people." In no other group in the world should there be more contented, more happy homes than in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

Just this month there appeared in a leading magazine the encouraging statement that American homes and family life are steadily strengthening. According to that article, the total population of our country has doubled since 1900. The number of families has tripled. This growth in family life is shown by the rapid increase in home ownership. One hundred-twenty percent more families owned their own homes in 1955 than in 1940. There are sixty-seven percent more children under five years of age now than in 1940, that is in the country at large. There are sixty-one percent more children in group age five to nine years.

Loyalty as a Contributing Factor

RECENTLY OUR attention has been called to conditions that seem to justify our admonishing the membership of the Church to keep their homes exemplary before the world.

To the young people of the Church, particularly, I should like to say first that a happy home begins not at the marriage altar, but during the brilliant, fiery days of youth. The first contributing factor to a happy home is the sublime virtue of loyalty, one of the noblest attributes of the human soul. Loyalty means being faithful and true. It means fidelity to parents, fidelity to duty, fidelity to a cause or principle, fidelity to love. Disloyalty to parents during teen age is often a source of sorrow and sometimes tragedy in married life.

I have received several letters this last month from young folk—two of them in their teens—irked because of what they consider interference of parents. Young people in all the Church and all the nation should understand that both the Church and the state hold parents responsible for the conduct and protection of their children. The Church, you will recall, is very explicit in that. "... inasmuch as parents have children in Zion, or in any of her stakes which are organized, that teach them not to understand the doctrine of repentance, faith in Christ the Son of the Living God, and of baptism and the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of the hands, when eight years old, the sin be upon the heads of the parents.

"For this shall be a law unto the inhabitants of Zion, or in any of her stakes which are organized." (D & C 68:25-26.)

That is explicit, and parents, that is your responsibility.

Some of you would be surprised to know that the statute of the state requires explicitly that not only parents, but also any guardian who has charge of a child eighteen or under is held responsible for the protection of that child and for his moral teachings. Any guardian or parent that will do anything to injure the morals of the child is guilty of a misdemeanor and subject to imprisonment of not more, if I remember rightly, than six months, and a fine of not less than three hundred dollars, or both.

So, girls and boys, your parents, not only because of their love, but also by command of the Lord and by legislative enactment of the state, are compelled to watch over you and guide you. And parents, once again, that is your responsibility. The effect of this guardianship will be shown by this illustration.

A New York City judge not long ago wrote to the New York Times, saying that in seventeen years that he had been on the bench not one Chinese-American teen ager had been brought before him on a juvenile delinquency charge. The judge queried his colleagues, and they agreed that not one of the city's estimated 10,000 Chinese-American teen agers, to their knowledge, (not one) had ever been hailed into court on a charge of depredation, narcotics, speeding, burglary, vandalism, stickup, purse snatching, or mugging accusations.

A check with San Francisco, where there is a large colony of Chinese-Americans, tells the same story.

P. H. Chang, Chinese Consul-General in New York City, was asked to comment on that. He said, "I have heard this story many times from many judges. I'll tell you why I think this is so. Filial piety is a cardinal virtue my people have brought over from the China that was once free. A Chinese child, no matter where he lives, is brought up to recognize that he cannot shame his parents. Before a Chinese child makes a move, he stops to think what the reaction of his parents will be. Will they be proud or will they be ashamed? Above all other things, the Chinese teen-ager is anxious to please his parents.

"Most Chinese-Americans, no matter how wealthy or poor, maintain a strict family style home. Mealtime is a ceremonious affair which must be attended by every member of the family. Schooling, reverence for religion, and decorum plus reverence for the elders, are the prime movers in developing the child from infancy."

And the paper says, "The amazing record of the Chinese-American youngster shows that it is in the home that the cure for juvenile delinquency will be found, and in no other place."*

So, young people, loyalty to parents, if not a direct contributing factor to a happy home, is at least a safeguard against hastily assuming and lightly esteeming the duties and responsibilities of marriage.

Loyalty to Self

Next to loyalty to parents, I should like to urge loyalty to self. Remember, if you would be happy, if you reach the goal of success in the distant future, your first duty is to be loyal to the best that is in you, not to the basest.

There is a saying in the Bible that "every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment." (Matt. 12:36.) Psychology assures us that "We are spinning our own fates, good or evil, and never to be undone. Every smallest stroke of virtue or of vice leaves its never so little scar. The drunken Rip Van Winkle, in Jefferson's play, excuses himself for every fresh dereliction by saying, 'I won't count this time.'

"Well!" continues James, the psychologist, "he may not count it, and a kind Heaven may not count it; but it is being counted none the less. Down among his nerve cells and fibres the molecules are counting it, registering and storing it up to be used against him when the next temptation comes. Nothing we ever do is, in strict scientific literalness, wiped out. Of course, this has its good side as well as its bad one. As we become permanent drunkards by so many separate drinks, so we become saints in the moral, and authorities and experts in the practical and scientific spheres, by so many separate acts and hours of work. Let no youth have any anxiety about the upshot of his education, whatever the line of it may be. If he keep faithfully busy each hour of the working day, he may safely leave the final result to itself. He can with perfect certainty count on waking up some fine morning, to find himself one of the competent ones of his generation, in whatever pursuit he may have singled out. Silently, between all the details of his business, the power of judging in all that class of matter will have built itself up within him as a possession that will never pass away. Young people should know this truth in advance. The ignorance of it has probably engendered more discouragement and faint-heartedness in youth embarking on arduous careers than all other causes put together." (Psychology, William James, Henry Holt, 1892, p. 150.)

A good ideal for youth to build a happy home is this: Keep true to the best and never let an hour of indulgence scar your life for eternity.

Loyalty to Your Future Companion

Next under that heading of loyalty, I urge loyalty to your future companion. When harmony, mutual consideration, and trust pass out of the home, hell enters in. A memory of a simple indulgence in youth sometimes opens hell's door. Girls, choose a husband who has respect for womanhood! Young man, choose a girl who, in her teens, has virtue and strength enough to keep herself true to her future husband! Down the road of indulgence are too many good young girls, seeking vainly for happiness in the by-ways where people grovel but do not aspire. As a result their search for happiness is in vain. They grasp at what seems substance to find only ashes.

If you would have a happy marriage, keep your reputation as well as your character unsullied.

It is a common saying throughout the world that young men may sow their wild oats, but young women should be chaperoned. In general, this is pretty well carried out, but in the Church we have but one single standard, and it is just as important for young men to keep themselves chaste as it is for young women. No matter what the opportunity, no matter what the temptation, let the young man know that to find happiness he must hold sacred his true manhood. Marriage is a failure when manhood is a failure. Let him know that to gain moral strength he must learn to resist temptation, learn to say with Christ, "Get thee hence, Satan: for it is written, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve." (Matt. 4:10.) Then he is happy; there is peace instead of turbulency in his soul.

Continued Courtship

NEXT TO LOYALTY as contributive to a happy home, I should like to urge continued courtship, and apply this to grown people. Too many couples have come to the altar of marriage looking upon the marriage ceremony as the end of courtship instead of the beginning of an eternal courtship. Let us not forget that during the burdens of home life—and they come—that tender words of appreciation, courteous acts are even more appreciated than during those sweet days and months of courtship. It is after the ceremony and during the trials that daily arise in the home that a word of "thank you," or "pardon me," "if you please," on the part of husband or wife contributes to that love which brought you to the altar. It is well to keep in mind that love can be starved to death as literally as the body that receives no sustenance. Love feeds upon kindness and courtesy. It is significant that the first sentence of what is now known throughout the Christian world as the Psalm of Love, is, "Love suffereth long, and is kind." The wedding ring gives no man the right to be cruel or inconsiderate, and no woman the right to be slovenly, cross, or disagreeable.

Self-Control

THE NEXT contributing factor to your happy marriage I would name is self-control. Little things happen that annoy you, and you speak quickly, sharply, loudly, and wound the other's heart. I know of no virtue that helps to contribute to the happiness and peace of the home more than that great quality of self-control in speech. Refrain from saying the sharp word that comes to your mind at once if you are wounded or if you see something in the other which offends you. It is said that during courtship we should keep our eyes wide open, but after marriage keep them half-shut.

What I mean may be illustrated by a young woman who said to her husband, "I know that my cooking isn't good; I hate it as much as you do, but do you find me sitting around griping about it?" This griping after marriage is what makes it unpleasant. I recall the words of Will Carleton:

WORDS

"Boys flying kites haul in their white-winged birds—
You can't do that when you're flying words. . . .
Thoughts unexpressed may sometimes fall back dead,
But God himself can't kill them when they're said."

Children in the Home

Marriage offers an opportunity to share in the love and care of children, and that is the true purpose of marriage. One writer truly says: "Without children, or without believing that children are important, marriage is incomplete and unfulfilled. Children take time, trouble, and more patience than we usually have. They interfere with freedom, good times, and luxury, but children are the real purpose and reason behind marriage. If we do not put the proper value on parenthood, we are not emotionally or socially ready for marriage.

"Marriage is a relationship that cannot survive selfishness, impatience, domineering, inequality, and lack of respect. Marriage is a relationship that thrives on acceptance, equality, sharing, giving, helping, doing one's part, learning together, enjoying humor," and a home is full of humor with children.

The more you keep in company with your wife, the happier you are. Business takes you away from home. She is there alone. Do not let companionship with other women divide your affection, and that applies to woman as well as to man. At one time I thought that it did not; that man was wholly to blame for the unrest, the disagreements and sorrows that are occurring too frequently, but I have had to modify my opinion. Companionship is the means of perpetuating that love which brought about your union.

In conclusion, for the proper solution of the great problems of marriage we may turn with safety to Jesus, our Guide. He declared, as I read in the beginning, that marriage is ordained of God and that only under the most exceptional conditions should it be set aside. In the teachings of the Church of Jesus Christ, the family assumes supreme importance in the development of the individual and of society. "Happy and thrice happy are they who enjoy an uninterrupted union, and whose love, unbroken by any complaints, shall not dissolve until the last day."

It will not dissolve when sealed by the authority of the Holy Priesthood throughout all eternity. The marriage ceremony, when thus sealed, produces happiness and joy unsurpassed by any other experience in the world. "What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder."

"Home's not merely four square walls,
Though with pictures hung and gilded;
Home is where Affection calls, Filled with shrines the Heart has built! * * * * *

"Home's not merely roof and room—
It needs something to endear it;
Home is where the heart can bloom,
Where there's some kind [heart] to cheer it!

What is home with none to meet,
None to welcome, none to greet us?
Home is sweet—and only sweet—
Where there's one we love to meet us."

—Charles Swain

To the Church, not only to young people, but also to married people, I plead this morning for more contented homes brought about through love, faithfulness, loyalty, self-control, and obedience to the principles of marriage as set for us by revelation to the members of the restored Church of Jesus Christ.

May God help us to be exemplary to the world in this respect, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

Friday, April 6

First Day

President David O. McKay:

Bishop Joseph L. Wirthlin will be our next speaker. He will be followed by Elder Sterling W. Sill.

BISHOP JOSEPH L. WIRTHLINPresiding Bishop of the Church*

PRESIDENT MCKAY, President Richards, President Clark, and my beloved brethren and sisters: I sincerely hope that I may have an interest in your prayers in the endeavor to give you one or two thoughts that I have in my mind. It is needless to say that the Presiding Bishopric is deeply interested in all the young men of the Church who hold the Aaronic Priesthood. Are fathers and mothers holding a weekly home evening where they sit down with their children and discuss the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ and what it will mean to them in their lives?

I think it would be a most inspiring story—it is a true story—to tell of Jesus the Christ, at the age of twelve, being invited by Joseph and Mary to go into Jerusalem wherein they were to pay their taxes, and while there the Christ went into the temple. Immediately he entered into discussion with learned men. In the meantime, Mary and Joseph started homeward. They soon discovered that the Christ was not with them. They returned to Jerusalem and found him in the temple. Mary was sorrowful because Christ had not been with them, but he said to them,

How is it that ye sought me? wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business? (Luke 2:49.)

I think the young men who will eventually hold the Aaronic Priesthood, who have in their hearts the words, "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" as the priesthood is bestowed upon them, will be anxious to go forward and render the assignments that will come to them.

It is a wonderful thing in the home to discuss with our young people the history of John the Baptist, a very young man who had an assignment from on high. The beloved John the Apostle said, "There was a man sent from God, whose name was John," (John 1:6) and John was sent among the people to preach repentance and baptism for the remission of sins, to tell them that Jesus the Christ was to appear, and in the course of time confer upon them the Holy Ghost.

Our sons should know of the crucifixion of the Christ and his resurrection; that after the resurrection he appeared on this, the American continent, and established the Church of Jesus Christ as he had established it in far-off Jerusalem. I think if our young people had that history and had it in their hearts and understood fully the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ as it has been restored through the Prophet Joseph Smith, it would so impress them that they would endeavor to live it in every way.

It would be most inspiring and wonderful to tell these young people something about the Apostles who lived in the days of Jesus the Christ, and who were selected by him, particularly of Peter, James, and John who were actually the presidency of the first Church established by the Christ. They should know and understand that the Church of Jesus Christ was actually organized by Christ in the days of these apostles.

They should know something of the Book of Mormon—how Joseph Smith received the same—and in that wonderful book we find the story of the Christ and his gospel in its fulness. It is an interesting thing to tell them, too, how that same Christ appeared among the Nephites, and among other things the Nephites heard God the Father saying, "Behold my Beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased, in whom I have glorified my name—hear ye him," (3 Nephi 11:7) and thereby, came the establishment of the great Church of Jesus Christ here upon the American continent.

Thereafter, I think it is a fine thing to discuss with these young people and point out to them that the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ was lost because men were seeking different doctrines, that the priesthood had been taken away, and there was darkness upon the earth. It would be inspiring to discuss the Prophet Joseph who went to the Lord and asked the Lord wherein he might find the true Church, and in reply the Lord appeared and introduced the Christ himself, saying, "This is My Beloved Son. Hear Him!" (P of G P, Joseph Smith 2:17.)

It would be a source of inspiration for our young people to know that the Aaronic Priesthood was brought back to the earth through John the Baptist and bestowed upon Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery and also that the Melchizedek Priesthood was restored by Peter, James, and John, the Apostles of Jesus the Christ in a former day. These young people should know that these are realities, that they actually happened, and then there will be a desire to live the gospel and enjoy all of the blessings therein.

As parents, we have great responsibilities, as President McKay has already pointed out to us. I suggest that sometime you read in the Doctrine and Covenants, section 68, verses 25-28, with reference to our responsibilities as parents. The Lord made it very clear, as far as our sons and daughters are concerned, that we should teach them the doctrine of repentance, faith in Christ, the Son of the Living God, baptism, and the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands. Then the Lord went on and said this to us in conclusion: "And they shall also teach their children to pray, and to walk uprightly before the Lord." (D & C 68:28.)

We should read to them about the appearance of John the Baptist to the Prophet Joseph when he said this:

Upon you my fellow servants, in the name of Messiah I confer the Priesthood of Aaron, which holds the keys of the ministering of angels, and of the gospel of repentance and of baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; and this shall never be taken again from the earth, until the sons of Levi do offer again an offering unto the Lord in righteousness. (D & C 13.)

These young men are ordained members of the Aaronic Priesthood at the age of twelve. In the minds of many people, this may seem questionable; but it should not be, because if they will but read or hear the words again, and repeat them and remember them, the words of Christ, when he spoke to his mother and said: "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" I am sure that every deacon will have that same attitude.

It is a wonderful thing if a father will tell his son what it means to pass the sacrament and what it means to be called by the bishop to go out and collect the fast offerings for the good of those who are in need. It is an inspiring lesson that ought to be taught to these young men to the end that day by day they will endeavor to live the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ and actually have in their hearts his spirit. It is a marvelous thing to talk to these young men about the Prophet Joseph, who at the age of fourteen asked the Lord, "Lord, where may I find the Church of the Christ?" and in answer thereto, the Father and the Son appeared, and the Father said, "This is My Beloved Son. Hear Him!" And Joseph, at the age of fourteen, heard these words of the Christ and received direction from on high as to how the Church should be established.

It is well to remember that many of these young men who hold the Aaronic Priesthood at the age of fourteen are called to be teachers—to go out among the people and teach them the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, with a member of the Melchizedek Priesthood, and to render such other service as the bishop may feel is necessary.

It is a wonderful thing to think of the priests, these young men who at the age of sixteen become active in the same assignments as did John the Baptist. It is marvelous to know that these young men have the right to preach repentance, perform the ordinance of baptism, and bless the Sacrament. John the Baptist did not have the privilege of blessing the Sacrament because he had passed on, and the Sacrament of course was established just before Christ was crucified. So these young priests of today have opportunities that John the Baptist did not enjoy. We also read in the Book of Mormon: "After they had prayed unto the Father in the name of Christ, they laid their hands upon them, and said:

"In the name of Jesus Christ I ordain you to be a priest, (or, if he be a teacher)

Friday, April 6

First Day

I ordain you to be a teacher, to preach repentance and remission of sins through Jesus Christ, by the endurance of faith on his name to the end. Amen." (Moroni 3:2-3.)

Responsibility devolves upon bishops, bishops' counselors, fathers and mothers, that we should impress upon these young men the sacredness of blessing the Sacrament, and what the Sacrament means and its purpose; and also the privilege of performing the ordinance of baptism. If these young men understand the full meaning of the Sacrament and preaching repentance, they will become so interested that they will try to live lives in harmony with Jesus the Christ and say, as he said: "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?"

So, brethren and sisters, as parents we have great responsibility, as President McKay has already pointed out, in our homes; and I think one of the greatest responsibilities that falls upon us, and one we should follow closely, is the matter of holding a home evening with our young people. Call on some of them to pray. Give some of them the assignment to tell us something about faith, something about the gift of the Holy Ghost, and something about the matter of holding the Aaronic Priesthood. If that is done, there is no question that these young people will meet all of the requirements that come to them through the gift and the power of the Holy Ghost.

Only last Sunday, I attended a conference where many of these young people had the opportunity of bearing testimony. It was a great thrill to hear them say that they know that Jesus the Christ lives—that they know that this is his Church. Some might question it because of their age; but nevertheless if they receive the gift of the Holy Ghost, they will have that knowledge.

I recall the time when I was baptized and confirmed a member of the Church at fast meeting. I had a peculiar feeling, and something came to my soul that gave me happiness and joy—something that I had never experienced before. On the way home, I said to Mother: "I had a peculiar feeling, Mother, when the bishop laid his hands upon my head and confirmed me a member of the Church, and said, 'Receive the Holy Ghost.'"

"Son, what was the feeling?"

I said, "A feeling of happiness, a feeling that filled my soul—something I have never had before."

She said, "What did he say to you, Son?"

I said, "'Receive the Holy Ghost.'"

So mother said to me, "Son, without a doubt the Lord was good enough to bestow upon you the gift of the Holy Ghost," and from that time until this time I have known that Jesus the Christ lives. I know that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God. I know our President here is a prophet of God, and those who assist him. I know that these twelve men are all apostles, each one of them, with the same power and privileges and rights that Peter, James, and John enjoyed in their time and age.

So, parents, it is a wonderful thing that your sons who hold the Aaronic Priesthood will have the feeling and the desire to go forward and to render every service that is required of them, that they may follow the admonition in the fourth section of the Doctrine and Covenants, verse 3:

Therefore, if ye have desires to serve God ye are called to the work.

And they are called if they receive the Aaronic Priesthood, especially if you and I will so encourage them and teach them.

So, fathers and mothers, I think, too, of what the Lord has said to you and me, as parents, when he said this: "And they [speaking of us] shall also teach their children to pray, and to walk uprightly before the Lord." (D & C 68:28.) So there is no question about prayer; there is no question about walking uprightly before the Lord, but that he will bless them and inspire them and lead them on, and that everyone of them will have the same feeling as the Christ had at the age of twelve, when he said: "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" This I pray will be the blessing of every member of the Aaronic Priesthood, and every young person who has membership in this Church, which I humbly ask and pray for in the name of Jesus Christ, our Savior. Amen.

ELDER STERLING W. SILL

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve Apostles

LAST SUNDAY we celebrated the event which initiated upon this earth the universal bodily resurrection. Great events have a way of increasing in importance in our minds when we hold them up for study and contemplation and try to determine their significance, particularly as they apply to our own lives. To assist in this process, we have adopted the very helpful custom of setting aside special days to think about special things. In addition to Easter we have many other wonderful days.

We have set aside the thirteenth of next month as Mother's Day, and we hold the significance of this great occasion with all that it stands for, up before our minds, and as a result the quality of our lives tends to adjust upward to maintain the level of our thoughts.

Each Fourth of July we set aside a day to celebrate our nation's birthday, and we think about our freedom, and what it means, and what it has cost, and what would happen if it were lost, and what we might be able to do to further promote the great idea of freedom in our lives, and in the world about us.

On the twenty-fifth of December we set aside another day and hold up before our minds the life and teachings of Him who was ordained to be the Savior of the world and the Redeemer of men.

And we think about his example and his sacrifice and what they mean to us, what he had in mind when he said, "If I be lifted up, I will draw all men unto me." (See John 12:32.)

It has been said that the human mind has some of the qualities of the tendrils of a climbing vine; that is, it tends to attach itself and draw itself upward by what it is put in contact with. We set aside these special days to put our minds in contact with the greatest ideas and ideals in the world. From this point of view, think what the effect has been in America over the years to both old and young, of looking up to the virtues and accomplishments of Washington and Lincoln, both of whom we believe to have been raised up by God, one to be the father of this divinely favored country and the other to save it from dissolution. The lives of both of these great men so rich in integrity, honor, and devotion to duty, are held up before our minds to draw us to a higher level of thinking.

This year happens to be the 250th anniversary of the birth of Benjamin Franklin, and during this year throughout America much is being written and spoken about the outstanding character qualities of this great American. And as our minds attach themselves, we tend to absorb these qualities to ennoble our own lives. Each of these special occasions serves a necessary and different purpose.

This morning I would like to put your minds in contact with the fact that this is the 150th anniversary year of the birth of the Prophet Joseph Smith whose life marks the beginning of the greatest and final gospel dispensation. The importance of this great event has an unusual and overwhelming significance in the life of every human being who lives upon the earth.

In holding this thought up for your consideration, I would like to take you back in history some 3700 years to the birth of another prophet by the name of Joseph. This Joseph was the son of Jacob and one of the twelve brothers who later became the leaders of the Twelve Tribes. Like Joseph Smith, this Joseph also received manifestations of the will of the Lord at a very early age. This apparent favor caused some jealousies among his brothers, and when Joseph was seventeen years old, he was sent by his father to inquire about the welfare of his brothers who were tending the family flocks at Dothan. When they saw him approaching, they said, "Behold the dreamer cometh," and they plotted to take his life. But by the intercession of one of his brothers, a compromise was reached, and they sold Joseph for twenty pieces of silver, which is approximately eleven dollars in American money, to a group of Ishmaelites who were going down into Egypt to sell their spices.

In Egypt God did not forsake Joseph but continued to give him other manifestations of the divine will. This fact was known to some of Joseph's associates, and fifteen years later when Pharaoh had a dream which troubled him, Joseph was sent for. Joseph told Pharaoh that there would come seven years of great plenty. These would be followed by seven years of famine, and Joseph advised Pharaoh to build granaries and store up the corn in the good years to reduce the suffering during the years of famine. Pharaoh, seeing that Joseph was a man of ability and understanding and that the Lord was with him, appointed him to be the manager of this great Egyptian welfare program. Then Joseph built granaries and stored up the corn during these seven years of plenty.

Finally the years of abundance were over, and the great famine began. Then Joseph opened the granaries, and all of the surrounding nations, including the brothers of Joseph, came to Egypt to buy corn. When the brothers learned that Joseph was now a man of great authority and power, they were naturally very frightened. But Joseph quieted their fears with these words. He said,

... be not grieved nor angry with yourselves, . . . that ye sold me hither: for God did send me before you to preserve life. (Gen. 45:5.)

And thus for approximately eleven dollars, several nations were saved from starvation.

It is a little bit difficult to understand "a famine" when one of our most pressing problems is surplus and oversupply. But it is even more difficult when men have pushed God out of their interests, to understand another kind of famine which he foretold should come upon the earth in consequence of disobedience and sin. In foretelling this famine, the Prophet Amos said,

Behold the days come, sayeth the Lord God, that I will send a famine in the land, not a famine for bread, nor a thirst for water, but of hearing the words of the Lord:

And they [men] shall wander from sea to sea, and from the north even to the east, and shall run to and fro to seek after the word of the Lord, and shall not find it. (Amos 8:11-12.)

This famine was also literally fulfilled as foretold. Isaiah had said,

The earth also is defiled under the inhabitants thereof; because they have transgressed the laws, changed the ordinances, broken the everlasting covenant. (Isaiah 24:5.)

The ministry of the Master himself was permitted to continue for only three short years. Then one by one each of the apostles was put to death. According to tradition Peter, Andrew, Simon, and Philip were crucified; James and Paul were beheaded; Bartholomew was flayed alive; Matthew was slain with a battle-ax; Thomas was run through with a lance; James was beaten to death; Thaddeus was shot through with arrows; Barnabas was stoned; Mark was dragged to death in the streets of Alexandria; and John, the one surviving apostle, was banished to that rocky little island in the Aegean Sea called Patmos.

The Church, thus left without divine leadership, soon sank to the lower level of a strictly human institution, and as conditions went from bad to worse, that prophecy of Isaiah saw complete fulfillment which said, "For, behold, the darkness shall cover the earth, and gross darkness the people." (Isaiah 60:2.)

But as has been said, God always provides the remedy before the plague. Six hundred years B.C. a little group of Israelites who were descendants of Joseph were led away from Jerusalem by the Lord, headed for a far-off land which we now know as America. They brought with them their records and the writings of their prophets, including the writings of this same Prophet Joseph who was sent into Egypt "to preserve life." After their arrival in the promised land, Lehi read to them a prophecy made by their famous ancestor, Joseph, about events that should take place in the latter days in this new land.

He said,

Yea, Joseph truly said: Thus saith the Lord unto me: A choice seer will I raise up out of the fruit of thy loins; and he shall be esteemed highly among the fruit of thy loins. And unto him will I give commandment that he shall do a work for the fruit of thy loins, his brethren, which shall be of great worth unto them, even to the bringing of them to the knowledge of the covenants which I have made with thy fathers. . . .

And his name shall be called after me; and it shall be after the name of his father. And he shall be like unto me; for the thing, which the Lord shall bring forth by his hand, by the power of the Lord shall bring my people unto salvation. (2 Nephi 3:7, 15.)

Joseph Smith fulfilled these prophecies. Joseph had said, "His name shall be called after me," Joseph. "And it shall be after the name of his father." Joseph Smith's father's name was Joseph. Then the prophet said, "And he shall be like unto me." Joseph, the son of Jacob, was sent before the face of the Egyptian famine to preserve life. And Joseph Smith was sent before the face of the spiritual famine spoken of by Amos, for exactly the same purpose, to unlock the granaries of spiritual truth, to dispel the darkness that covered the earth, and make possible that every living soul might have "life everlasting."

One of the most thrilling events that has ever happened in the world came as a part of the fulfillment of this prophecy, when in the early spring of 1820, God the Father and his Son, Jesus Christ, reappeared upon this earth to open this greatest and final gospel dispensation. And God has placed in the hands of men three great volumes of new scripture, outlining in every detail the simple principles of the gospel, that all men might be fed the bread of life and be enabled thereby to work out their individual personal exaltation.

But it is possible to perish even in the presence of plenty. In the early gold rush days of this country many men lost their lives trying to cross what was known as the great American desert. Later when their bodies were recovered, it was found that many of them had died in close proximity to the water holes. With just a little additional knowledge, they would have been able to have saved their own lives.

This experience of the forty-niners has its spiritual counterpart in our own day. Emerson indicated this possibility when he said,

On the brink of the waters of life and truth we are miserably dying. Sometimes we are furthest away when we are closest by. We stand on the brink of an ocean of power, but each must take the step that would bring him there.

It is always a pathetic tragedy when that step is not taken.

This is evidenced by the fact that nineteen hundred years ago unheeding men lived in the very presence of the Son of God, and in response to his invitation to partake of the truths of eternal life they merely said, "His blood be upon us, and on our children." (Matt. 27:25.) And so it has been. They were so near—yet they were so far away. How this event should challenge our initiative and put us on our feet, earnestly seeking that greatest of all blessings, eternal exaltation!

But nineteen hundred years have come and gone since that time, and the lives of men are still being wasted by the devastation of spiritual famine. Certainly it is just as true now as it was then, that "there is only one name given whereby man must be saved." (See Acts 4:12.) Yet out of over two billion people who presently occupy the earth, only one-third even bear the name of Christian. And this one-third is divided into some 250 contending sects, all claiming to accept the Bible as the inspired word of God and the only authoritative rule of faith and doctrine. Their confusion on even the most simple points of doctrine is indicated by the report that some seventy-eight of these baptize by immersion, many sprinkle, sixty-eight have optional forms, sixty-seven practise infant baptism, many have no baptism. Thirty-nine require no adherent to creed or doctrine of any kind.

Almost every Protestant church came into existence because of "a protest" or an "argument." The division of opinion caused by the Civil War was responsible for the formation of many new churches. The Church of England was organized because the Pope refused to give Henry VIII a divorce. There are many "state churches." It was Emperor Constantine, not the servants of the Lord, that made Christianity the church of the Roman Empire.

And as this famine has run its long, destructive course, many of the truths that Jesus came to give to the world have been lost, even to "know God" which Jesus declared was "life eternal."

One of the most popular of present day ministers recently said, "No one can possibly know about God. God is absolutely immeasurable, undiscoverable and undiscernible." He said, "He has no body or shape." St. Augustine attempted to describe the nature of God as a circle whose center was everywhere and circumference nowhere.

In the severity of this famine of spiritual understanding, men have denied personality to deity. They have also deprived him of his body. They have left him without senses, faculties or feelings. And as a natural consequence, the world in large part is still where Paul found it nineteen hundred years ago, worshipping at the feet of an "unknown God," and this without proper understanding of even the most simple principles taught by Jesus and recorded in the Bible. These include such important doctrines as the literal bodily resurrection, the degrees of glory, the pre-existence of man, salvation for the dead, the functions of the Aaronic and Melchizedek Priesthoods, the proper organization of the Church, what the name of the Church should be, the function of sacred temples, the eternity of the family unit, and many other important doctrines vital to our salvation and all plainly taught by Jesus and recorded in the Bible.

So far as I know, the most important fact there is in the world today is that God has again restored the priesthood, and his voice has regiven that divine commission saying, "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, . . ." (Matt. 28:19.) Amos said that many should "run to and fro seeking the word of the Lord but should not find it." One of the reasons that some can't find it is that as of old, some have eyes that see not. There are some others who can't find it because some of us who have access to it, keep our lights hidden under a bushel. There are others who can't find it because of their confusion when our lives don't accord with our teachings.

The restoration of the gospel has a vital significance in the life of every person upon the earth. This cannot be evaded nor avoided. This responsibility we must understand. In one of the most meaningful of all latter day scriptures, the Lord has said, "It must needs be that all men must be left without excuse," (see D & C 88:82) and that applies to those who fail to hear, and even more particularly to those who fail to teach, for those who bear the divine commission to dispense spiritual truth must also share in the prospective condemnation spoken of by Paul who said, "Woe is me if I preach not the gospel."

And so during this anniversary year, we hold up before our minds and the minds of all men the tremendous message of the restoration, and pray that our minds may attach themselves to the revealed word of the Lord with such great power, diligence, and faith, that this devastating famine may be dispelled, that all men may be able to find the clear waters of eternal life, and that because of our obedience to the gospel, that God may thereby be enabled to draw all of his children upward to him to inherit the celestial kingdom.

May God bless us I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

You have just listened to Elder Sterling W. Sill, Assistant to the Council of the Twelve. We shall now hear Elder Oscar A. Kirkham of the First Council of Seventy.

ELDER OSCAR A. KIRKHAM

Of the First Council of the Seventy

IN these few minutes allotted to me, I humbly pray that the Lord will bless me. I feel the weight of the responsibility. I certainly need the blessings of the Lord. I want to try and leave with you one idea that you may carry back into your own private thinking and life to magnify, to bless, to make beautiful. And I believe out of my own thinking and prayers it is here.

There is a phrase that is often heard among the Latter-day Saint people. It was heard when I was a boy. The four standard works of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Have you read them? Do we know what they are? I often think of the inspiration and help that has come to me as I have read the word of the Lord.

The Bible, the Book of Mormon, the Doctrine and Covenants, the Pearl of Great Price! There are the four great standard works of the Church.

During the last year or two I have tried to make them a part of my life. I humbly bear testimony that in them there is inspiration, there is strength, there is confidence, there is the word of the Lord.

Let me read a few sentences of the Bible. I quote from the 27th Psalm—one of my favorite passages of scripture. They are all familiar to you.

The Lord is my light and my salvation; whom shall I fear? the Lord is the strength of my life; of whom shall I be afraid? . . .

Though an host should encamp against me, my heart shall not fear: though war should rise against me, in this will I be confident.

One thing have I desired of the Lord, that will I seek after; that I may dwell in the house of the Lord all the days of my life, to behold the beauty of the Lord, and to enquire in his temple.

For in the time of trouble he shall hide me in his pavilion: in the secret of his tabernacle shall he hide me; he shall set me up upon a rock.

And now shall mine head be lifted up above mine enemies round about me: therefore will I offer in his tabernacle sacrifices of joy; I will sing, yea, I will sing praises unto the Lord. . . .

Wait on the Lord: be of good courage, and he shall strengthen thine heart: wait, I say, on the Lord. (Psa. 27:1, 3-6, 14.)

There is great beauty and strength in the Bible. Do you read the Bible? Do you read it prayerfully? A library of sixty-six books written by many men, covering nearly three thousand years. The general theme is a true and living God sounding the call to reform and rededication.

The Old Testament is the divine foreshowing of his coming. The New Testament, the gospel of Jesus Christ, our Lord, the masterpiece of world literature, the most majestic exposition of religion ever given to man.

The first five books of the Old Testament stand at the head of the literature of the world. Words like these:

In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth. . . .

And God said, Let there be light: and there was light. . . .

So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him. (Gen. 1:1, 3, 27.)

It contains the great teachings of the Ten Commandments, the Sermon on the Mount. Fewer words, if any, have such a great influence for good upon the human family. Here by prayerful study we may learn the truer values of life, the road to real happiness.

I am going to try to make it a real part of my life. Out of prayerful thought I bear testimony and invite you that this year may be a great year for you and for me in this glorious literature.

Another of these standard works of the Church is the Book of Mormon, to which I refer briefly. I read from Third Nephi:

Therefore ye must always pray unto the Father in my name;

And whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in my name, which is right, believing that ye shall receive, behold it shall be given unto you.

Pray in your families unto the Father, always in my name, that your wives and your children may be blessed. (3 Nephi 18:19-21.)

A lonely boy in Shanghai, China, hunts for a Mormon. No one is found. He wants to find one of his own people. "Try a Latter-day Saint," says a fellow companion. "They are sometimes called that." Discouraged he goes back to his bunk. He finds the fellows waiting with a package on his cot. He opens it and finds the package wrapped in a white box. At first he thinks it is a box of candy and goodies, and then when he looks closer he sees a name. Reverently he says, "Hello, Mother." "A Book of Mormon," says a fellow nearby.

Inspirations came to three of these chaps. They pledged together that they would read the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and the other general scriptures.

... the Lord giveth no commandments unto the children of men, save he shall prepare a way for them that they may accomplish the thing which he commandeth them. (1 Nephi 3:7.)

This startled the imagination and the will of these fellows to go after this task.

The Doctrine and Covenants, another of the standard works of the Church. In Section 78:

And ye cannot bear all things now; nevertheless, be of good cheer, for I will lead you along. The kingdom is yours and the blessings thereof are yours, and the riches of eternity are yours.

And he who receiveth all things with thankfulness shall be made glorious; and the things of this earth shall be added unto him, even an hundred fold, yea, more. (D & C 78:18-19.)

When we had finished reading the Doctrine and Covenants, my wife said, "Oscar, I think we should say a prayer." We prayed.

The Pearl of Great Price, another of the four standard works of the Church. This book contains the Book of Moses, the Book of Abraham, and extracts from the history of Joseph Smith, the Prophet, and other important words of the Lord.

I close with these words from the Third Epistle of John, 4th verse:

I have no greater joy than to hear that my children walk in truth.

May the Lord bless us as we prayerfully study the four great standard works of the Church.

May the Lord bless our children that they may ever walk in truth, that by the reading or studying of these great books, there shall come to them inspiration, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER THOMAS E. McKAY

PRESIDENT McKAY and Counselors, President Smith, members of the Council of the Twelve, other General Authorities, and my brethren and sisters and friends: I am very happy and thankful for this opportunity of being here this afternoon and also this morning, listening to the wonderful testimonies of the brethren, and participating in the business of this great Church. I am grateful that I have had the privilege of voting. I have always been taught to vote. I still vote in Huntsville, and I have never missed an occasion on election day to be there if I were in the country.

I had a grandmother who used to visit us in Huntsville when we were quite young. I remember one morning she arose early. My father, however, had already gone to the canyon to get some barn timber. She asked about him. They told her where he had gone, so she said, "Well, it's election day in Ogden. I'm going down to vote." There was nothing special to vote for, no specific items, but she walked the thirteen miles and cast her vote. That is an example that we can follow.

A short time ago I received a telephone call, a rather unusual call. When I said hello, the speaker called me by my first name and said, "Tom, I have wanted to call you for some time. You are one of the kindest men that I have ever known." I appreciated the compliment.

It also suggested, besides being a compliment, giving me, as it were, a shot in the arm, a theme around which I should like to say a few words today. That theme is kind words. "Let us all speak kind words to each other. Kind words are sweet tones of the heart." I like those sentences—I like that definition of kind words. They are sweet tones of the heart, and if I may take just a minute or two out of the time allotted to me, I should like to express appreciation for a group of singers, student singers, who have not often been mentioned. They mention our choir—God bless them. This is a wonderful choir we have heard today. Our own Tabernacle Choir has been emphasized. You cannot estimate the good they are doing, and especially on their recent trip to Europe. I have done missionary work in those countries visited by the choir, and, oh, how those people will appreciate and continue to appreciate the good that the members of the choir did at the dedication of the temple.

But this group of singers that I refer to were students. They were advanced students in music, studying abroad. I first came in contact with some of them when I landed in Liverpool on my first mission. I had been ordained a seventy and set apart to labor in Great Britain as a missionary by President Heber J. Grant. When I arrived in Liverpool, Elder James McMurrin, a counselor in the European Mission presidency, met the boat and asked our names. When I told him my name, he said, "Are you a brother of David O. McKay?" I said, "I am." He said, "Well, if you do just half as good a work as he did, we will be satisfied. I think we will take you with us to Glasgow tomorrow night." They were going there to hold conference.

Well, I had expected to go to Scotland. I had a little black book full of addresses from my father and from my brother who had been there before me. That night, however, the brethren had had a meeting, and we were called together Saturday morning, and after they had heard from each of us, Brother McMurrin again came to me, put his arm around me, and said, "Brother McKay, what would you think, and what would your parents think if we sent you to Germany instead of to Scotland?"

The words of my father just before I left Ogden to go on that mission came to me. "Remember, my boy, it doesn't matter so much where you work. It is how you work. You go where the Lord wants you to go." I repeated that to Brother McMurrin, and he said, "Well, we are going to send you to Germany. President Schulthess is in Berlin as mission president. He is calling for missionaries, and there is not one in this large group (and it was a large group) assigned to the German Mission. You may spend a few days visiting in London and then go to Paris, (it was 1900, and the World Fair was on), and wait there at a hotel where the missionaries who are visiting the fair are staying, until you hear from President Schulthess."

I went to London. I had promised our local paper in Ogden, the Standard [now the Standard-Examiner], to write a report occasionally of my visit. I started one from London. I am glad I never sent it. I was disappointed in London. It was storming. I had been on the boat eight days. I was sick eight days, and then to have my assignment changed to a country that I knew nothing about—at least I did not know the language. I was rather discouraged.

However, I met some people there in London on Sunday at the meeting who were from Ogden, and I want to mention them; they were missionary students. It was Brother Edwin Tout and his family. They were all musicians, all singers. He had rented his home in Ogden, and they had moved to London, so he could be there with the children while they were getting advanced lessons in music. Of course I had known them at home, and they made me welcome and invited me to come to their home while I was visiting in London, urged me to come, and it didn't take much urging.

Thirty-six months later I stopped in London again on my way home. I suppose it was the same London, but it did not look the same to me, and I want to relate this incident concerning the Tout family. They had regular tours from London up through the Trossachs. I had not been in Scotland, so my folk had sent me a little extra money to make that trip. It was a great trip—no automobiles, no busses, but four horses attached to one of those wonderful coaches, I call them, and we would travel in those, and then get out and take a boat from one lake to another, and have an opportunity to walk through the beautiful woods occasionally.

We were walking on one of the trails through that beautiful country. Sister Maggie Tout, the eldest daughter of the Tout family, a great singer, was in the group along with some of the missionaries from London. There was quite a percentage of the group who were members of the Church. We stopped there to rest, loitering through the trees, and Nannie, as I always called her, stood between two beautiful trees, and started to hum a tune. All the tourists quieted, and we sat down and listened. She burst forth singing that wonderful song, "Oh, My Father."

My first attendance at the statewide mission conference was in Berlin, and it was surprising how many of these advanced music students I knew and had met at home. One of those students who was there is the one who telephoned to me. He is now near his eighty-second birthday but still going strong, and, Hugh, I want to thank you for those few kind words, if you are listening in.

There were others there, but as I say, it is dangerous to mention names, but I wish to pay tribute to the group of singers, those advanced students who have done so much towards music in the Church, along with our other singers in the choirs. God bless their memory. Some of them have gone to the other side, and I have not carried out what I generally preach, when I have the opportunity, of expressing appreciation before it is too late. We feel appreciation. We love, for example, our wives, but how often do we tell them that we do? We just let them take it for granted.

It is like another of my old friends who often visited us. He was circulating until he was ninety-eight years old. He passed to the other side, however, a short time ago. He always gave us something. He had a wonderful memory, and I always remembered this poem that he quoted:

Don't Wait 'till I'm Gone

When I quit this mortal shore
And mosey round the earth no more,
Don't weep, don't sigh, don't sob;
I may have struck a better job.

Don't go and buy a huge bouquet
For which you'll find it hard to pay;
Don't mope around and feel all blue,
I may be better off than you.

Don't tell the folks I am a saint
Or any other thing I ain't;
If you have jam like that to spread,
Please hand it out before I'm dead.

If you have roses, bless your soul,
Just pin one in my buttonhole
While I'm alive and well today;
Don't wait until I've gone away.

That was his favorite poem. It was requested at his service that this poem be read, and I understand that it was. I refer to Brother James Hart. God bless his memory, also.

Now, with reference to this telephone call, it did give me a theme, kind words; I never heard my father, and nobody else did, speak an unkind word to my mother, so it has not been difficult for me to say kind words. I trust, my brothers and sisters, and pray that we may all remember to speak kind words to each other, and especially may the Lord help us to remember that "Kind words are sweet tones of the heart," I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Elder Thomas E. McKay, Assistant to the Twelve, has just spoken to us.

The Congregation will now join in singing, "Oh, Say, What Is Truth?" with the Choir, conducted by J. Spencer Cornwall. Following the singing, Elder Levi Edgar Young of the First Council of Seventy will speak to us.

The Brigham Young University Combined Choruses and the congregation joined in singing the hymn, "Oh Say, What Is Truth?"

President David O. McKay:

We shall now hear from Elder Levi Edgar Young of the First Council of Seventy, who will be followed by Elder Eldred G. Smith, Patriarch to the Church.

ELDER LEVI EDGAR YOUNG

PRESIDENT MCKAY, my brethren and sisters: I pray that the Lord may bless me that what I say may be of some help to everyone in this large audience. It is quite natural that when we are called upon to speak, we give utterance to the thoughts that are on our minds and in our hearts.

I have been thinking this day of the words of the Vermont Historical Society when they wrote concerning the history of Sharon. To quote a sentence or two, the paragraph to which I refer says that: "Sharon was settled in 1765 by Connecticut emigrants and organized in 1768. Sharon entered the Hall of Fame by being the birthplace of one of the immortals of American History, Joseph Smith who founded the Mormon religion." It is a noble tribute written by the state historian concerning the Prophet Joseph Smith.

In the book of Ecclesiasticus, [Apocrypha], chapter 17, we read:

The Lord created man of the earth.

He endued them with strength by themselves and made them according to his image,

And put the fear of man upon all flesh, and gave him dominion over beasts and fowls. . . .

Counsel, and a tongue, and eyes, ears, and a heart, gave he them to understand.

Withal he filled them with the knowledge of understanding, and shewed them good and evil.

He set his eye upon their hearts, that he might shew them the greatness of his works.

He gave them to glory in his marvellous acts for ever, that they might declare his works with understanding. . . .

Besides this he gave them knowledge, and the law of life for an heritage.

He made an everlasting covenant with them, and shewed them his judgments. * * *

Their ways are ever before him, and shall not be hid from his eyes.

These words direct our minds and hearts to the Holy Bible and the first chapter of Genesis, the beauty and truthfulness of which impress every reader with its inherent greatness. We think of the Holy Bible and the other holy books, the Book of Mormon, the Doctrine and Covenants, and the Pearl of Great Price. This being the anniversary of the founding of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints by the Prophet Joseph Smith, it is good to think of them, for they give us the teachings of God, our Father. A few thoughts in reference to the Holy Bible as a whole will be welcome to all. William Lyon Phelps, professor of English literature at Yale University, wrote these words in his, Human Nature in the Bible:

Every one who has a thorough knowledge of the Bible may truly be called educated; and no other learning or culture, no matter how extensive or elegant, can, among Europeans and Americans, form a proper substitute. Western civilization is founded upon the Bible; our ideas, our wisdom, our philosophy, our literature, our art, our ideals, come more from the Bible than from all other books put together. It is a revelation of divinity and humanity; it contains the loftiest religious aspirations along with a candid representation of all that is earthly. . . .

The Holy Bible was written by many men under different conditions. It is the product of men inspired of God, covering a period of three thousand years. Like John of Patmos, we hear the "voice of many waters," yet unified "as the clear note of a trumpet." Beginning with our first parents and culminating in Jesus Christ and the Church he founded, it is a manifestation of the divine will, and was written by the inspiration of God, our Father in heaven. The book shows that the Hebrew prophets gave their lives to the service of God. They wrote by the power of the Holy Ghost. God directed them.

The Book of Genesis stands indeed at the head of the literature of the world. It is more recent than some of the writings of Chaldea or Egypt which have come down to us and is incomparably the noblest composition of early ages, in its moral and spiritual characteristics. (Geikie, Hours With the Bible.)

However highly we may estimate the scientific, philosophic, and religious genius of the narrators of Genesis, more important to us, and for the religious instruction of youth, is the fact that they were men, who had surrendered themselves wholly to God, and who had derived their knowledge from Him. (Rudolph Kittel of Leipzig University.)

"The first leaf of the Mosaic record," says Jean Paul, "has more weight than all the folios of men of science and philosophers." "And he is right," says Geikie, "for we owe to it the earliest and grandest revelation of that first principle of all religion—the existence, the unity, the personality, and the moral government of God."

The life of Christ, our Savior, as given in the New Testament, is to old and young alike, the most moving and convincing truth that he came from some higher sphere into our earthly history with a mission to reveal God and save man. "He preached the gospel of the kingdom; and forever even until all the aeons have been closed, and the earth itself, with the heavens that now are, have passed away, shall everyone of his true and faithful children find peace and hope and forgiveness in His name, and that name shall be called Emmanuel or God With Us."

In reference to the other Church works, the Book of Mormon, the Doctrine and Covenants, and the Pearl of Great Price stand with the Bible at the head of the religious books of today. Everyone of our four Church works has a genuine and divine truth that God lives and that we are his children and are given the duty to work out our destinies. We cannot study them enough. Just to read the first chapter of the Book of Mormon gives us a lesson in the meaning of education. To think that Nephi was educated in both the learning of the Egyptians and the Jews! Today few people realize what that learning was. Some scholars maintain that the learning of the Egyptians in ancient times has never been equaled.

We are all thinking this day of Jesus Christ, our Savior. Among the many things of his life we will recall his Sermon on the Mount. It is the most beautiful sermon ever given to man, and no one can read a single sentence of it without being built up in spirit and truth.

And seeing the multitudes, he went up into a mountain: and when he was set, his disciples came unto him:

And he opened his mouth, and taught them, saying,

Blessed are the poor in spirit: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven.

Blessed are they that mourn: for they shall be comforted.

Blessed are the meek: for they shall inherit the earth.

Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness: for they shall be filled.

Blessed are the merciful: for they shall obtain mercy.

Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God.

Blessed are the peacemakers: for they shall be called the children of God.

Blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousness' sake: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven.

Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake.

We must remember that there were ancient religions long before the Redeemer of the world was born, and the writers were men of divine knowledge. An ancient Japanese leader of religion writes,

I will halt here today and having purified myself, we will go forth tomorrow and worship in the temple of the Deity.

And a writer of Buddhism says,

Let us cultivate good will towards all the world. This is the mode of living.

In the chronological writings of Padre Claudio Clemente is conserved a form of prayer said to have been used by Columbus on Friday morning, October 12, 1492, as he stepped on the land of the New World. The prayer was used by Cortez, Balboa, and Pizarro later on in their discoveries.

O God, our Father, eternal and omnipotent, Creator of heaven and earth and sea, we glorify Thy Holy name, praise Thy majesty, whom we serve in all humility, we give unto Thy Holy protection this new part of the world.

So many of the fathers of our church were descendants of the early Pilgrims to Massachusetts. For this reason we have always felt the beauty of the story of the Pilgrim Fathers and their coming in the Mayflower to America in 1620. We have the story of Pastor Robinson uttering a farewell prayer to the Pilgrim Fathers as they left for America. In reading it, we see the prophetic spirit of it when he said:

Friday, April 6

I charge you before God and His blessed angels, that you follow me no farther than you have seen me follow the Lord, Jesus Christ. If God reveal anything to you, by any other instrument of His, be as ready to receive it, as ever you were to receive truth, by my ministry; for I am fully persuaded, I am very confident that the Lord has more truth yet to break forth out of His holy word.

It was Sir Isaac Newton who lived some three hundred years ago who wrote a book on mathematics which is said to be the greatest scientific work of its kind ever written. I speak of Newton for his life has always thrilled me. Born in 1642 in Lincolnshire, England, he was a frail little farm boy who used to wander into the gardens and fields where he lived. He would look up at the sun and stars, for to him they possessed such heavenly qualities unlike anything on earth. The sight of a falling apple one day caused him to wonder about the force that drew the apple to earth. Newton began to work with the laws of motion and universal gravitation. As a result he produced one of the greatest books of all times entitled, Principia. It was a scientific work of the highest merit. Just before he died he wrote that the wonders of the universe had been given their shape and motion by the hand of God.

A copy of the Principia was given to the Seventies' Library by Orson Pratt who had been called by President Brigham Young to go to Austria on a mission in 1864. Elder Pratt had already written and published his book called, Biquadratic Equations, which was used at the University of Vienna. It was in Vienna that he obtained Newton's Principia which he brought home to the Seventies' Library.

After the Quorum of the Seventy had been organized in Kirtland in 1835, the brethren were stirred by certain words of the Prophet Joseph Smith as found in the Doctrine and Covenants:

And as all have not faith, seek ye diligently and teach one another words of wisdom; yea, seek ye out of the best books words of wisdom, seek learning even by study and also by faith; . . . (D & C 109:7.)

The admonition of the Prophet grew in the hearts of the seventies who knew that they must become the missionaries of the Church. It was not long before a library was established which developed into one of the largest collections of history and literature in the early history of America. Books were brought from all over the world, and the collection of the great works of mankind stirred the seventies to a desire to develop the art of reading.

I pray that we may come to a greater appreciation of the truth and beauty of the divine books that teach the gospel of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Elder Levi Edgar Young of the First Council of Seventy has just concluded speaking. Elder Eldred G. Smith, Patriarch to the Church, will now speak to us. He will be followed by Elder Adam S. Bennion, who will be our concluding speaker.

ELDER ELDRED G. SMITH

Patriarch to the Church

I APPRECIATE the prayers that have been offered in behalf of those who shall take part in this conference, and I pray that I shall receive my share of those blessings which have been asked.

I appreciated the privilege of attending the Los Angeles Temple dedication with the other General Authorities of the Church, and I also want to express appreciation for the sustaining vote in my behalf of this assembly today, for I feel that is a very personal help and support to me in my work. I also wish to sustain with you the General Authorities and others whom we have sustained in this conference, especially President McKay as the President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, who holds the keys of the gospel at this time through which we may receive the blessings of the Lord of salvation and eternal life which are promised through the gospel.

On that memorable occasion which we read of in the Book of Mormon, in Third Nephi, when Christ spoke from the heavens so that all could hear, he said,

Yea, verily I say unto you, if ye will come unto me ye shall have eternal life. Behold, mine arm of mercy is extended towards you, and whosoever will come, him will I receive; and blessed are those who come unto me.

And continuing further, he said:

... And whoso cometh unto me with a broken heart and a contrite spirit, him will I baptize with fire and with the Holy Ghost, ... (3 Nephi 9:14, 20.)

All are invited to come unto him that they may have eternal life. The glory of God is "... to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man." (P. of G. P., Moses 1:39.) The Lord wants only to bring us back into the presence of God. For that purpose he has established the priesthood on the earth. He has established his kingdom with just laws and ordinances, through obedience to which we may obtain eternal life in the presence of our Father in heaven.

All God asks of us is that we keep his commandments, that we obey the laws and ordinances of the gospel. These laws are not unjust, as are some which are given by corrupt rulers. They are simple laws which bring nothing but happiness to those who obey them.

Were a king to extend his domination over the habitable earth, and send forth his laws which were the most perfect kind, and command his subjects one and all to yield obedience to the same, and add as a reward to those who obeyed them, that at a certain period they should be called to attend the marriage of his son, who in due time was to receive the kingdom, and they should be made equal with him in the same; and fix as a penalty for disobedience that every individual guilty of it should be cast out of the marriage feast, and have no part nor portion with his government, what rational mind could for a moment accuse the king with injustice for punishing such rebellious subjects? In the first place his laws were just, easy to be complied with, and perfect: nothing of a tyrannical nature was required of them; but the very construction of the laws was equity and beauty; and when obeyed would produce the happiest condition possible to all who adhered to them, beside the last great benefit of sitting down with the royal robe in the presence of the king at the great, grand marriage supper of his son, and be made equal with him in all the affairs of the kingdom. (Teachings of the Prophet Joseph Smith, p. 52.)

Then the Lord has said, "Behold, mine arm of mercy is extended towards you." (See Jacob 6:5.) This means to all the inhabitants of the earth, not just to the few who then heard his voice, but to all the children of God, to the ends of the earth, to those of all nations, regardless of time or place of their life on the earth. Yes, his invitation reaches to those who lived before his ministry on the earth, who then or even now dwell in the world of spirits, to those who are yet to be born on the earth. Most important of all this invitation is to us, to all of this generation, to you and to me. Are you willing to accept his invitation, can you offer a broken heart and a contrite spirit, are you willing to seek him? He has said,

... seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you. (Luke 11:9.) ... Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you. (Matt. 6:33.)

The Prophet Joseph Smith said, "Search the scriptures," as Brother Kirkham has told us this morning.

Search the revelations, which we publish, and ask your Heavenly Father in the name of His Son Jesus Christ, to manifest the truth unto you, and if you do it with an eye single to His glory nothing doubting He will answer you by the power of His Holy Spirit. You will then know for yourselves and not for another. You will not then be dependent on man for the knowledge of God. (Teachings of the Prophet Joseph Smith, p. 11.)

Friday, April 6

First Day

The Lord is constantly making it easier to find him. He has established his Church with the divine authority to teach and administer in the ordinances thereof. He has established the missionary system to teach and to seek out those who wish to accept his invitation to eternal life.

It was a glorious privilege to listen to the testimonies of the mission presidents who have gathered here at this conference. Surely they are men of God, and they, too, will testify that as they work they receive more for their labors. I testify to you that our missionaries are in good hands.

Those who accept His invitation are surely blessed. It is a real thrill to see the joy expressed by these converts; many through tears of joy tell how wonderful it is that they have been privileged to receive the gospel. Some tell of the joy they received in going into the waters of baptism, that joy is increased again to a climax when they have the privilege of coming to the temple and enjoying the blessings of the sealing ordinances.

The Lord has recently provided more temples to make it easier for men to accept his invitation, including the new Los Angeles Temple. Not only does it make it easier for us, but it also leaves more of the people of the earth without excuse. And woe unto him who has the gospel taught to him and has all these opportunities given to him and does not avail himself of the blessings of the Lord. This may also be a fair warning to those who have the opportunity given to them to go forth to teach the gospel, and do not avail themselves of that opportunity. They too shall surely forfeit great blessings.

Foreign missionaries are not the only ones who have the privilege of teaching the gospel, for it is our privilege to teach the gospel in our own lives, as well as those who are called to local missions. I heard of a man who lived in Salt Lake City in the same house for seventeen years before joining the Church. When he was asked why he had not joined sooner, he replied, "No one asked me."

I talked with a man in Ogden who had lived in the same place for about fifty-five years and had recently accepted the Lord's invitation. He told me no one had asked him before, either.

The invitation to receive eternal life requires more than mere acceptance of baptism. When we receive the Holy Ghost which reveals unto us the truth, it is then our responsibility to extend his invitation to others. This is one case where the more you give to others, the more you receive unto yourself. Then give generously in teaching the gospel. Accept of his invitation to receive him, that you with your family and friends may return unto our Father in heaven, exalted in his kingdom.

May the blessings of the Lord be with us, for I bear unto you my testimony that this is the gospel of Jesus Christ through which we may receive eternal life and become exalted in the kingdom of our Father in heaven. May these blessings be upon us, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

A meeting devoted to the work of foreign and stake missions will be held in the Tabernacle this evening at 7:00 o'clock. Mission presidents, all stake mission presidencies and district presidents are requested to attend this meeting. A special invitation is extended also to stake presidencies, high councilmen, bishops, presidents of Seventies quorums, and officers and members of auxiliary General Boards.

The Temple Presidents in attendance will please meet at 4:30 this afternoon. That is why we are dismissing a little early.

The singing for this session has been furnished by the Brigham Young University Combined Choruses, with Crawford Gates conducting and Alexander Schreiner at the organ. I do not know what to say to express your appreciation to these young people for their presence today. There comes to my mind a saying that:

There are gains for all our losses.
There are balms for all our pain.
But when youth the dream departs,
It takes something from our hearts
And it never comes again.

And just your presence today, young men and young women of the Brigham Young University, has rejuvenated our hearts, but more than that, your singing this morning and this afternoon has been most inspirational. In behalf of the congregation and those listening in as well, I extend to you hearty thanks. The Lord bless you, I pray.

The meeting for the patriarchs was set at 8:30 tomorrow morning. That will not give you sufficient time. President Smith and the members of the Twelve, we would like you to meet them at 8:00 o'clock instead of at 8:30, in the Barratt Hall, if you will please.

The Brigham Young University Combined Choruses will sing, "And the Glory of the Lord," conducted by Elder Gates, and the closing prayer will be offered by Elder John F. Hobson, president of Summit Stake, after which this Conference will stand adjourned until 10:00 o'clock tomorrow morning.

The Brigham Young University Combined Choruses sang an anthem, "And the Glory of the Lord."

Elder John F. Hobson, president of the Summit Stake, offered the closing prayer.

Conference adjourned until 10:00 a.m., Saturday, April 7, 1956.

SECOND DAY MORNING MEETING

The Conference reconvened Saturday morning, April 7, at 10 o'clock a.m.

Music for this session of the Conference was furnished by the Relief Society Singing Mothers from the Pioneer, Salt Lake and Sugar House Regions, and Davis, Layton and North Davis Stakes, with Sister Florence Jepperson Madsen conducting.

President David O. McKay:

At this the commencement of the third session of the 126th Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, we are pleased to announce that the Tabernacle is filled as far as we can see to overflowing, and other meetings are being held in the Assembly Hall and in the Barratt Hall. These services are being broadcast over radio stations and television stations as heretofore announced.

We are pleased to welcome all who are present, particularly the servicemen who are in attendance, and officials of Church, State and Government. I note in the audience Senator Wallace F. Bennett, our Mayor, Adiel F. Stewart, educational leaders, Dr. A. Ray Olpin of the University of Utah, Dr. Ernest L. Wilkinson of the Brigham Young University, our State Superintendent, E. Allan Bateman, and there are possibly others, to all of whom we extend a most hearty welcome.

We have received messages of good will from some of our foreign missions. Here is one you will be interested in from New Zealand: "All the Saints and missionaries join with me in sending our Aloha Nui to you and the Saints assembled. Our three thousand Saints gather in Hamilton for our Annual Conference hui tau where the Spirit of the Lord blesses and stimulates us to be better Latter-day Saints."

And here is a cable from Sweden which came principally for the Los Angeles Temple dedication, signed by President Blomquist: "Wishes, love and greetings from the Swedish nation." We appreciate the spirit of unity, the realization that there are thousands of members of the Church, tens of thousands and hundred of thousands of others who are uniting with us in this worship. We are happy to thank those various television and radio stations for their courtesy in making available their time and facilities for this great assembly. We will announce later where they are.

This morning you will note with satisfaction and gratitude that we have the Singing Mothers with us. They are from the Pioneer, Salt Lake and Sugarhouse Regions and Davis, Layton and North Davis Stakes. Sister Florence Jepperson Madsen is conducting, with Frank W. Asper at the organ. These mothers inspire us just by their presence.

We shall begin these services by the Choir singing "Incline Your Ear," under the guidance and leadership of Sister Madsen. The opening prayer will be offered by Elder William C. Olsen, president of the North Sanpete Stake.

Saturday, April 7

Second Day

The Singing Mothers Chorus sang, "Incline Your Ear."

Elder William C. Olsen, president of the North Sanpete Stake, offered the invocation.

President David O. McKay:

The invocation was offered by Elder William C. Olsen, president of the North Sanpete Stake.

The Relief Society Singing Mothers from the Pioneer, Salt Lake and Sugar House Regions, and Davis, Layton and North Davis Stakes, will now favor us with, "Come Unto Him," conducted by Sister Florence Jepperson Madsen. Following the singing, President J. Reuben Clark, Jr. of the First Presidency will address us.

The Singing Mothers Chorus sang the anthem, "Come Unto Him."

President David O. McKay:

Mothers, there is just one word which partly expresses that inspirational singing. It's glorious.

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr. of the First Presidency will be our first speaker. He will be followed by Elder Adam S. Bennion.

PRESIDENT J. REUBEN CLARK, JR.

Second Counselor in the First Presidency

MY BROTHERS AND SISTERS: It is with deep humility that I rise this morning to say something to you. As always, I trust that you will add your prayers to mine that what I say may be of some value to us. Without the help of the Lord we stand but weak mortals, not able to do too much to the advancement of his cause.

I would like to begin by expressing my gratitude to our Heavenly Father for the devotion, the loyalty, and the great service of thousands of our Latter-day Saints. There is no sacrifice which they will not make. They stand as ready to do the bidding of the spirit as manifested through the Presiding Authorities of the Church as did the early Saints even in the time of the Savior and thereafter, and the early Saints in the beginning and the opening of this the Last Dispensation of the Fulness of Times. I am grateful to you for that. I appreciate that without that loyalty and that devotion the work of the Lord would drag, and we should not do the things that he desires that we should do. Thank you for your devotion, your loyalty, your service.

It is a trite expression that we live in an age of materialism, a materialism which has enthroned worldly things and in a materialism that has cast a shadow even over our spirituality. As I see it, one of the great reasons for this is the shadow which we have cast over Jesus as the Christ. Even some of our great sectarian churches, like ourselves sons of our Heavenly Father, are forsaking him. They are making of Christ, as I have often said, a great teacher, a great philosopher, a great character, where they do not question that, but they deny to him that he was and is the Christ.

Of all of the innumerable testimonies regarding his personality, I should like to call your attention only to two or three. The first is the great prayer which he offered on the night before his crucifixion, after they had left the chamber and gone out to the Mount of Olives, that great prayer: "And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent." (John 17:3.) And the testimony of Peter before the Sanhedrin, when challenged as to the name by which he had performed the miracle at the Gate Beautiful of the temple, he replied: "... the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, ... for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved." (Acts 4:10, 12.)

great declaration of the Father himself to Moses, because it is the epitome, the summary of the gospel of Jesus Christ: "For behold, this is my work and my glory—to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man." (P. of G. P., Moses 1:39.)

There has been an apostasy from that knowledge of the Christ. You know, the more I contemplate the life of the Savior, the more I am impressed, the more I come to value his lowliness, born in the home of a lowly carpenter, not in the halls of the great, not in the palaces of national rulers, but with royal blood in his mortal veins. I am impressed with the observation which he made to a man who came seeking to follow him, to go with him, and he said to the man, "The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests; but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head." (Matt. 8:20.)

He was indifferent, so indifferent to the worldly things. His mind was fixed quite otherwise. The very temptation that came to him from Satan, when Satan offered him all the kingdoms of the world if he would merely bow down and worship him, offered him all the power that could be bestowed through human hands; but he cast that aside.

I recall how after he fed the multitude of five thousand, they would have taken him and made him king, but he thrust that aside also. Worldly power had no allurements. Worldly power was not for him.

I recall that as he stood before Pilate, Pilate's first question was political. "Art thou the King of the Jews? . . ." (Matt. 27:11.) And finally he said to Pilate, who six times tried to get the Jews to release Jesus—he finally said to Pilate, "My kingdom is not of this world," and that his mission was to establish truth, and then that poor, perplexed Pilate queried, "What is truth?" (See John 18:36-38.)

I have in mind the things which He did, the miracles which he performed. There were only three occasions, I believe, when he undertook specifically to provide food for the multitude or for anyone. The first was the feeding of the five thousand on the mount, the second was the feeding of the four thousand on the plain, and the third was that beautiful incident on the Lake of Galilee after he was resurrected when, as the fishermen, the Apostles who had turned again to fishing, drew near the shore with their nets empty, he, the Resurrected Christ, stood on the shore with coats of fire and fish and bread prepared for eating.

I recall but one instance where in fact he furnished money, and I am not sure of another incident somewhat similar to it. I refer to the time when he lacked money for taxes, and he sent Peter down to secure it from the mouth of a fish. He was not providing money to those with whom he worked. The other incident where money was involved directly for him, was when he was asked if taxes should be paid to Caesar, and he, taking a coin and showing the image thereon, said, "Render therefore unto Caesar the things which are Caesar's; and unto God the things that are God's." (Matt. 22:21.)

As to wealth: You will remember how the rich young ruler came to him and asked what he should do. The Savior told him to obey the commandments. He said, "Master, all these have I observed from my youth." Then said the Master, "Sell that thou hast, and give to the poor . . . and follow me." And the rich young man turned away. (See Matt. 19:16-22.) He wanted all of the spiritual blessings which God could bestow, but at the same time he wanted to retain his wealth.

John's disciples came questioning.

"Now when John had heard in the prison the works of Christ, he sent two of his disciples,

"And said unto him, Art thou he that should come, or do we look for another?

"Jesus answered and said unto them, Go and shew John again those things which ye do hear and see:

"The blind receive their sight, and the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, and the deaf hear, the dead are raised up, and the poor have the gospel preached to them." (Matt. 11:2-5.)

That is the work of the Savior.

On another occasion, he said unto another, "Follow me," but the other said, "Lord, suffer me first to go and bury my father. Jesus said unto him, Let the dead bury their dead: but go

Saturday, April 7

thou and preach the kingdom of God." (See Luke 9:59-60.)

"And another also said, Lord, I will follow thee; but let me first go bid them farewell, which are at home at my house.

"And Jesus said unto him, No man, having put his hand to the plough, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God." (Luke 9:61-62.)

Much more along this line might be said, but I want to call your attention to his formula, the principle which guided him, and how beautiful it is, and how it lets all of us who are poor come to him, and how it promises to us his spirit. He said in the closing of the incident that was connected with the coming of the disciples, "Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." (Matt. 11:28.)

I thank the Relief Society for their song.

"Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls.

"For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light." (Matt. 11:29-30.)

His gospel can be lived, can be enjoyed by the poorest of us; the poorest of us may enjoy the blessings of the gospel, the blessings of the priesthood which accompany it. We need neither worldly position nor wealth in order to enjoy all that he has to give. His is the salvation and exaltation if we follow him, of all of us. There is nothing requiring more than a broken heart and a contrite spirit, and all that flows therefrom.

May the Lord give us the power so to live that we may have the blessings which he has promised; may he give us, to each of us, the broken heart and the contrite spirit; may we turn to Jesus the Christ, the Author of our salvation, our Elder Brother; may we worship him in spirit and in truth; may we approach our Heavenly Father through him, that his blessings may be ours, I humbly pray, in the name of Jesus. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr. of the First Presidency has just spoken to us. We shall now hear Elder Adam S. Bennion of the Council of the Twelve. He will be followed by Elder Richard L. Evans.

ELDER ADAM S. BENNION

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

PRESIDENT MCKAY, my brethren and sisters: To look at this great audience and to follow the strength of these leaders behind us, makes a man humble. I sincerely trust that the Lord may give me his spirit through the few minutes that I shall occupy.

It is a stirring thing to listen to these mothers sing. I think when I was a baby I must have been rocked asleep by a good mother because I have loved music ever since. Sister [Florence J.] Madsen continues to be a great blessing to this Church, and through her to all these wonderful women we give our appreciation.

President McKay yesterday afternoon against the pressure of time, with his usual graciousness, gave me a promise that I might suffer through another night. And I want to pay tribute to his prophetic insight. All night long I suffered the pain of an undelivered speech. As a matter of fact, some of my good friends at the close of the meeting yesterday afternoon said I had never before been so effective.

This is my first experience with a warmed-over speech. I was so impressed with the presence of these fine young men from Oklahoma and Missouri and Texas, had I said it yesterday afternoon all I had in my heart then to say was, "The eyes of Texas are upon you." Not only the eyes of Texas but also the eyes of the Church are upon you, and the eyes of all America are upon you. When you take to the blue going back home, just know that our prayers go with you, with you and the stewardesses, too. We are judged by the young men and women of this Church, and could I have said it in the presence of that fine student body choir from BYU, I would have said the Church is measured in no small part by the lives you fine young men and women live.

I met with a group of boys like these up in faraway Alaska. As I visited with them, I asked them how they were getting on and whether they saved anything. One of those fine young men said, "I have plans ahead. I am saving an E Bond—it is true it is a small one, only $18.75 a month, but if I stay here for three years I will have $1,000, and then if I have the good fortune to get my GI benefits, I am on my way through college." That prompted the thought that when we talk of Bonds, we usually talk in terms of money. But there are other bonds, and I want to turn to them for just a few minutes this morning.

Following yesterday's inspiring message from our President, I turned to a book that was handed me by my good friend, Orval Adams, a collection of talks of Frank Totton, one of the outstanding businessmen of America. When he died, his good wife gathered together, as a fitting memorial to her husband, some of the things that he had said. The friendliness of Orval Adams who put the book in my hands, I shall always appreciate.

I beg you to remember that this is the speech of a man who spent his life in banking. But he said to some fine men of America, "There are finer bonds than money bonds. They are more secure, and they pay finer interest." I want to turn to just one of the bonds to which he made reference.

I. And I quote: "There are family Bonds." I wish he could have sat here yesterday morning. "Nothing can impair these ties except ourselves. The average modern home is equipped with countless inventions which have practically eliminated the drudgery of housework. The mechanics of the home are faultless, but mechanics do not make a happy home. The success or failure of human relationships determines the value of human bonds. Some of us in moments of discouragement may think that the American home is breaking down. But in spite of the widely chronicled divorce cases the fact remains that many families are happy families: the father and mother still in love with each other and the children dutiful and respectful.

Business success, honors, titles, and rewards in the last analysis are all brought home to the family, and all those glittering accomplishments are empty honors indeed if one has not a proud family to share them. The family is by far the most important single institution in our commonwealth, and happy indeed is the man, who, when he closes his desk at night has before him the glad-some picture of the sparkling family group with which he shortly will have his evening meal. Family bonds are gilt-edged investments. If you wish to check me on this, 'ask the man who owns one.'"

I am prompted by that little article and what we listened to yesterday morning to add these humble suggestions to the parents who would continue to hold gilt-edged family bonds:

1. Live as you would have your children live.
2. Breathe affection into the family's circle by "staying engaged" as the years come and go.
3. Anticipate situations and keep discipline in the spirit of section 121 of the Doctrine and Covenants.
4. Know your children's companions. Invite them to share your home. Establish sensible coming-in times at night and know fully where their evening entertainment takes them.
5. Cultivate a family with shared responsibility in the home. The unkindest thing that parents who have worked hard can do in their lives is to deny the children the blessed privilege of work under responsible assignments.
6. Feature regular family prayers.
7. Build a spirit in the home in keeping with Galatians 5:22.

If I had a theme this morning it would be "Bonds—Series F." You have had your experience with the E bonds; these are F bonds. The first one is that family bond to which I have made reference.

II. The second is the Bond of friendship, one of the richest bonds in all the world.

I was prompted to say as I looked out over this audience, do not come to this conference with ten thousand people without shaking hands with two or three good men and women you never have met before. There are wonderful people gathered here. If anybody is too bashful and thinks he would be snubbed, there is one handshake from one man who would love to share it with you.

Saturday, April 7

I like to think of David and Jonathan—of Ruth and Naomi—and I like to think of the Prophet Joseph and Hyrum, who died together. I like to think of the three men who sit behind me. I like to think of the men that we visit week after week, you men who constitute stake presidencies and high councils and bishoprics, presidents of organizations—you will all bear me witness that along with all the gifts that come as a result of your callings, there is the blessed privilege of knowing one another well—the privilege of finding out how wonderful people can be.

I have always loved Dr. Samuel Johnson's famous admonition: "If a man does not make new acquaintances as he advances through life, he will soon find himself alone. A man should keep his friendship in constant repair." (Ital. author's.)

Then I think of that wonderful line from Shakespeare:

Those friends thou hast, and their adoption tried,

Grapple them to thy soul with hoops of steel. (Shakespeare, Hamlet 1, 111, 62-63.)

Philips Brooks added the thought, "There is no more beautiful sight to see in all this world—full as it is of beautiful adjustments and mutual ministrations—than the growth of two friends' natures, who as they grow old together, are always fathoming with newer needs, deeper depths of each other's life, and opening richer veins of each other's helpfulness."

III. But the third of this series F bonds I want to leave with you this morning is Bonds of faith.

I am so glad that this conference was launched upon the basis of something you can do. It is no mere academic sort of thing; it is a way of life, this religion of ours. We can say with Micah:

He hath shewed thee, O man, what is good; and what doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God? (Micah 6:8.)

Family, friends, and faith, to me are three of the supreme values of life!

Two days ago we had the privilege of listening to the witnesses of thirty-one mission presidents. Among the wonderful things they told us was the report of a conference in faraway Japan, where people sat all day long in a room unheated, so cold that every Saint gathered could see his own breath through the whole conference—but they stayed. That takes faith.

Crowded into this life, rich in experience through all the years, I bring you an experience that is a tremendous tribute to faith. It was not written in a parlor, and it does not reflect the ease and the comfort of a hammock under a tree. The little woman who penned these half-dozen lines sat guardian through days and nights over a son suffering cancer of the bone. Within the year she had lost her husband and faced the problem of trying to establish a farm with her nine children. She lives in my state. I am proud to know that women like this still live. With nine children, the eldest of whom was stricken so that only a miracle could preserve him, she wrote this:

I wrote my prayer of faith while I waited one awful night alone beside my boy in the hospital:

Let me ride brave and buoyant on the angry waves of life—
Let me see to pluck the sweetness from each moment of strife—
Let me borrow no trouble—
Feel no pangs of fear—
Let strength, calmness, peace be mine
For I know Lord, thou art near.

That is faith!

You can invest in faith, my brothers and sisters, and it pays rich dividends, rich beyond any of the bonds I know.

Will you let me close with my simple witness to you in the terms of the faith that I cherish? I was born into this Church, proud that one grandfather came into the valley in '47 and that another one used to freight between here and the Missouri River. With that kind of heritage, God forbid that I should ever falter in the faith of those progenitors.

I have studied this gospel through four universities, and I am so happy to be able to say that the more I have studied, the more wonderful this gospel becomes—so simple, so sublime, so satisfying. I give you my witness I have tried this gospel on, and it works—it works in every situation in life. And finally, I give you my testimony that the witness has come. It has come from Cumorah; it has come from Alaska; it has come from Hawaii; it has come from the hearthstone in my own home. I know as I stand here that God lives and hears and answers prayers. The recipient of answers to those prayers bids you to build richly, to invest in the bonds that never fail—bonds of family, of true, sacred friends, and faith in Almighty God.

And I leave that witness with you, humbly, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

He to whom you have just listened is Elder Adam S. Bennion of the Council of the Twelve. We shall now hear from Brother Richard L. Evans of the Council of the Twelve.

ELDER RICHARD L. EVANS

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

I SUPPOSE that the singing which most of us first remember is the singing of our mothers. I can remember, as a child, my cheeks wet with tears for the sweetness of my mother's singing. Music can be very mechanical or it can stir and feed and satisfy the soul. Of such we have heard here this day, and with you I am grateful for the sweetness of the singing of these mothers here assembled.

There is a sweet presence which I miss here this morning, and did yesterday—that of Sister McKay. I should like her to know that she is much missed at this conference. I have seen her and her beloved husband in their graciousness together in various countries, under many conditions, and when our President spoke of love at home yesterday and of what pertains to the making of a good home, I am sure he was speaking out of the experience of his life and heart, for his courtly graciousness and gentlemanly consideration of Sister McKay on all occasions, under all conditions, and in all places, has been a source of inspiration.

At a time of conference I am always faced with a dilemma—one which stems from the necessity of selecting always two subjects: one for the Sunday morning CBS broadcast and one for the regular conference sessions. It isn't ever easy. Those who work with me at the office know that I seldom select a subject for Sunday before Friday, and my family well know that the agonizing experience between Saturday evening and Sunday morning does not see these short subjects in their final form until a very late hour. That is a dangerous way to live, a hazardous way!

People often ask why I do not work farther ahead. I cannot tell you why. I wish I could prepare in advance, and I have no criticism of those who do—I only envy them. But I have a conviction from experience that there is a kind of contagion in the air, and if one waits to catch it, he will come closer to the spirit of the occasion than if he prepares too far in advance. I have tried it both ways, and those things, even for radio, which I have prepared too far in advance seem to have a sort of pre-prepared flavor.

Fortunately for me today the theme I selected for tomorrow morning has been running concurrently in my mind with that which I should like to say in just a few words at this session of conference.

It is interesting how, in reading scripture over and over again, one often, after many readings and a long time, quite unexpectedly finds some word or phrase that comes into his consciousness with a new and particular meaning. I have had, within the last few hours, just such an experience.

This scripture, so familiar to you, and which will perhaps be the theme of the broadcast tomorrow morning, is no doubt one of the most quoted in the Church—one which I have read most often and heard most often, even unto thousands of times—that “Whatever principle of intelligence we attain unto in this life, it will rise with us in the resurrection. And if a person gains more knowledge and intelligence in this life” (and this is the phrase that struck me anew only yesterday) “through his diligence and obedience than another, he will have so much the advantage in the world to come,” not just a miscellaneous acquisition of knowledge, but knowledge and intelligence, through diligence and obedience. (See D & C 130:18, 19.)

Saturday, April 7

Those words are most meaningful—and I have no fear of learning, of the pursuit of knowledge, for any of our young people, if they will keep in mind diligence and obedience—obedience to the commandments of God, diligence in keeping close to the Church, in keeping active, keeping prayerful, keeping clean, keeping circumspect in their conduct. It isn't learning or the love of learning, or knowledge, or the pursuit of any subject that would take from a man his faith, but it is failure to keep the commandments, the failure of a man to feed all sides of himself, and on this subject I should like to read just a few lines that I discarded from what might be used tomorrow morning, and make them serve now:

“Intelligence would not let a man lose his faith in finding truth. Learning does not lead to loss of faith. False learning might, but not true learning. Lack of learning may. Ignorance may. Failure to keep the commandments may lead to loss of faith. Loss of balance may lead to loss of faith. A man may pursue learning along too narrow lines and forget to feed all sides of himself; he may forget his spirit and starve it, but not learning itself leads to loss of faith, not the search for truth, for truth cannot come in conflict with truth. A man can have the pure love of learning and seek for it insatiably, and still keep a simple faith if he will keep the commandments, if he will feed his spirit, if he will be patient, and sweet in humility, and not commit himself to quick conclusions or tentative theories. If he will really seek for eternal truth, with ‘diligence and obedience’ he can keep and pursue an insatiable love of learning and still keep his faith, for ‘the glory of God is intelligence.’”

(That isn't too bad for something having been thrown away from what might be used tomorrow morning! Maybe I have been throwing away the wrong stuff! It's a terrible thing to have to put one's own immortal word-children in the wastebasket week after week.)

We are committed to continuous revelation, to an infinite search for truth, and there are some very significant lines accredited to Thomas Edison that I should like to share with you: “We don't know the millionth part of one percent about anything. We don't know what water is. We don't know what electricity is. We don't know what heat is. We have a lot of hypotheses about these things, but that is all; but we do not let our ignorance about these things deprive us of their use.”

We don't altogether know what faith is, or prayer, and the ultimate meaning or power of them. We don't altogether understand all the commandments, but the limitations of our knowledge should not keep us from observing them and using them, as we pursue learning and the love of learning, keeping the commandments of God and keeping close to him and his truth, in a well-balanced life, in the gospel of Jesus Christ, and using it as our standard as the measure of all things.

I am not concerned about the unanswered questions. I should like to know all the answers, but those I don't know do not bother me. This I know, and leave it with you as the conviction of my soul—that God lives, that Jesus the Christ, his divine and very Son, lives and stands by his side in the Godhead; that these two did appear to a young man, more than a century ago; that we live; that God made us in his image; that he has unspeakably great eternal blessings in store for us as we will search and seek and keep faith and keep clean, and keep his commandments and live in obedience and keep our lives balanced, and keep close to him.

In the wonderful words of Emerson: “All I have seen teaches me to trust the Creator for all I have not seen.”

God bless you, my brothers and sisters, in all things as you meet the daily decisions of life and move on to those great as yet unseen activities and opportunities of eternity, toward which the ways of all of us move, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER JOHN LONGDEN

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve Apostles

I HAVE NO DESIRE to stand here alone. Humbly, in every fiber of my being, I seek the blessing of my Heavenly Father that has been so richly manifest here this morning as we have listened to his true servants speak under his inspiration.

The hymn we have just sung ["Now Let Us Rejoice"] calls to mind an inspirational experience I shared just about six months ago with President and Sister Jacobsen of the Eastern States Mission. We visited Brother and Sister Moss who are assigned to take care of the Peter Whitmer home in close proximity where the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints was organized 126 years ago. I suggested we sing "Now Let Us Rejoice in the Day of Salvation." I am grateful for the inspiration of that moment. The day of salvation, yes—

... but there be some that trouble you, and would pervert the gospel of Christ.

But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed. (Gal. 1:7-8.)

These were the words of the Apostle Paul to the Galatians almost two thousand years ago. I testify to you this morning the words you hear in this conference are truly the gospel of Jesus Christ. It is his gospel—not the gospel of Peter, not the gospel of Mark, not the gospel of Paul, not the gospel of John, or any of the other of those great apos-ties—they are merely the servants of the Lord Jesus Christ ordained to preach the gospel of Jesus Christ.

I should like to call the attention of the young people here and in the unseen audience to one or two thoughts which I trust will be a stimulation. Following the excellent remarks that have been given already, truly the word of the Lord, I would hope to continue in the same spirit.

How does our spiritual growth compare with our material progress? I realize that there would be those who would pervert the gospel, who would endeavor to weaken faith, who would endeavor to weaken the testimony of you young people as you go to study and improve your minds and to develop the intelligence which God has given you, but I humbly plead that you will always remember and understand who you are as you seek to study and to improve your minds. See that your spiritual growth keeps up with your material and economic progress.

I testify to you that you are the light of the world. Just previous to the statement which I quoted from Paul to the Galatian saints two thousand years ago, Jesus Christ, in his Sermon on the Mount said, Ye are the light of the world. A city that is set on an hill cannot be hid.

Neither do men light a candle, and put it under a bushel, but on a candlestick; and

Saturday, April 7

Second Day

it giveth light unto all that are in the house.

Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven. (Matt. 5:14-16.)

You have the opportunity to be the light of the world, for today is a new day. The eyes of the world, I feel, are upon us. All the glorious things that have occurred within recent months—the visit of the choir to Europe, the dedication of the temple in Switzerland, and then the Los Angeles Temple a few weeks ago, have focused much attention on the Latter-day Saints. In an hour and a half in Los Angeles in a taxi and on a bus and in a store, several people who did not know who we were—neither Sister Longden nor I, asked if we had seen the Mormon temple, and all seemed most anxious to talk about it. They said, “Be sure you see the Mormon temple and see the Angel Moroni.”

I thrill as I see tourists come to these grounds and on Main Street and look heavenward to see the Angel Moroni. There is much gratitude and appreciation swelling in my heart that that light has come into our lives. We should understand the message that he has delivered to the earth.

Yes, do not leave the Lord out of your studies. A few weeks ago I read the story of a great physician. Someone said to him, “How does it feel to have within your hands the power of life and death as you operate?” And he said, “I never feel that way. In fact, in my younger days when I was cocksure, I was glorying in my record. I was not humble. In an operation I had to reach a hairbreadth decision, and I was incorrect. So for some years I did not practise, and then as I sat one day meditating upon my failure, there was a spirit came to me. It seemed to say, ‘God has given you these hands. God has given you your brains—develop them and utilize them in worth-while effort,’ and so now, since taking up my practice again, I never take scalpel in hand unless there is a prayer in my heart, ‘O God, guide my hands, and give to me of thy knowledge, for thou art the Great Physician, and I am only thy servant.’”

I pray that we will have the desire to develop our spiritual selves, for only under and by and through that spirit can we attain the great accomplishments that are held out for us by our Heavenly Father. I ask, as you study the philosophies, that you will give the gospel of Jesus Christ an even break. Study consistently the truths embodied in this great gospel, which I testify to you has been restored to the earth in its fullness. Latter-day Saints need not wander in darkness.

In conclusion I should like to give you a spiritual thought. I visited the Juarez Stake just a little over two years ago. I went out into an apple orchard. I saw there a glorious harvest which they were reaping, the like of which I had never seen before. Branches were literally touching the ground, they were so heavily laden with delicious fruit. I know they were delicious because I sampled several of those apples. They were delicious by name and also to taste.

I said to the stake president: “How come? Do you have a harvest like this every year?” He said, “No, this orchard is ten years old, and this is the first time I have ever had or experienced such a crop.”

I said, “How do you account for it?”

“I’ll tell you. I decided deliberately to do something about it because I wasn’t happy with the results I was getting, and so last spring I placed a bouquet of flowers in every apple tree in that orchard, and then God provided the rest, for the bees came along, and they feasted upon those flowers, and they pollenized those apple trees, and here is the rich harvest.”

And I likened that to our lives. Are we pollenizing our spiritual lives with the things contained in the four standard works of the Church, which have been so beautifully called to our attention in this conference? God is anxious and ready to help us if we will only learn of him. I humbly pray, young people, that you will not leave the Lord out of your lives; and as you study, regardless of what the subject may be, you will realize that there is need to develop your spiritual natures.

God bless us so to do, and ever to be humble in accepting his blessings and extending unto him our gratitude. I know that he lives. I know that he is ready to bless us if we will be obedient, diligent students, ever striving to be influenced by his spirit. This I pray, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, our Savior. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Elder John Longden, Assistant to the Twelve, has just addressed us. We will now hear from Bishop Thorpe B. Isaacson of the Presiding Bishopric. He will be followed by Elder Milton R. Hunter.

BISHOP THORPE B. ISAACSON

First Counselor in the Presiding Bishopric

PRESIDENT McKay, President Richards, President Clark, my brethren of the General Authorities, and my dear brothers and sisters: I feel very humble this morning standing before this great audience, this wonderful audience. I humbly pray that the Lord will answer my prayers and sustain me and guide me in what I shall say.

If I have the strength and if I may be forgiven, I should like to thank my wife for a prayer that she offered this morning. As we had our family prayers, she asked if she could say a prayer, also, and I felt ashamed that I had not asked her without her asking me. I think, brethren, that we ought to have our wives join often in our prayers. While they may not hold the priesthood, I am not so sure that the Holy Ghost does not function in the lives of our wives and mothers in probably a keener sense than in our own. After she had prayed for President McKay and all the General Authorities of the Church, she made a special petition to the Lord for her husband and asked that he could be blessed with courage, and then she said, "For courage cometh of the Lord."

Yes, young people, courage cometh from the Lord. Argument, debate, criticism, and faultfinding are not of the Lord. Despondency and discouragement are not of the Lord. Courage cometh from the Lord.

On Thursday morning it was our privilege as General Authorities of the Church to meet the First Presidency in the temple preparatory for this great conference. I do not have the ability to express to you and share with you the spirit of that meeting, but I can testify to you that I know that the spirit of the Lord was there in rich abundance and that the prayers that were offered and instructions that we received were divine.

Someone said at the close of the meeting in the temple, "If we could only go now from this beautiful meeting in the temple to the conference, then we would not need to worry, because of the beautiful spirit present." I believe that same sweet spirit that existed in the meeting in the temple has carried over in full according to the prayers and the supplications there, pleading with the Lord to bless the conference. Yes, I think the same sweet spirit has been here as we prayed to the Lord that it would be.

Much has been said about the Aaronic Priesthood. I shall not forget the visit I recently made to the Susquehanna River and the feeling that I had as I stood somewhere near the spot where the Prophet Joseph and Oliver Cowdery went to seek the guidance of the Lord, and where John the Baptist appeared to them. I wonder if we can imagine how they must have felt when the heavenly messenger appeared to them.

You know, when the Prophet received his first vision, there were some who said he was not a learned man. Perhaps not, if you judge by the knowledge of men, but he had seen God. He knew more about God than any other man in his dispensation. He had seen the Resurrected Christ. He knew more about Jesus than any other man in this dispensation. To know God and his Son, Jesus Christ, as Joseph Smith knew them, is divine power and the fountain of all knowledge. Someone has said, "He who knows books knows much; he who knows nature knows more; but he who knows God has reached the goal of human wisdom."

Much has been said about the visitation of John the Baptist to the Prophet

Saturday, April 7

and to Oliver. Oh, the feeling that they must have had! Oliver Cowdery attempted to write a letter to his brother, explaining the kind of feeling he had when the Aaronic Priesthood was bestowed upon him. Their eyes of spiritual understanding were opened. May I read a copy of the letter that Oliver sent to his brother describing the visit of John the Baptist and the restoration of the Aaronic Priesthood?

On a sudden, as from the midst of eternity, the voice of the Redeemer spake peace to us while the veil was parted and the angel of God came down clothed with glory and delivered the anxiously looked for message, and the keys of the gospel of repentance. What joy! what wonder! what amazement! While the world was racked and distracted—while millions were groping as the blind for the wall, and while all men were resting upon uncertainty, as a general mass, our eyes beheld—our ears heard. As in the “blaze of day”; yes, more—above the glitter of the May sunbeam, which then shed its brilliancy over the face of nature! Then his voice, though mild, pierced to the center, and his words, “I am thy fellow-servant,” dispelled every fear. We listened, we gazed, we admired! ‘Twas the voice of an angel from glory—’twas a message from the Most High, and as we heard we rejoiced, while his love enkindled upon our souls, and we were rapt in the vision of the Almighty! Where was room for doubt? Nowhere; uncertainty had fled, doubt had sunk, no more to rise, while fiction and deception had fled forever. But, dear brother, think further, think for a moment what joy filled our hearts and with what surprise we must have bowed, (for who would not have bowed the knee for such a blessing?) when we received under his hands the Holy Priesthood, . . . (D.H.C. 1:43.)

May I plead with the boys of the Aaronic Priesthood and the men holding the Aaronic Priesthood to value highly that great blessing of the Aaronic Priesthood. May I plead with you, my brethren, my friends, and my associates, my business acquaintances, to make such adjustments as necessary in your lives and do not put it off too long so that you can have the joy and the blessings that come from the Holy Priesthood.

God bless you, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Bishop Thorpe B. Isaacson of the Presiding Bishopric has just concluded speaking. We shall now hear from Elder Milton R. Hunter of the First Council of Seventy.

ELDER MILTON R. HUNTER

Of the First Council of the Seventy

MY DEAR brethren and sisters: It is with deep humility that I occupy this position this morning. I sincerely ask an interest in your faith and prayers and that the spirit of God may direct the things that I may say.

During the past eleven years in which I have served as a member of the First Council of the Seventy, I have had the marvelous opportunity, privilege, and blessing of participating in missionary work both in the stakes of Zion and in the foreign missions. I am indeed grateful for the numerous blessings derived therefrom and humbly express sincere thanks to my Father in heaven. I also take this opportunity to express deep gratitude to President David O. McKay, to his Counselors, and to President Joseph Fielding Smith, and to any others who have had a part in giving me my assignments, because I love missionary work very much and have a strong testimony of the truthfulness of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

I know that the missionary program is one of the greatest assignments that God has given to the Church in this dispensation. I thoroughly appreciate the fact that the responsibility rests upon you and me to take the gospel to every nation, kindred, tongue, and people preparatory for the coming of the Son of Man. It is my firm conviction that when we have done this job sufficiently well, the Lord will accept our sacrifices, our efforts, and our accomplishments, and will usher in the millennial reign. The Savior told his apostles that . . . this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come. (Matt. 24:14.)

As I stand here today, my thoughts revert to the numerous wonderful experiences which I have enjoyed while touring various missions. Perhaps paramount in these experiences are the missionary testimony and report meetings which I have attended. These meetings constitute some of the highlights of my life and especially of my participation in missionary work. In these meetings the elders and lady missionaries have poured out their deepest feelings unto God. On numerous occasions in those meetings missionary after missionary in deep humility bore witness that God lives, that Jesus is the Christ—the Savior of the world, that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God, and that the gospel is on earth again; and then with the deepest of gratitude each missionary in turn thanked God for the privilege of serving in the great missionary work, even expressing gratitude for the privilege of paying his own expenses or of his parents paying them. On all of these occasions the room was filled with the spirit of God, and the Holy Ghost bore witness to me that the gospel of Jesus Christ was true and that the missionary program was of supreme importance. My heart was filled to overflowing even beyond expression; and silently I thanked God for the gospel of Jesus Christ, for my membership in the Church, for my sacred testimony, and for my privilege of participating in missionary work.

On many of those occasions the thought came to my mind: "If the parents of these elders and lady missionaries could be here today and could feel, hear, and see what we are experiencing, they would be fully repaid for sending their children on missions."

In addition to the principal purpose of missionary work, i.e., finding the honest in heart, teaching them the gospel, and thereby bringing souls unto God, I truly believe that a mission is one of the greatest schools in the world for the personal development of the missionaries. Those humble laborers who put their hearts and souls into the work and lose themselves in the service of others naturally receive an individual growth and development beyond their greatest expectations. I think there is no university that can better prepare our sons and daughters for positions of leadership and for life in general, developing their personalities more fully, than can service in the mission fields. From this viewpoint, as well as from many others, the missionary program is marvelous and a great blessing to the members of God's kingdom.

In addition to the personal development that the missionaries receive, they attain an enrichment of one of God's greatest gifts—an increased testimony of the gospel of Jesus Christ. By doing so they receive hidden treasures of knowledge—an absolute assurance that God lives, that Jesus is the Christ, the Savior of the world, and that the gospel has been restored to earth again—which knowledge surpasses anything which they could receive in a material way.

I rejoice in the numerous opportunities I have had to participate in the various phases of church work, and especially do I appreciate the privilege I have had of touring twenty-one missions which has given me the opportunity to bear witness to the truthfulness of the restored gospel and to the divinity of Jesus Christ in practically all of the major cities from Alaska in the north to the Panama Canal in the south. I sincerely thank my Eternal Father for these opportunities and once again express deep appreciation to the First Presidency and the Council of the Twelve, under whose leadership I serve.

Recently I had the privilege of touring the Central American Mission. Its headquarters are in Guatemala City. I am thoroughly convinced that there are prospects for unusual success in this mission. I am happy to report that under the able leadership of President and Sister Wagner, the proselyting work is going forward rapidly and successfully. The missionaries are laboring faithfully and enthusiastically. There was an average attendance of 229 percent throughout the entire mission tour, which fact indicates that the missionaries had done an unusually successful work in preparing the Saints and investigators for the conferences held during the mission tour. I congratulate President and Sister Wagner, as well as the missionaries of the Central American Mission, for their intelligent efforts and the high quality of work that is being done. May God's blessings continue to attend them.

I also congratulate all of the mission presidents and their wives in all the missions throughout the world for the unusual accomplishments that they are achieving. I know that the mission presidents are outstanding men and their wives are marvelous women. Perhaps in no period in church history has the leadership been better in the mission fields than at the present time. I also congratulate all of the missionaries throughout the world for the high caliber of proselyting work that is being done. I know of no time in the history of the Church when the missionary program has been carried forward on as energetic, intelligent, and high plane in general as is occurring at the present time.

I was especially grateful for the privilege of touring the Central American Mission because of my intense interest in the Book of Mormon and in the Lamanites or Indians. Perhaps there is no part of either of the Americas that has as many full-blooded Indians residing therein as do some of the countries of Central America. This fact is especially true of Guatemala. In that country approximately sixty percent of the people are full-blooded Indians. They are primarily of the Quiché Maya race. These people have refrained from marriage with white peoples primarily because they believe that their Indian blood and their people in general are equal, if not superior, to the white races. The parents among the Quiché Maya people regulate the marriages of their sons and daughters, just as did the parents in ancient Israel. It is their purpose to see that their children marry within their own race and preserve their own religion and culture as far as possible.

The Quiché Mayan Indians have a great heritage and an unusual culture. They are a very religious people. Their religion became definitely paganized following the Book of Mormon period; however, a study of their religious beliefs and practices readily reveals the fact that the roots of many of their religious practices extend back into Book of Mormon times when the true gospel of Jesus Christ was had by their ancestors.

Following the Spaniards conquest of the Quiché Mayas during the sixteenth century, the Catholic padres soon found that they could not stamp out the Indians' religion; thereupon they superimposed as many of the Catholic beliefs and practices on the Indian religion as the natives would take, making the Quiché Mayan religion of today a conglomerate.

It is my personal belief that the Quiché Mayas of Guatemala are as directly descended from Book of Mormon peoples as any of the Indians of the Western Hemisphere. Through my research and personal contact with these people, I have learned that they have many traditions that have a kinship to the Book of Mormon teachings. This fact holds true in the written works, such as the Title of the Lords of Totonicapán, the Popul Vuh, and The Annals of the Cakchiquels, as well as in their oral traditions, many of which have been handed down from generation to generation to the present day. The fact that many of the Quiché Mayas do not speak Spanish but have retained their native tongue has made it possible for their traditions to be carried forward unpolluted to our day.

I had been informed that the Quiché Mayas of Guatemala still retained many of their ancient traditions, some of which evidently had their roots in Book of Mormon times, and so when I received the assignment to tour the Central American Mission, I wrote to President Wagner and requested that his missionaries arrange for me to interview some of the old Quiché Maya Indians at Totonicapán. I advised the president to have the missionaries make arrangements for me to interview someone who was well informed on the traditions of that people. In accordance with my request, when I arrived at Totonicapán I found that the missionaries had engaged the services of a man named Jesus Caranza Juarez. Mr. Juarez was a very intelligent person. He not only spoke Quiché Maya, but he also was very apt in the use of the Spanish language. He had been initiated in all the rites and rituals of the Quiché Maya religion and had a thorough understanding of the traditions of that people. For these reasons he was an ideal person to interview.

Since I do not speak Spanish, I asked one of the missionaries to act as interpreter. I said to the missionary, "Do not give Mr. Juarez any lead questions that might indicate to him the kind of answers that we desire to receive. I want to know the exact and accurate traditions of his people; and so I would suggest that you ask simple, straightforward questions; for example, the first question I suggest that you ask is: 'What are the Quiché Maya practices and teachings regarding marriage?'"

Once again I warned the missionary to make no explanation to Mr. Juarez but merely to give him the direct question as I had suggested. This procedure the missionary followed. In response to the foregoing question, Mr. Juarez immediately replied:

"Marriage is the most sacred, the most revered, the most holy, and the greatest of all the religious teachings and practices in the Quiché Maya religion. We have two kinds of marriages. In one kind the ceremony is performed by the priest. Only the good people marry in this kind of marriage. By good people I mean those who do not get drunk, those who do not steal nor lie, and those who are morally clean—in brief, the people who live in accordance with all the teachings of the Quiché Maya religion."

Then he said, "The priest performs the marriage ceremony for those good people; and when he marries them, they are married not only for this life but for the next world also. They remain husband and wife forever."

I was surprised, in fact astonished, to get such an explanation regarding the marriage custom of the Quiché Maya Indians, and so I injected a question at this point. I said to the missionary, "Ask Mr. Juarez where the Quiché Maya people ever got such a teaching and practice in their religion. Ask him if they got it from the Catholic Church?"

The reason I asked that question is because the Catholic religion is about the only one that has made much headway in Guatemala. The Quiché Maya Indians have had some of the Catholic beliefs and practices superimposed upon their ancient paganized Indian religion.

The missionary asked Mr. Juarez the question as directed, and Mr. Juarez immediately replied:

"Oh, no! Certainly not! We did not get that teaching from the Catholics. The Catholics do not have that kind of marriage, and they never have had that kind of marriage."

Then Mr. Juarez explained: "We got that type of marriage from our ancestors. It came down from generation to generation through tradition. Our people practised that type of marriage and had a belief in marriage after death many, many years before the Spanish conquest. In fact, it dates back as far as our traditions go."

I have never read in the writings of archaeologists or other students of the Quiché Mayas that these Indians perform marriages which they believe will endure after death. Perhaps the fact that these Indians believe that their marriages continue for the next world would not be of interest to most people who contact them, and so authors would neglect to make a record of that practice even if they had been told that such existed.

Although I was greatly surprised to find that the Quiché Maya Indians practise a form of marriage which they believe will endure throughout the next world, I was pleased to learn that such was their tradition because I have understood that every time the gospel of Jesus Christ has been on the earth in its fulness that God's true law of celestial marriage constituted part of that gospel. I also know that the true gospel of Jesus Christ was had in ancient America in Book of Mormon days, and certainly the Nephites would have had the true order of celestial marriage. Thus the Quiché Maya Indians of Guatemala, being descendants of the Book of Mormon peoples, have preserved in their system of marriage certain things which hold a resemblance to the true order of marriage as given by the Lord to the Nephites.

Mr. Juarez continued his description of the Quiché Maya custom of marriage by describing the other type of marriage in a rather interesting terminology. He said:

"The other kind of marriage our people call the renegade marriage. Those who receive this kind of marriage are the people that the priests will not marry because they are not good people. They do not live in accordance with the teachings of the Quiché Maya religion."

Then he explained why they were not good people, pointing out that their lives were opposite to the lives of the people who were married by the priests for this life and for the world to come. He said:

"These people who receive the renegade marriage get drunk. They are not honest. They are immoral, and they are not people of good integrity. Their marriages last only until death. They are not married for the world to come."

Mr. Juarez also described to us the various orders of the Quiché Maya priesthood. He stated that the priests were selected from among the spiritual-minded or psychic boys just as they merged into adolescence; and then he explained how these boys were trained for their appointments as priests. He also described to us the Quiché Mayas' system of baptism and the various other rites in their religion, as well as the tradition of their origin.

As you probably already know, the Quiché Mayas have a tradition that they are descendants of Abraham and Jacob, being of the house of Israel. Their traditions maintain that their ancestors came from over the sea and that they were brought to America by the Lord, being led by a prophet of God. They also maintain that that prophet had a peculiar instrument which guided them here which instrument operated in accordance with the faith of the people. Certainly one readily recognizes that instrument as being the Liahona, which is described in the Book of Mormon. (Alma 37:38.) All of the foregoing claims made by the Quiché Maya Indians are recorded in their early writings, and of course they correlate quite closely with the account given in the Book of Mormon.

The following day after interviewing Mr. Juarez at Totonicapán, the mission president, his wife, some missionaries, and I drove to Chichicastenango, Guatemala, for the purpose of attending a Quiché Maya religious service. At eight o'clock in the morning in the St. Tomas Cathedral, erected for the Indians by the Catholic Church, the Catholic priest conducted mass for the Indians, it being a Catholic religious service.

As soon as the Catholic mass ended, the Indians conducted their own religious services, which in general were definitely pagan but in which I could also readily recognize some factors which evidently had their origin in Book of Mormon days.

I was intensely interested to see twelve Quiché Maya men on the stand at the front of the cathedral presiding over the Indian services. I asked a young Quiché Maya man who was serving as our guide who those twelve men were. He replied:

"They are the twelve high priests who are in charge of the Quiché Maya religion."

I then asked, "Why twelve?"

The answer I received was: "Custom, tradition!" And then the guide explained that the twelve men were the best men that could be found among his people. He said that they were selected to be head over the church because of their good characters, because of their abilities of leadership, and because of various other good qualifications which he enumerated.

This young man who was serving as our interpreter could speak English fluently as well as Spanish and Quiché. He informed us that he had had very little schooling and had learned English and Spanish from the tourists. This fact indicated to me that he was very intelligent.

In a recent conversation with President Edgar Wagner of the Central American Mission, I stated that it was my opinion that if his missionaries could convert this Quiché Maya guide and several other young men of similar abilities—young men who could speak Spanish, English, and also Quiché—and then if they were called to do missionary work among the Quiché Maya people, they perhaps would make a marvelous contribution in taking the gospel to those people. Some of the elders from the United States could be assigned to serve as companions to the Quiché Maya missionaries for the principal purpose of giving them a basic understanding of the gospel. Then these Quiché missionaries, who would undoubtedly be favorably received by their own people, could easily obtain admittance into the homes of the best of the Quiché Maya families, perhaps even into the homes of the twelve high priests who preside over their church. In this way the gospel of Jesus Christ, with special emphasis on the Book of Mormon, could be taken to the Indians who speak only Quiché. I believe that these Indians would readily recognize that the Book of Mormon was their book, since the traditions which they hold so sacred fit so well with the teachings of that book.

At the present time we are not able to do missionary work with a vast majority of the Quiché Maya Indians because they do not speak Spanish or English and our missionaries do not speak Quiché. These Indians are a very religious people, practising their own religion according to their highly cherished traditions. I believe the day will come when missionary work will go forth with much power and success among this people. At that time we shall see results similar to those which we read about in the Book of Mormon when the sons of King Mosiah did such phenomenal work among the Lamanites. Eventually the day of the Lamanites will come when all of the predictions regarding them made by the holy prophets and recorded in the Book of Mormon will be fulfilled. It is my opinion that at that time thousands and thousands of the Quiché Maya Indians will join the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and will become valiant in the faith.

In closing I humbly ask God's choicest blessings to come upon the missionaries in the Central American Mission and also upon the missionary work throughout the entire world. May the proselyting program go forward with much force that the honest in heart may be sought out quickly. This I ask humbly, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER DELBERT L. STAPLEY

FIRST I SHOULD like Elder [Adam S.] Bennion to know that it doesn't take a prophetic statement for one to suffer. I have been suffering since yesterday morning when it was anticipated that I should speak.

I desire to preface what I have to say today by recognizing and paying honor to our beloved President, David O. McKay, who has rounded out fifty years of devoted service as one of the General Authorities of the Church. I want you to know that it is a great privilege and blessing to be associated with him in the General Councils of the Church. We love him as you love him. It is our privilege to feel the strength of his spirit, the power of his personality, the strength of his character, and the inspiration of his soul as we associate daily with him in the affairs of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

President McKay is the epitome of saintliness, for he has incorporated into his life the great truths of the gospel of our Lord. We all know that the gospel has a great refining influence in the lives of those who accept it and who obey it. It is a great blessing in our Council, after a matter has been taken care of, to hear President McKay say: "The will of the Lord has been done." My brethren and sisters, President McKay has given a long, faithful, and devoted service to this Church and its people. Truly he represents everything the Church teaches, and it couldn't fall to an individual to have a greater privilege than to sit at his feet and to learn of him. There is not anything too unimportant for him to give his personal attention and consideration. The Lord loves him and is sustaining him by his holy power. He represents what we look for in a prophet of the Living God. I hope we will all pay him honor on this important day in his life.

Now, my brothers and sisters, today I should like to represent another voice speaking in behalf of the Lamanite people and the Church's responsibility to them, with the hope we shall all be encouraged more fully to support and carry the Lamanite banner until these people of chosen lineage realize every privilege and blessing promised to them by revelation and prophecy.

While there are many scriptural statements in the Book of Mormon that support with unquestioned evidence a return to them of the true gospel of our Lord and the restoration of promised blessings as members of the house of Israel, I shall refer to three only:

In 1 Nephi, 15th chapter, we are informed by Nephi that in the latter days and many generations after the Messiah shall be manifested in body unto the children of men, then shall the fulness of the gospel of the Messiah come unto the gentiles, and from the gentiles unto the remnant of father Lehi's posterity, who are the American Indian and his blood relations in the isles of the Pacific.

"And at that day shall the remnant of our seed know," continues Nephi, "that they are of the house of Israel, and that they are the covenant people of the Lord; and then shall they know and come to the knowledge of their forefathers, and also to the knowledge of the gospel of their Redeemer, which was ministered unto their fathers by him; wherefore, they shall come to the knowledge of their Redeemer and the very points of his doctrine, that they may know how to come unto him and be saved." (1 Nephi 15:14.)

Now, my brothers and sisters, as I speak of the Indians, I have in mind all elements of this branch of the house of Israel.

When the Savior visited the Nephites on this continent following his resurrection on the Eastern Hemisphere, he informed them that the establishment of his Church among the gentiles in this land of freedom, the coming forth of the Book of Mormon and its teachings to their descendants, was the sign by which they were to recognize his work among the children of men. Then he affirms:

And when these things come to pass that thy seed shall begin to know these things—it shall be a sign unto them, that they may know that the work of the Father hath already commenced unto the fulfilling of the covenant which he hath made unto the people who are of the house of Israel. (3 Nephi 21:7.)

Mormon, a great prophet toward the close of the Nephite history, speaks of the loathsome state to which the Indian should fall, beyond the description of that which ever had been among the Nephites or the Lamanites, and then declares that after the scattering of his people by the gentiles and after they have suffered much affliction and tribulation, then the Lord will remember the covenant which he made unto Abraham and to all the house of Israel.

When the Lord brought forth the record of the Book of Mormon to Joseph Smith in this dispensation, he committed to his Church with that important record the responsibility of taking to the Indian and Lamanite people the knowledge of their forefathers and the fulness of the gospel, which record also includes the Lord's promises to them as a branch of the house of Israel.

In the Doctrine and Covenants, section 3, the Lord, after reproving the Prophet Joseph Smith for the loss of certain manuscripts relating to the first part of the Book of Mormon, declared:

Nevertheless, my work shall go forth, for inasmuch as the knowledge of a Savior has come unto the world, through the testimony of the Jews, even so shall the knowledge of a Savior come unto my people—

... through the testimony of their fathers—

And this testimony shall come to the knowledge of the Lamanites, and the Lemuelites, and the Ishmaelites, who dwined in unbelief because of the iniquity of their fathers, whom the Lord has suffered to destroy their brethren the Nephites, because of their iniquities and their abominations.

And for this very purpose are these plates preserved, which contain these records—that the promises of the Lord might be fulfilled, which he made to his people;

And that the Lamanites might come to the knowledge of their fathers, and that they might know the promises of the Lord, and that they may believe the gospel and rely upon the merits of Jesus Christ, and be glorified through faith in his name, and that through their repentance they might be saved. (D & C 3:16-20.)

Very shortly after this revelation was given, the Lord gave another revelation that instructed the Prophet to open the work among the Lamanites, as we learn in reading section 28 of the Doctrine and Covenants, wherein Oliver Cowdery was called as the first missionary to the Indians from the newly restored Church. The assignment reads:

And now, behold, I say unto you that you shall go unto the Lamanites and preach

Saturday, April 7

Second Day

my gospel unto them; and inasmuch as they receive thy teachings thou shalt cause my church to be established among them; . . . (Ibid., 28:8.)

Three others were later appointed by revelation to accompany Oliver Cowdery on this first mission to the Indian people.

[President Brigham Young gave much prayerful thought and attention to promoting the gospel among the Indians and in establishing friendly relations between them and the Saints.]

President John Taylor was greatly concerned about an active Lamanite program, for he declared:

The work of the Lord among the Lamanites must not be postponed, if we desire to retain the approval of God. Thus far we have been content simply to baptize them and let them run wild again, but this must continue no longer; the same devoted effort, the same care in instructing, the same organization of priesthood must be introduced and maintained among the house of Lehi as amongst those of Israel gathered from gentile nations. As yet, God has been doing all, and we comparatively nothing. He has led many of them to us, and they have been baptized, and now we must instruct them further and organize them into churches with proper presidencies, attach them to our stakes, organizations, etc. In one word, treat them exactly in these respects, as we would and do treat our white brethren. (The Gospel Kingdom, p. 247.)

President Wilford Woodruff stated:

I am satisfied that, although we have done a little for the Lamanites, we have got to do a great deal more. (The Discourses of Wilford Woodruff, p. 296.)

President George Albert Smith, in inaugurating work among the Indians during his administration, strongly emphasized the importance of the Church mission to the Indians in these simple yet dynamic words:

"The day is here for the gospel to go to the Lamanites, and we must never fail them again."

This was later reaffirmed by President David O. McKay when he emphatically declared: "God would hold us accountable if we failed."

These statements make unmistakably clear what our duty is to the Indian people. Now, my brothers and sisters, we should not deny to them longer their full rights and opportunities for blessings. We must always remember, we only have the authentic record which furnishes the true origin of the American Indians, their history and God's work and gospel teachings among them. Great are the promises of the Lord unto the Indians, which spiritual blessings this people alone hold the keys, rights, and powers to grant and bestow upon them.

In a sense I do not feel sorry for the Indian people because they are children of promise, belonging as they do to the house of Israel and are the posterity of Abraham, the father of the faithful, through whose lineage the Lord promised that all nations of the earth are to be blessed; therefore, they are a chosen race and people unto God, possessing a divine and royal heritage. However, I do feel sorry about the lack of privileges, denial of citizenship rights, and insufficient opportunities for schooling and culture which continue to shroud them in darkness and despair. There are too many of them in our modern day, living under most primitive conditions and circumstances which destroy faith, initiative, ambition, and confidence. That it required hundreds of years for the Indians to reach their low state of degeneracy does not allow the Church or the nation unlimited time to return them to the high civilization and spiritual activation they once enjoyed nor the opportunities and blessings of our present enlightened era of scientific knowledge, productive achievement and culture.

Our apparent insufficient interest and somewhat unsatisfactory follow-up of the Prophet Joseph Smith's taking the Book of Mormon and the gospel to the Indian as well as partial failure to heed the counsel of all presidents of the Church in relation to this program, is an indictment against us and represents a challenge and an obligation we cannot afford longer to ignore.

It is unfortunate that we have permitted others to indoctrinate them to different ways of life than that of their fathers as recorded in the Book of Mormon. Our efforts over the years have not been sustained, but intermittent, and each stoppage of activity causes us to lose ground and permits others to become more firmly entrenched, creating a serious proselyting problem which could in large measure have been avoided. The Indians themselves have chided the missionaries about such conditions and occurrences.

Without question in my mind, we must fulfil completely the Church duty to the Indian and thus lay suitable plans to prevent any future departure from a chosen course of intense missionary activity among them. We truly cannot afford to neglect them again. If called to an accounting by the Lord, could we vindicate the apparent indifference towards them? The Lord has counseled that we are not to be commanded in all things and he that doeth not anything until he is commanded and receiveth a commandment with doubtful heart and keepeth it with slothfulness, the same is damned. (See D & C 58:26.) The revelations make clear the Church path of duty. What additional direction is needed to awaken us to the importance of this God-given task?

My brothers and sisters, the Indian cause and program is not a dead issue in the Church today but continues a constant challenge and duty. We must regain through devoted service to the Indian God's approval and blessing upon this most important assignment.

In my judgment, to be successful the Indian program must become a full Church effort that involves every person and organization. We should also encourage government bodies to study more thoroughly Indian problems, give them increasing local autonomy and furnish the type and quality of leadership and help to elevate the Indian to his rightful place of ultimate full citizenship with opportunity to enjoy every educational and work advantage that will make him independent and self-sustaining. Because the first inhabitants and rightful citizens of our great country are in a minority group does not justify indifference to their cause, nor should they be ignored by the strong political parties of our nation. The government, having subjugated and taken possession of their lands and made them wards of the government, places upon this nation and people a debt and obligation that should be fully and honestly met to permit them in proper time to enjoy full rights and benefits of citizenship with economic and social privileges and proper home life in the society of American peoples.

Perhaps too thoughtlessly we consider the Book of Mormon as belonging to us exclusively, overlooking the source of its divine preparation, also the descendants of the people to whom the record was originally given. We hold it in sacred trust for the American Indian as well as for our own use. The Book of Mormon record has for the American Indian a familiar voice speaking as it does from the dust, of their ancestors.

We must rely on stake and full-time mission leadership and missionaries, priesthood quorums, also the Church auxiliaries, to carry forward this important work. I cannot promise you that it will be an easy task. It will be full of discouragements and will require years to attain reasonable progress, but when accomplished, think of the marvelous blessings and satisfactions we as a people can experience for bringing a backward branch of the house of Israel to a knowledge of truth and of their God. The problems and handicaps that now exist in working among the Indians cause an assignment to be distasteful to some, and because the results often are disappointing and quite unproductive, tend to frighten many away who are considered for missionary service among them. Perhaps they are fearful of what they might find and revolt against the idea of working and associating with these people who live under such humble circumstances and for the most part are without modern facilities that we accept as a part of our daily living. The Lord taught that to eat with unwashed hands did not defile a man, but those things which proceed out of the mouth and come forth from the heart, they defile the man. (See Matthew 15:18-20.)

We should take seriously these words of Jacob, the brother of Nephi:

Wherefore, a commandment I give unto you, which is the word of God, that ye revile no more against them because of the darkness of their skins; . . . (Jacob 3:9.)

Why do we as a people hesitate, my brothers and sisters, to pursue fully the work God has assigned us to do by revelation? How can the Indians be encouraged to a full life of opportunity, joy, and happiness without our help? As we meditate this challenge, we should remember the example of the Christ who humbly and graciously washed the feet of his disciples to teach them the lesson of humility in his service.

Calling to mind the vision and lesson given to the Apostle Peter, who at first resisted taking the gospel to the gentiles, "We cannot call that common or unclean which God has cleansed." (See Acts 10:15.) Does not that same counsel apply to us today, now that the time has arrived for the Indian to receive the fulness of the gospel of our Lord? I am firmly convinced the Lord in his own way is preparing the Indian people to receive the message of the restored gospel, but we must willingly cooperate with him in this program according to the important assignment given to the Church.

Now we should resolve, my brothers and sisters, to never give up in this program regardless of disappointments and discouragements, but fulfil in a pleasing way to the Lord our duty to the Indian people with patience, love, and kindness. Also, we must faithfully keep all promises made to them, and by real sustained interest and never failing them again build confidence through our efforts to serve and thus create a desire within them for the gospel and kingdom of our Lord.

I do not want you to get the idea from this talk that the Church does not have an Indian program and is not making some progress in this field of service, because we are, but we must step up our efforts, increase effectiveness of the work, and accomplish much more than we are now doing to fully bless these people and to please the Lord, our God.

I recognize and express appreciation to those of our brothers and sisters who have given and are giving such faithful and devoted service to the peoples of Lamanite origin. I pray that the choice blessings of our Heavenly Father will be upon this branch of the house of Israel, that our efforts among them will never diminish but will continue to increase in order that they may enjoy the blessings that God has promised to them, which I humbly pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

That earnest appeal for the Lamanites to which we have just listened was given by Elder Delbert L. Stapley of the Council of the Twelve. President Joseph Fielding Smith, president of the Quorum of the Twelve, will now speak to us. He will be followed by Elder Henry D. Moyle.

PRESIDENT JOSEPH FIELDING SMITH

MY DEAR brethren and sisters: We are here assembled, as we assemble at every conference, for the purpose of being instructed, built up, and encouraged so that when we return to our homes, we will be able to teach our people and keep them in the path of truth. We may even be admonished, if that is necessary.

This afternoon I wish to bear testimony to the restoration of the gospel, to the mission of our Redeemer, to the call of the Prophet Joseph Smith and the establishment of this work in the dispensation in which we live, known as the Dispensation of the Fulness of Times. I know absolutely that Jesus Christ is the only Begotten Son of God, the Redeemer of the world, the Savior of men insofar as they will repent of their sins and accept the gospel. Through his death he redeemed all men and took upon him that sacrifice which would relieve us of our sins that we may not answer for them if we will accept him and be true and faithful to his teachings.

I am just as fully satisfied, because I know, that the Father and the Son appeared to Joseph Smith and revealed to him the great truth which had been lost because of the wickedness of the world; that they are separate distinct Personages; that the Father and the Son, together with the Holy Ghost, constitute the Godhead, the great ruling power of the universe; that Jesus Christ volunteered to come into this world to redeem it; that John the Baptist came to the Prophet, as did Moroni before him, and Peter, James, and John later, to give authority and to usher in the kingdom of God anew in this dispensation in which we live, because men had turned away from the truth. Through darkness which covered the earth they had lost the knowledge of God; they had transgressed the laws and changed the ordinances; and instead of teaching the simple truths of the gospel of Jesus Christ, they taught the commandments of men just as the Lord Jesus Christ declared to the Prophet Joseph Smith.

I am grateful for my membership in this Church, for the opportunity that has been mine to serve. My desire is to prove true and faithful to the end. I realize that this is the Dispensation of the Fulness of Times; that we live in perilous days; that men's hearts are failing; that contention prevails; nations stand in opposition to nations; and there is no peace.

ELDER HENRY D. MOYLE

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

I, like Elder Stapley, have had in mind calling to your attention at least, a part of the great service that President David O. McKay has rendered the Church and his Maker during the last fifty years, and particularly that service which has been rendered during the last twenty years since the establishment of the great Church welfare program came about.

When the Lord speaks through his servants, as he did in 1936, there is no room left for any doubt in the minds of true Latter-day Saints. We believe in the words of Amos which have been quoted here before today, that

Surely the Lord God will do nothing,

I realize, because I discover it, that there is commotion not only among men, but also in the elements pertaining to this earth; that they too are becoming angry. The judgments of the Almighty are being poured out upon the inhabitants of the earth by earthquakes, by flood, by famine and pestilence, and in many other ways, and all of these are signs that have been given by our Lord Jesus Christ to convince men upon the face of the earth that his coming is near, even at our doors.

When you return to your homes, teach the people. Call upon them to repent wherein they need to repent, to get on their knees before the Lord, to remember their covenants, and their obligations to keep them, and to walk faithfully and humbly in the sight of their Eternal Father.

That is one of the most important missions that we have. Let us carry it out, I humbly pray in the name of the Lord, Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

We have just heard President Joseph Fielding Smith, president of the Quorum of the Twelve. Elder Henry D. Moyle of the Council of the Twelve will now address us. He will be followed by Elder Alma Sonne.

but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets. (Amos 3:7.)

In this respect we reaffirm our ninth article of faith:

We believe all that God has revealed, all that he does now reveal, and we believe that he will yet reveal many great and important things pertaining to the Kingdom of God.

There is a story that has oft been told by President McKay, particularly during the early days of the welfare program, that I should like to repeat. It is the story of an engineer who pulled his train into a station one dark and stormy night, and while the engineer was going calmly about oiling his engine, getting ready for the next run, a timid passenger from the coach came up to him and asked him if he were not afraid of going out into the dark. Without looking up the engineer said, "I'm not pulling my train out into the dark tonight." "Oh, I beg your pardon, I thought you were going to be our engineer," said the man. "I am, but I won't be in the dark tonight." He said, "Why, I should think you would be very nervous with the lives of all these men and women on this train depending upon you." For an answer the engineer pointed up to the headlight that threw an intense white light several hundred yards ahead on the track and said, "When I pull out of this station tonight I am going to run just to the edge of that light, and when I get there, that light will be extended several hundred yards ahead, and I shall run to the end of that light and so on throughout the night. I'll be running in the light all the way." And the man replied, "Thanks for the lesson, faithful engineer."

President McKay continued: "I can say this to you: The first circle of light we have seen is October 1st, 1936, when by that date we shall see to it that we have sufficient food, fuel, clothing, etc., to see every needy family through this coming winter, and by the time we get to October 1st, the light will have extended sufficiently far to permit us to see the next move we should make. I can promise you one thing, that we'll be running in the light all the way through this dark night."

No more prophetic utterances, I am sure, could have been made at that time. And it is my privilege today to bear testimony to the fact that that prophetic statement has been fulfilled, and that ever since then we have been running in the light, and the story, of course, is not yet told but will yet reveal a great work of inspiration and of progress.

When we sing, "We Thank Thee, O God, for a Prophet" it has a meaning to Latter-day Saints; it has a meaning to welfare workers throughout the Church. Our presence here today indicates how happy and how grateful we are to live in a day and age when a prophet of God is in our midst. We know that we are not left alone to our own judgment or the devices of men.

Those who have been helped by the program during the last twenty years are naturally grateful for the program of the Church, for the generosity of the Saints, and for the inspiration of the brethren who preside over them, but the interesting fact is that those who have been called to labor and to give and to sacrifice and to carry out this great work, are also extremely grateful. They are grateful for the opportunity that they have had to serve their fellow men. They know the truthfulness of the words that "it is more blessed to give than to receive." They have cause every day of their lives to thank the Lord for the privilege which has been theirs of carrying on this inspired work. As a matter of fact, this is the spirit of welfare work. It has insured its success from the beginning, and it will continue with us to carry on in the future.

I know of nothing more faith-promoting in the Church than to be associated with the welfare program and to participate in its activities. Back of it all has been the faithfulness and the devotion of the people of the Church. I do not want to deal in superlatives today, but I am sure that no credit would be too great for the membership of the Church who have met every emergency and have provided for every need which has made itself known since this great program was initiated. The people have not failed. They are not failing now. Their efforts are keeping pace with the needs of their brethren. Both have necessarily expanded as our problems have arisen.

Whereas twenty years ago we only had 115 stakes, we now have 227. Not alone has there been an increase in numbers, but our society has become more complex. I mean by that, of course, the society in which we live. So far as the Church is concerned, our society should be kept as simple as ever. Now in the world there are many limitations imposed upon our freedom of action, individually and collectively, many restraints upon us in government and industry, and in all our activities of life we are circumscribed, of necessity. Many of these influences are insidious in their nature, some of which we are not aware of until we are struck with the full force and effect thereof, and often then we are left helpless if we stand alone.

I have long since been satisfied in my own mind that the commencement of our intensive collective effort to meet these problems was timed of the Lord. Had it not been for the inspiration of the Almighty, President Grant and his Counselors would not have foreseen as they did the future requirements to meet the changing conditions in the world in which we live. Their prophetic foresight made it possible for the people to anticipate and prepare for the future. They also gave us the plan under which we have operated. Up to this time, April 1936, most of our welfare cases were handled by the bishop, individually. He stood, as it were, alone out in the world, with his own resources pretty much, and the result was that he was not capable, standing alone, of meeting these intricate problems as they arose in our new society. With the advent of the program designed to meet our present complex problems, all the bishops of the Church were united in a way that each might share with the other, and all profit by the experiences gained throughout the Church.

But this change in the program from the individual bishop to the welfare program did not in any wise change the principle or the practice upon which our care for the poor was based. It still remains the work of the individual bishop to take care of his own. Thus we continue to carry out in the welfare program the mandate of the Lord given to us in the establishment of his Church and kingdom here in these latter days, just as it was imposed upon the people of prior dispensations.

What happened in the primitive church? The same practice of taking care of the poor and the needy, no doubt in a greater degree of perfection than now, for we are told:

... all that believed were together, and had all things common;

And sold their possessions and goods, and parted them to all men, as every man had need. (Acts 2:44-45.)

And the multitude of them that believed were of one heart and of one soul: neither said any of them that ought of the things which he possessed was his own; but they had all things common. . . .

Neither was there any among them that lacked. . . . (Acts 4:32, 34.)

You know, King Benjamin, in speaking of those who would not assist the poor, would not succor the needy, said,

... O man, whosoever doeth this the same hath great cause to repent; and except he repenteth of that which he hath done he perisheth forever, and hath no interest in the kingdom of God. (Mosiah 4:18.)

And Amulek, speaking on the same subject, said:

"... behold, your prayer is vain, and availeth you nothing, and ye are as hypocrites who do deny the faith," (Alma 34:28) when we do not take care of the poor and the needy.

And in the opening of this dispensation, the Lord said unto us through his Prophet, Joseph Smith:

Behold, I say unto you, that ye must visit the poor and the needy and administer to their relief, . . . (D & C 44:6.)

And remember in all things the poor and the needy, the sick and the afflicted, for he that doeth not these things, the same is not my disciple. (D & C 52:40.)

I know of no more eloquent characterization of the welfare program than that made by President McKay on October 2, 1936, after we had had six months' experience in this work:

"I do not know of any activity," the President said, "with which we have been associated which promises more fruitful results in temporal and spiritual achievement than this Church security [welfare] program. . . . It is going to stand out in Church history as significant. . . . Brethren, I congratulate you with all my heart. You are not doing it for yourselves, but for others and for the Lord, by providing, and contributing to the progress and success of the Church.

"The development of our spiritual nature should concern us most. Spirituality is the highest acquisition of the soul, the divine in man; 'the supreme, crowning gift that makes him king of all created things.' It is the consciousness of victory over self and of communion with the infinite. It is spirituality alone which really gives one of the best in life.

"Throughout this conference frequent reference has been made, and appropriately so, to the plan inaugurated by the General Authorities of the Church for the relief of those who are unemployed. It is at present one of our greatest, and one of the most important concerns of the Church. During the few minutes allotted to me I desire to call attention to the spiritual value of this important and far-reaching undertaking.

"In the 29th Section of the Doctrine and Covenants, we are told that all things unto the Lord are spiritual, 'and not at any time have I given unto you a law which was temporal; neither any man, nor the children of men; neither Adam, your father, whom I created.

"Behold, I gave unto him that he should be an agent unto himself; and I gave unto him commandment, but no temporal commandment gave I unto him, for my commandments are spiritual; they are not natural nor temporal, neither carnal or sensual.' (D & C 29:34-35.)

"It is something to supply clothing to the scantily clad, to furnish ample food to those whose table is thinly spread, to give activity to those who are fighting desperately the despair that comes from enforced idleness, but after all is said and done, the greatest blessings that will accrue from the Church security [welfare] plan are spiritual. Outwardly, every act seems to be directed toward the physical: re-making of dresses and suits of clothes, canning fruits and vegetables, storing foodstuffs, choosing of fertile fields for settlement—all seem strictly temporal, but permeating all these acts, inspiring and sanctifying them, is the element of spirituality."

That is the declaration of our beloved President to us, and it has been the inspiration not alone for the general Church welfare committee through all these years, but I am sure also the inspiration for you, my brethren and sisters, who have made this great accomplishment possible.

Historically important as is the past, our attention must now be riveted upon the present and the future while we are still taking care of our daily tasks.

It is of prime importance, of course, that we should have acquired the various projects that we have throughout the Church, but it is my humble judgment today that it would be better for us never to have acquired a welfare project than to fail to take care of it now that we have it. The Lord will not hold us blameless, those of us who lead in the wards and the stakes of the Church, if we take of the funds of the people, those sacred trust funds, and purchase projects and then do not utilize those projects as the Lord would have us. So I say today that the severest test is here confronting us now.

Now we have never judged the success of our welfare projects by their earning power, by any profit which might accrue therefrom, nor have we judged them as they might function in time of plenty, where there is no unemployment, where we have been required to draw upon the busy people of the Church for the greatest contribution for their maintenance. We should never forget the fact that these projects reach the peak of their importance when they produce in time of need that which is necessary to meet the emergency, and which at the same time will furnish to the greatest number of men and women in periods of unemployment the employment by which they can gain that which they need for the sustenance of themselves and their families.

I say to you today, this welfare plan has become a great insurance, not only to the people of the Church but also to our neighbors and friends in the world. And you might ask me, of what benefit is this program to the world and particularly the communities in which we live. I say to you, it is a benefit to them because we are prepared and will continue to be prepared to take care of our own and thus relieve the public load and to give that which the public has to those who have not been blessed by the inspiration and direction of the prophet of God who leads the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in these days.

I want to say a word in conclusion about our tax situation. Some people both within and without the Church seem to worry about some welfare projects upon which no state tax has been levied. Let me say to you humbly, my brethren and sisters, and to the world, that we pay in very deed a hundred percent of the production of these farm projects of ours to the same identical cause to which much of our taxes are dedicated. The gross production of our welfare projects goes to relieve a tax burden rather than the small fraction which would be charged us were we limited alone to the tax that might be levied upon it if it were not tax-exempt by law. I am sure that the people in the Church and out of the Church should have no worry about our not meeting our civic responsibilities. I am sure that we will always be found doing more than our share in the communities in which we live throughout the world. Think of it, with the great number of welfare projects we have now, scattered as they are throughout the United States and Canada, we can be assured that no particular climatic condition or no particular disaster could affect us all, and that we are in the position where when one community is hurt we can draw from the other communities and the other projects of the Church to assist them. With every new project we have added insurance for our future welfare and protection.

I hope and pray that we may always be responsive in the future as we have been in the past to the great leadership of President McKay and to that inspiration and direction which will come to him as he continues to preside over us in the Church and kingdom of God, and this I pray humbly, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Elder Henry D. Moyle of the Council of the Twelve has just addressed us. We shall now hear from Elder Alma Sonne, Assistant to the Twelve.

ELDER ALMA SONNE

MY BRETHREN AND SISTERS: I want to say that I endorse with all my heart the remarks which have been made this afternoon by Elder Stapley, President Smith, and Elder Moyle, and I join with them in expressing my love and admiration for President David O. McKay, who has given this Church fifty years of unselfish service. I remember him for almost that number of years. During all of that time he has traveled through the nations of the earth representing this Church, explaining the gospel principles, and bearing his testimony to the divinity of this great work.

I had a friend once who was educated along literary lines. He told me one day that the finest sentence in all literature is in the Bible. When I asked him to repeat it he said, "God said, Let there be light: and there was light." (Gen. 1:3.) I suppose from the standpoint of beauty and majesty that sentence has no parallel, and yet I thought of another sentence, a sentence of only three words, spoken by the angel on the morning of the resurrection. The angel said, "He is risen." (Mark 16:6.) I believe that was the most important announcement ever made to the world.

I rejoice in the stability of this Church, in the soundness of its doctrines, and I am very happy that all of those doctrines are in agreement with the Holy Bible.

I read a book the other night which suggested that the stories of the resurrection, and the stories of the miracles performed by Jesus originated during a period of myth making. I confess that I am somewhat annoyed when a supposed leader of a Christian church will make a statement like that. Strip the Christian religion of the doctrine of the resurrection, and you lose its motivating power, as was stated so well by President McKay the other day. There is no doctrine which received more attention of Christ's twelve apostles, whom he sent into the world, than the resurrection. To deny it is to be ruled entirely by skepticism and unbelief. Mankind needs to have a conviction concerning the resurrection of the Lord Jesus.

There are those who have relied entirely on their finite understanding and their human vision which, to say the least, is darkened "by the shadows of earth." The human soul needs an anchorage. Man cannot live by bread alone. Mankind needs a vindication against the tyranny of death and against the ravages of time and decay. Jesus Christ and the prophets have supplied that vindication. The Savior supplied it when, in the throes of agony and death, he said to the felon on the cross: "To day shalt thou be with me in paradise"; (Luke 23:43) also, when he appeared to Mary in the garden, when someone said, "Woman, why weepest thou?" She said unto him, "Because they have taken away my Lord and I know not where they have laid him."

Jesus said unto her, "Woman, why weepest thou? whom seekest thou?" (John 20:15.) She supposed him to be the gardener, and said unto him, "Sir, if thou have borne him hence, tell me where thou hast laid him, and I will take him away." Jesus said unto her, "Mary." She turned herself and said unto him, "Rabboni, which is to say, Master." (See John 20:13-16.)

In all the writings, either ancient or modern, there is nothing more beautiful, more touching, and more reassuring than these words quoted by John. Jesus again supplied that vindication when he faced the apostles in an upper room and when he talked and ate with them: "A spirit hath not flesh and bones, as ye see me have," (Luke 24:39) said the Master. Again he supplied it when he restored the wavering faith of Thomas Didymus: "Reach hither thy finger, and behold my hands; and reach hither thy hand and thrust it into my side: and be not faithless, but believing." (John 20:27.) That circumstance led up to the last Beatitude, probably the mightiest of them all: "Because thou hast seen me, thou hast believed: blessed are they that have not seen, and yet have believed." (John 20:29.)

That doctrine is the very foundation of the restored gospel of Jesus Christ. Jesus again supplied it when he appeared to Saul of Tarsus on the way to Damascus when he asked the question: "Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me?" (Acts 9:4.)

And last, but not least, he gave to the modern world a vindication and an irrefutable witness when he appeared to Joseph Smith, the Prophet, in a grove of trees in New York, where God spoke these words:

"This is My Beloved Son. Hear Him!" (P. of G. P., Joseph Smith 2:17.)

The strongest fortification you and I can have against the uncertainties of life is the testimony which we have received from our Father in heaven concerning the resurrection. May we cherish it, and may we keep it strong; and may we always be valiant for the truth, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Elder Alma Sonne, Assistant to the Twelve, has just concluded speaking. The congregation will now sing, "We Thank Thee, O God, For a Prophet," conducted by Richard Condie. Following the singing, Elder Bruce R. McConkie will address us.

The Singing Mothers Chorus and the congregation joined in singing the hymn, "We Thank Thee, O God, for a Prophet," Richard P. Condie conducting.

President David O. McKay:

Elder Bruce R. McConkie of the First Council of the Seventy will now speak to us. Elder McConkie will be followed by Bishop Carl W. Buehner.

ELDER BRUCE R. McCONKIE

Of the First Council of the Seventy

WE BELIEVE in the law of justification. By virtue of this law, if a man walks, acts, and lives in this life in such a manner that his conduct is justified by the Spirit, he eventually will attain an inheritance in the celestial world.

On the day the Church was organized, April 6, 1830, the Prophet, writing by way of prophecy and revelation, summarized the basic doctrines of the Church. Among other things he wrote this:

And we know that justification through the grace of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ is just and true. (D & C 20:30.)

In the summary of the gospel law given in the days of Father Adam, we find this sentence:

For by the water ye keep the commandment; by the Spirit ye are justified, and by the blood ye are sanctified. (Moses 6:60.)

In the early 1830's, when the Lord was talking to the Prophet about what is called the new and everlasting covenant—that is, about the fulness of the gospel—he revealed this further truth relative to this great law of justification, and I think these following words are a perfect one sentence summary of the whole law of the whole gospel. The Lord said:

... All covenants, contracts, bonds, obligations, oaths, vows, performances, connections, associations, or expectations, that are not made and entered into and sealed by the Holy Spirit of promise, of him who is anointed, both as well for time and for all eternity, and that too most holy, by revelation and commandment through the medium of mine anointed, whom I have appointed on the earth to hold this power ... are of no efficacy, virtue, or force in and after the resurrection from the dead. (D & C 132:7.)

One more expression in the revelations has bearing on this. The Lord said:

... the Holy Spirit of promise, which the Father sheds forth upon all those who are just and true. (D & C 76:53.)

Now, to justify is to seal, or to ratify, or to approve; and it is very evident from these revelations that every act that we do, if it is to have binding and sealing virtue in eternity, must be justified by the Spirit. In other words, it must be ratified by the Holy Ghost; or in other words, it must be sealed by the Holy Spirit of Promise.

All of us know that we can deceive men. We can deceive our bishops or the other Church agents, unless at the moment their minds are lighted by the spirit of revelation; but we cannot deceive the Lord. We cannot get from him an unearned blessing. There will be an eventual day when all men will get exactly and precisely what they have merited and earned, neither adding to nor subtracting from. You cannot with success lie to the Holy Ghost.

Now let us take a simple illustration. If an individual is to gain an inheritance in the celestial world, he has to enter in at the gate of baptism, that ordinance being performed under the hands of a legal administrator. If he comes forward prepared by worthiness, that is, if he is just and true, and gains baptism under the hands of a legal administrator, he is justified by the Spirit in the act which has been performed; that is, it is ratified by the Holy Ghost, or it is sealed by the Holy Spirit of Promise. As a result it is of full force and validity in this life and in the life to come.

If an individual thereafter turns from righteousness and goes off and wallows in the mire of iniquity, then the seal is removed, and so we have this principle which keeps the unworthy from gaining unearned blessings. The Lord has placed a bar which stops the progress of the unrighteous; he has placed a requirement which we must meet. We must gain the approval and receive the sanctifying power of the Holy Ghost if eventually and in eternity we are to reap the blessings that we hope to reap.

The same thing that is true of baptism is true of marriage. If a couple comes forward worthily, a couple who is just and true, and they enter into that ordinance under the hands of a legal administrator, a seal of approval is recorded in heaven. Then assuming they do not thereafter break that seal, assuming they keep the covenant and press forward in steadfastness and in righteousness, they go on in the next world as husband and wife; and in and after the resurrection, that ordinance performed in such a binding manner here has full force, efficacy, and validity.

I think perhaps this doctrine, as almost all other doctrines that we teach in the Church, leads us back to the same central conclusion, which is that it is obligatory upon us to keep the commandments of God if we ever expect to inherit the blessings that he has promised the Saints. We should remind ourselves again and again of these words which he has spoken:

... he who doeth the works of righteousness shall receive his reward, even peace in this world, and eternal life in the world to come. (D & C 59:23.)

In the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

BISHOP CARL W. BUEHNER

Second Counselor in the Presiding Bishopric

IT IS TRULY a spiritual feast to attend one of these great conferences. There has been a theme running through these talks that has said to me that we are a great Church of action, and the more action the greater the Church. I am sure we believe in being doers of the word and not hearers only.

I constantly marvel at some of the stories I hear of the faith of the young people in the Church, and I have been inspired by them. I heard a story of a student of psychology who was given an assignment to ask a series of questions of some of our very young people as part of his assignment at the university. Among the questions that he asked was: "Who are the three greatest men in the world?"

The first youngster he asked the question of was seven years of age, and the seven-year-old boy said: "George Washington, Abraham Lincoln, and Brigham Young." And I thought that was a pretty good answer for a seven-year-old boy. The student went two houses down the street and asked the same question of a five-year-old boy: "Who are the three greatest men in the world?" And the five-year-old boy said: "Our Heavenly Father, Jesus, and President McKay." If you could add fifty years to the age of the five-year-old child, I doubt he could give a better answer fifty years later than he did when he was interviewed at five years of age. That was a remarkable answer for a five-year-old boy, and it denotes the teaching that is going on in the homes of some of our young people.

Then this same man asked another question of a lad just turning three years of age—not much more than learning to talk. He said to this boy three,

President David O. McKay:

Elder Bruce R. McConkie of the First Council of Seventy has just concluded speaking. We shall now hear from Bishop Carl W. Buehner of the Presiding Bishopric. Bishop Buehner will be followed by Elder Marion G. Romney, our concluding speaker.

"Who is God?" And the youngster, after a second, said, "Sunday School." He identified the word God with Sunday School. This man said: "I asked the same question of a girl much older one day: 'Who is God?' and she said, 'That's a naughty word. We do not say that in our home.'"

These statements are full of meaning to me, and I appreciate them. Good training by the parents of their children, even though they are very young, usually stays with them all their life. Think of these same youngsters a little later when they hold the Aaronic Priesthood. I have shaken hands with hundreds of young men, and girls of corresponding ages, who are attending this great conference because of having a perfect record in attending all of their meetings during the past year.

Last evening Elder LeGrand Richards and I had the honor of being entertained by a group from the West Arcadia Ward of the Pasadena Stake. Some forty-one youngsters have been brought here by their bishopric because they are one hundred percenters in the Church, and I never saw such a fine group and felt such a marvelous spirit as I did among these young people. I sat next to a girl who has been a 100 percenter, who has only been a member of the Church for three weeks, and sitting on the same row was another girl twenty years of age who had been a hundred percenter for a whole year. Her parents have been objecting to her becoming a member of the Church. She said, "I am just waiting to be twenty-one years of age so that I can be baptized a member of the Church. My parents, not understanding what this means to me, have been objecting to this." In spite of the fact that this girl is not a member, her record has still been 100 percent perfect, and she has paid to the Church one-tenth of all she has earned during the past year. I could not help remarking to her, "Because of your great faith, I would not be surprised if you bring your father and mother into the Church when you are admitted."

It is a great blessing and a wonderful privilege to be associated with these young people—to feel their marvelous spirit. Just a few days ago a bishop came into our office, and said, "I must tell you about one of my Aaronic Priesthood boys. He has had a perfect record ever since he has been in the Aaronic Priesthood. On Monday morning he was stricken with polio. He was taken to the hospital. As soon as he arrived at the hospital and his doctor came to attend him, he said to his doctor: 'Doctor, I have to be out of here next Saturday night, even if I go on crutches. I am a hundred percent in my Church activities, and I have to be in my meetings next Sunday,' and his doctor said: 'Son, I am afraid you are going to be here for months. You will never be home next Sunday to attend your meetings.' The young man said, 'Well, I have faith that the Lord will let me get back so that I will not break my record.' He was administered to during the week. On Saturday night that boy left the hospital on crutches. On Sunday he attended his meetings, and three days later threw away his crutches."

I like the faith of these young men. I told the brethren in our temple meeting last Thursday of two others that impressed me. I was attending a conference in Idaho a year ago on a cold winter's night, with deep snow on the ground—it was seven or eight below zero. At the close of our priesthood leadership meeting, a man brought a deacon up to shake hands with me. He said, "This young man tonight walked five and a half miles through the deep snow, with the stinging wind blowing in his face to catch a ride to come sixty-five miles farther to be in the priesthood leadership meeting because you wanted the presidents of the Aaronic Priesthood in this meeting."

Well, I'll tell you, it is a great honor to shake hands with a boy who magnifies his priesthood as did this young man.

The following Sunday I could not attend my conference because of roads that were all but impassable. Early Sunday morning I was digging a little pathway through the deep snow that had fallen during the night, and down the street came another youngster without a hat on, whistling a little, yet very cheerful. As he came by, I said, "Son, is it time to go to Church?" and he said, "Yes, sir. It will be priesthood meeting in fifteen minutes, and you'd better be there."

Well, you know, if every man in our ward had had an invitation to come to priesthood meeting as I had that Sunday morning, we would have had one hundred percent of our men in attendance. As long as we have young men exercising such great faith and appreciative of the power of the priesthood as have these young men, we are always going to have leadership in this great Church.

Just one more—I heard this just a few days ago, and this is for you men in the service. We are proud of you. I heard of a young man who, with members of his company, attended a beer party. As the party progressed, the other members noticed that this young man was not indulging. They used every method they could to try to get this young man to drink beer and to smoke cigarets along with the rest of them, and the young man said, "No, I have been taught differently. I am not interested. I am just here to see what is going on, but not to take part."

Finally, they decided they were going to test him a little more, and the different men of the company began a collection until they had collected $17.00. Then they said to this young fellow, "If you will take a drink of beer or if you will smoke a cigaret, here is $17.00" and the young man said, "No, sir. No money can buy that which I have been taught not to do."

Standing nearby, but unobserved, was someone who heard this young man being tempted. It was the captain of his company. The following morning, the captain called this young man in for an interview, and said to the boy, "I saw and heard what you did last night when you were out with other men of your company. I admire you for your stand. Our company and this army needs men like you. You can have any job you wish in this company."

Well, young servicemen, you are a great asset to the Church when you live your lives in harmony with its teachings. Some of you have been excellent missionaries. We have heard of a number who have been converted to the Church through your devotion and faithfulness. I say, "God bless you and the young men of the Church and all of us." Let us make this a great Church of action.

I have often said, "Life in this Church means a job in this Church." May we all secure a job and be active and do all we can to help build up God's kingdom, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Bishop Carl W. Buehner of the Presiding Bishopric has just spoken to us. Elder Marion G. Romney of the Council of the Twelve will be our concluding speaker.

ELDER MARION G. ROMNEY

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

WITH YOU, my brethren and sisters, I have enjoyed this day very much, and in harmony with Elder Sonne there echoes in my heart feelings of approval of all that has been said and done. I join with the other brethren in congratulating the Church on having our great President, after fifty years of wonderful service, as our leader. I have loved him for a long time. I met him first in California when as a lad I was a Mormon refugee from Mexico. I saw him later in far away Australia. More recently I had the great honor to be the first member of the Council of the Twelve selected by him. I greatly honor him.

I think I can give you my message for this conference so that you can get it fully if you will do a little reading. Because of the great interest evidenced by the public in, and some resulting confusion from, certain so-called supernatural manifestations, such as telecast healings, hypnotic performances, and the doctrine of reincarnation, I thought it might be appropriate for me to take as my text the seventh Article of Faith, which reads: "We believe in the gift of tongues, prophecy, revelation, visions, healing, interpretation of tongues, etc."

You can get the message I would like to give you in more detail than I will have time to give it here if you will read the forty-sixth section of the Doctrine and Covenants and an editorial written by the Prophet Joseph Smith in 1842, titled "Try the Spirits," which you will find in Volume IV, History of the Church, page 571. It is also printed in the Teachings of the Prophet Joseph Smith, compiled by our beloved President of the Council of the Twelve, beginning on page 202.

I. Gifts of the Spirit a Characteristic of the Church of Christ

The gifts named in the seventh Article of Faith, quoted above, are gifts of the Holy Ghost. The enjoyment of them has always been a distinctive characteristic of the Church of Jesus Christ. As a matter of fact, without the gift of revelation, which is one of the gifts of the Holy Ghost, there could be no Church of Jesus Christ. This is apparent from the obvious fact that in order for his Church to exist, there must be a society of people who individually have testimonies that Jesus is the Christ. According to Paul, such testimonies are revealed only by the Holy Ghost, for said he, "... no man can [know] say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost." (See I Cor. 12:3.) In the 46th section of the Doctrine and Covenants, the Lord specifically lists such knowledge as one of the gifts of the Holy Ghost, as follows: "To some it is given by the Holy Ghost to know that Jesus Christ is the Son of God, . . ." (D & C 46:13.) Everyone who has a testimony of Jesus has received it by revelation from the Holy Ghost. The Holy Ghost is a revelator, and everyone who receives him receives revelation.

Wherever and whenever revelation is operative, manifestations of other gifts of the Holy Ghost are prevalent. This has been so in all dispensations. It began with Father Adam who, having obeyed, repented and called upon God in the name of the Son, "... was caught away by the Spirit of the Lord, and was carried down into the water, and was laid under the water, and was brought forth out of the water.

"And thus he was baptized, and the Spirit of God descended upon him, and thus he was born of the Spirit, . . ." (Moses 6:64-65.) And in that very day "the Holy Ghost fell upon" him, and he "began to prophesy." (Ibid., 5:9-10.)

The prophets from Adam to Malachi all enjoyed gifts of the Spirit. To Abraham was shown in vision the spirits of men as they were in the spirit world ere this earth rolled into being or ever "the morning stars sang together or the sons of God shouted for joy." (See Job 38:7.) In the days of Moses, Aaron's rod became a serpent, the waters of Egypt were turned to blood, for the Israelites a dry passage was provided through the Red Sea, and in the desert water burst from the solid rock to quench their thirst. In the days of the prophets, the widow's son was raised from the dead, and fire came down from heaven to consume Elijah's sacrifice in his contest with the priests of Baal. The leprous Naaman was instantly healed by following the instructions of Elisha.

Jesus exercised power over all things. He healed the sick, restored the lame, gave sight to the blind, cast out devils, and raised the dead. He turned water into wine, cursed the barren fig tree, stilled the storm, and walked upon the sea. He miraculously fed the four and the five thousand, and provided the tribute money.

Among the gifts of the spirit manifest in the Apostolic Church, Paul lists wisdom, knowledge, faith, healing, working of miracles, prophecy, discerning of spirits, diverse kinds of tongues, and the interpretation of tongues. The New Testament records numerous examples of the manifestation of these gifts.

Among the Jaredites and Nephites, the manifestations of these gifts were likewise prevalent. Mormon testified that they would not cease except for unbelief, "... so long as time shall last, or the earth shall stand, or there shall be one man upon the face thereof to be saved?" (Moroni 7:36.)

Unfortunately, however, and because of unbelief, they did cease, both in the old world and in the new. For more than fifteen centuries, so far as our records reveal, no mortal man enjoyed them. Then finally came that glorious event in 1820 when, by the appearance of the Father and the Son, this awful darkness was put to flight and the return of these gifts of the spirit heralded.

The Prophet Joseph translated the Book of Mormon by the gift of the Holy Ghost. The directions to him to organize the Church came in like manner. Within a year from the organization of the Church, the Lord set forth in a revelation the gifts which were to be enjoyed in the restored Church. He named all those listed by Paul, to which were added the following:

To some it is given by the Holy Ghost to know that Jesus Christ is the Son of God, and that he was crucified for the sins of the world.

To others it is given to believe on their words, that they also might have eternal life if they continue faithful.

And again, to some it is given by the Holy Ghost to know the differences of administration, . . .

And . . . to some to know the diversities of operations, whether they be of God, . . . (D & C 46:13-16.)

In 1839 the Prophet Joseph told Mr. Van Buren, then President of the United States, that possession of "the gift of the Holy Ghost" was the distinguishing difference between the restored Church and other religions of the day.

I know that the gifts of the Holy Spirit are in the Church today. Every faithful Latter-day Saint knows that they are. As Sister Romney and I left this building at the close of one of the conference meetings yesterday, a faithful sister was waiting at the door for us. She called our attention to an administration received by her some three years ago at a stake conference in California. She, with cancer, and her family, all fasting, sought for her a blessing. She reported yesterday that she was well. No evidence of her former affliction remains. Presently she is a stake missionary.

Yes, all the gifts of the Holy Spirit are in the Church today.

II. Not All Supernatural Manifestations Are Gifts of the Spirit.

By the statement in the revelation on spiritual gifts, "... it is given by the Holy Ghost to some to know the diversities of operations, whether they be of God, ... and to others the discerning of spirits," it appears that there are some apparently supernatural manifestations which are not worked by the power of the Holy Ghost. The truth is there are many which are not. The world today is full of counterfeits. It has always been so. Away back in the days of Moses, when Aaron's rod became a serpent, then Pharaoh's wise men, sorcerers and magicians "... cast down every man his rod, and they became serpents: ..." (Ex. 7:11-12.) Isaiah warned against seeking "... unto them that have familiar spirits, and unto wizards that peep, and that mutter: ..." (Isa. 8:19.)

Jesus, in his great Sermon on the Mount, plainly stated that:

Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; ...

Many will say to me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name? and in thy name have cast out devils? and in thy name done many wonderful works?

And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you: depart from me, ye that work iniquity. (Matt. 7:21-23.)

Before the end of 1830, the very year in which the restored Church was organized, some of the leading brethren were deceived as to the source of certain spiritual manifestations. "To our great grief ..." wrote the Prophet Joseph, "Satan had been lying in wait to deceive, and seeking whom he might devour. Brother Hiram Page had in his possession a certain stone, by which he had obtained certain 'revelations' concerning the upbuilding of Zion, the order of the Church, etc., all of which were entirely at variance with the order of God's house, as laid down in the New Testament, as well as in our late revelations." (History of the Church, Vol. I, pp. 109-110.) In a revelation given in answer to the Prophet's prayer concerning the matter, the Lord said to Oliver Cowdrey:

... thou shalt take thy brother, Hiram Page, between him and thee alone, and tell him that those things which he hath written from that stone are not of me, and that Satan deceiveth him; (D & C 28:11.)

The Saints were cautioned by the Lord to walk uprightly before him, doing all things with prayer and thanksgiving, that they might "... not be seduced by evil spirits, or doctrines of devils, or the commandments of men; ..." (Ibid., 46:7.)

These citations not only sustain the proposition that there are counterfeits to the gifts of the spirit, but they also suggest the origin of the counterfeits. However, we are not required to rely alone upon their implications, plain as they are, for the Lord states specifically that some of the counterfeits "... are of men, and others of devils." (Ibid., 46:7.)

Some of these counterfeits are crude and easily detected, but others closely simulate true manifestations of the spirit. Consequently, people are confused and deceived by them. Without a key, one cannot distinguish between the genuine and the counterfeit. The Egyptians could not tell the difference between the power through which Moses and Aaron worked and that by which the magicians worked. On the day of Pentecost, the non-believers did not recognize that the apostles were speaking in tongues by the power of the spirit; on the contrary, they concluded that they were "drunken with new wine." The Savior himself said,

... there shall also arise false Christs, and false prophets, and shall show great signs and wonders, insomuch, that, if possible, they shall deceive the very elect, who are the elect according to the covenant. (Joseph Smith 1:22.)

Now, those "who are the elect according to the covenant" are members of the Church, so we ourselves are on notice to beware.

III. Distinguishing Between the Manifestations of the Spirit and the Counterfeits.

This brings us to our most important consideration. Believing as we do in all the gifts named in the 46th section of the Doctrine and Covenants, and knowing that there are counterfeits to them, how are we to distinguish between the true and the false, the genuine and the counterfeit?

The Apostle John gave to the saints in his day the following test:

Beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they are of God: because many false prophets are gone out into the world.

Hereby know ye the Spirit of God: Every spirit that confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is of God:

And every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is not of God: . . . (1 John 4:1-3.)

This was a good test for them. It will not, however, do for us. The reason is given by the Prophet Joseph as follows:

Did not the Apostle speak the truth? Certainly he did, but he spoke to a people who were under the penalty of death, the moment they embraced Christianity; and no one without a knowledge of the fact would confess it, and expose themselves to death. (History of the Church, Vol. IV, p. 580.)

The Prophet Joseph having recited some of the workings of evil spirits in his day, said:

A man must have the discerning of spirits before he can drag into daylight this hellish influence and unfold it unto the world in all its soul-destroying, diabolical, and horrid colors; for nothing is a greater injury to the children of men than to be under the influence of a false spirit when they think they have the spirit of God. Thousands have felt the influence of its terrible power and baneful effects. Long pilgrimages have been undertaken, penances endured, and pain, misery and ruin have followed in their train; nations have been convulsed, kingdoms overthrown, provinces laid waste, and blood, carnage and desolation are habiliments in which it has been clothed. (History of the Church, Vol. IV, p. 573.)

Without attempting an exhaustive discussion of this question, I shall take the liberty to suggest three simple tests which, if applied, will prove of great value in making the distinction.

First, determine whether the alleged supernatural manifestation is edifying. If it is not, then it is not of God because spiritual gifts are given for the edification of God's people.

Paul, writing to the Corinthian saints concerning spiritual gifts, instructed them to "let all things be done unto edifying." And of those who would speak in tongues he said, "If there be no interpreter, let him keep silence in the church; . . ." And as to prophecy he added, ". . . the spirits of the prophets are subject to the prophets.

"For God is not the author of confusion, but of peace. . . ." (1 Cor. 14:26-33.) He compared the speaking in tongues without a clear interpretation thereof to a trumpet giving forth an uncertain sound, at which no one would know whether to prepare for the battle. "There are," he wrote, . . . So many kinds of voices in the world, . . .

Therefore, if I know not the meaning of the voice, I shall be unto him that speaketh a barbarian, and he that speaketh shall be a barbarian unto me. (1 Cor. 14:8-11.)

That the saints of the infant Church in this dispensation be not deceived, the Lord pleaded with them to keep in mind that the purpose of spiritual gifts was to benefit those who loved him and kept his commandments. They were not to be given as signs to those who would consume them upon their lusts.

Second—this pertains particularly to purported supernatural healings—find out whether the purported healer follows the divinely established procedure, that is, does he do as Jesus did when he laid his hands upon the sick and healed them (See Mark 6:5) and as his apostles did when, at his direction, they "went out, and preached that men should repent.

"And . . . cast out many devils, and anointed with oil many that were sick, and healed them." (Ibid., 6:12-13.) The pattern which prevailed in the Apostolic Church, and which has been prescribed anew by revelation in this day (D & C 42:43-44), is set out by James as follows:

Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord:

And the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up; and if he have committed sins, they shall be forgiven him. (James 5:14-15.)

Third, find out whether the worker of the purported miracle has himself received the gift of the Holy Ghost through the prescribed ordinances. If he has not, then his works, whatever they may be, are not the manifestations of the Holy Spirit. This is a key test because, as we have already pointed out, the gifts of the spirit are given by the power of the Holy Ghost. Without the gift of the Holy Ghost, the manifestations of his gifts may not be enjoyed. The Prophet Joseph Smith states this foundation doctrine as follows:

We believe in the gift of the Holy Ghost being enjoyed now, as much as it was in the Apostles' day; we believe that it [the gift of the Holy Ghost] is necessary to make and to organize the priesthood, that no man can be called to fill any office in the ministry without it; we also believe in prophecy, in tongues, in visions, and in revelations, in gifts, and in healings; and that these things cannot be enjoyed without the gift of the Holy Ghost. (History of the Church, Vol. V, p. 27.)

Thus one who has never received the gift of the Holy Ghost cannot possibly work miracles by his power.

Now, we know that there is but one way to obtain the gift of the Holy Ghost. That way is through the prescribed ordinances of baptism by immersion for the remission of sins and the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost. The Apostle Paul's procedure emphasizes the indispensability of these ordinances. Coming to ... Ephesus: and finding certain disciples, He said unto them, Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed? And they said unto him, We have not so much as heard whether there be any Holy Ghost.

And he said unto them, Unto what then were ye baptized? And they said, Unto John's baptism.

Then said Paul, John verily baptized with the baptism of repentance, saying unto the people, that they should believe on him which should come after him, that is, on Christ Jesus.

When they heard this, they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus.

And when Paul had laid his hands upon them, the Holy Ghost came on them; and they spake with tongues, and prophesied. (Acts 19:2-6.)

These gifts of the spirit they could not possibly have exercised until after they had received the gift of the Holy Ghost through compliance with the proper ordinances. Such has been the procedure for receiving the gift of the Holy Ghost from the days of Father Adam. We quoted at the beginning of these remarks the procedure by which he received it. That procedure was precisely the same as that followed by Paul in bestowing it. Such will always be the procedure, for God established it. Said the Prophet Joseph,

Baptism is a holy ordinance preparatory to the reception of the Holy Ghost; it is the channel and key by which the Holy Ghost will be administered.

The gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands, cannot be received through the medium of any other principle than the principle of righteousness, for if the proposals are not complied with it is of no use, but withdraws. (History of the Church, Vol. III, p. 379.)

Now, righteous men, bearing the holy priesthood of the living God and endowed with the gift of the Holy Ghost, who are magnifying their callings—and such are the only men upon the earth with the right to receive and exercise the gifts of the spirit—will do so circumspectly and in all humility. They will not spectacularly advertise their divine power nor boast about it. Neither will they display it for money. Of this you may be sure.

IV. Tests for Special Claims and Doctrines

Now, the Prophet gave other tests applicable to special claims and doctrines, of which the following two are typical.

(1) He made it clear that there is never more than one man on the earth at a time authorized to receive revelations for the Church. This principle answered the claims of the purported peepstone revelations.

(2) Of an interview with a Mr. Matthias, the Prophet wrote:

He said that he possessed the spirit of his fathers, that he was a literal descendant of Matthias, the Apostle, who was chosen in the place of Judas that fell; that his spirit was resurrected in him; and that this was the way or scheme of eternal life—this transmigration of soul or spirit from father to son.

I told him that his doctrine was of the devil. (History of the Church, Vol. II, p. 307.)

Thus removing all doubt with respect to the purported doctrine of "transmigration of souls or spirits," currently referred to as reincarnation.

In conclusion, I again call attention to the statement of the Prophet Joseph Smith already quoted, that "A man must have the discerning of spirits before he can drag into daylight this hellish influence and unfold it unto the world in all its soul-destroying, diabolical, and horrid colors;" for after all, the things of God can be understood only by the spirit of God. (See I Cor. 2:11.) The gift of "discernment of spirits" is the sure solution to this knotty problem. Seek after this gift, brethren and sisters, and after its kindred gifts—knowledge, wisdom, and "to know the diversities of operations whether they be of God,"—and not after sensational and miraculous signs and wonders. Remember that ... unto the bishop of the church, and unto such as God shall appoint and ordain to watch over the church and to be elders unto the church, are to have it given unto them to discern all those gifts lest there shall be any among you professing and yet be not of God.

And it shall come to pass that he that aseth in Spirit shall receive in Spirit;

That unto some it may be given to have all those gifts, that there may be a head, in order that every member may be profited thereby. (D & C 46:27-29.)

Finally:

Be virtuous and pure; be men of integrity and truth; keep the commandments of God; and then you will be able more perfectly to understand the difference between right and wrong—between the things [gifts] of God and the things of men; and your path will be like that of the just, which shineth brighter and brighter unto the perfect day. (History of the Church, Vol. V, p. 31.)

God grant that it may be so, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Elder Marion G. Romney of the Council of the Twelve has just spoken to us. Tonight, at 7:00 o'clock, the General Meeting of the Priesthood of the Church will be held in the Salt Lake Tabernacle. Only those holding the Priesthood are invited to be present. Persons not holding the Priesthood will kindly refrain from attempting to enter the building. The Priesthood Session will not be broadcast. However, in addition to the overflow meetings in the Assembly Hall and in Barratt Hall, the proceedings of this Priesthood Meeting will be relayed by closed circuit to members of the Priesthood assembled in 65 other Church buildings in Utah, California, Idaho, Oregon, Nevada, Colorado, Washington, Arizona, Wyoming, and Hawaii.

The session at ten o'clock Sunday morning will be broadcast over station KSL and by arrangement through KSL over fourteen radio stations in Utah, Idaho, Colorado, Nevada, Arizona, and Oregon. These services will also be televised over KSL-TV, Channel 5, and by special arrangement over eighteen television stations in Idaho, Washington, California, Oregon, Arizona, Nevada, and Colorado. This will be the largest television coverage we have ever had.

The Church of the Air broadcast over the CBS network which will have been recorded in advance will be released by KSL radio station from 8:00 to 8:30 A.M., tomorrow. President Joseph Fielding Smith, president of the Quorum of the Twelve, will be the speaker.

The Tabernacle Choir broadcast will be from 9:30 to 10:00 A.M. Those desiring to attend the Tabernacle Choir broadcast must be in their seats at 9:15 A.M. It is requested that the audience during the broadcast refrain from making any disturbance. Large crowds will undoubtedly be waiting outside the closed doors and when opened there is usually a rush by those outside to get good seats. We plead with those thus standing to be courteous and considerate one to another. Avoid pushing, crowding, will you please. Courtesy is a great virtue. Let us show it one to another and especially to our visitors who are within the city's gates.

All the music to be used by the Tabernacle Choir in the Conference sessions tomorrow and the numbers to be sung by the Choir over the CBS broadcast tomorrow morning will be taken from the Choir's European concert repertoire.

The regular session of the Conference will begin at 10:00 o'clock tomorrow morning.

You who have been following this session over the television, as you who have been sitting here in the Tabernacle, will have observed that our Singing Mothers have filled all of the seats usually occupied by the Choir, and as I have counted, 35 others on each side of the Tabernacle occupy seats in the gallery. They move over to join in the inspirational singing.

I do not know what to say in appreciation of what these mothers are doing, what they do to furnish this music, to practice and to take time out of their busy lives to take the songs given by Sister Madsen, practice them and then come to a general practice so that they can sing as they have sung this day to us.

There is one of the most beautiful tributes in literature to Mother—it is most poetic, but I like it and I like to think of my mother when I say it. It is in "The Princess." The Prince is talking to his father, who had been speaking rather disparagingly about women, and the Prince adds:

"... and she of whom you speak,
My mother, looks as whole (now note this comparison) as some serene Creation minted in the golden mood
Of sovereign artist; not a thought, a touch,
But pure as lines of green that streak
the white
Of the first snowdrop's inner leaves."

Many in the audience undoubtedly have their mothers here. Thank you, and God bless you. And you, Sister Madsen, for your masterful leadership.

The Relief Society Singing Mothers will now favor us with, "I Know That My Redeemer Liveth." After the benediction by Elder C. Bryant Whiting, this Conference will be adjourned until this evening at 7:00 o'clock.

"I Know That My Redeemer Liveth."

Singing by the Relief Society Singing Mothers, "I Know That My Redeemer Liveth."

The benediction was offered by President C. Bryant Whiting of the St. Johns Stake.

Conference adjourned until 7:00 p.m.

GENERAL PRIESTHOOD MEETING

The General Priesthood meeting of the Church was held in the Tabernacle Saturday evening, April 7, 1956, at 7:00 p.m.

President David O. McKay presided and conducted the services.

The special music for this session was furnished by the Reno Latter-day Saints Male Chorus, with Elder Ladd R. Cropper, director and Elder Roy M. Darley as organist.

President David O. McKay:

This General Priesthood Session is the Fifth Session of the One Hundred

Twenty-Sixth Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. You will be interested to know that these services are being broadcast in the Assembly Hall, in the Barratt Hall, Salt Lake City, over a public address system. In addition the services are being relayed by closed circuit to members of the Priesthood assembled in 65 other Church buildings in Utah, Idaho, Wyoming, Nevada, Colorado, Washington, Oregon, California, Arizona, and Hawaii.

President Clark reminded me tonight, or expressed the thought, that probably this is the first time in the history of the Church that Priesthood services have gone across the ocean.

The singing during this session will be furnished by the Reno Latter-day Saints Male Chorus, with Elder Ladd R. Cropper, director, and Elder Roy M. Darley, organist. That is an event to have these young men coming from Reno, Nevada. We welcome them and appreciate their presence, and I know we shall be inspired by their singing.

We shall begin these services by the Reno Latter-day Saints Male Chorus singing, "Onward Christian Soldiers," conducted by Elder Cropper. Elder Ralph B. Lake, president of the Willamette Stake, will offer the opening prayer.

The Reno Latter-day Saints Male Chorus sang the hymn, "Onward Christian Soldiers."

ELDER MARK E. PETERSEN

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

IN HIS magnificent opening address, President McKay, you will recall, spoke of the great responsibility we have to our children, of the importance of parents properly rearing their children, and then, of course, of the responsibility of the Church in cooperating with the family in assisting the children to understand the reason for living a righteous life.

We are endeavoring to develop among the Latter-day Saints what Peter spoke of as a "royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people called out of darkness into his marvelous light." And yet, as we do so in this modern age, it seems that the very gates of hell at times seem open to invite our young people in. With alluring advertisements on radio, on TV, and in the newspapers and magazines, men of the world attempt to make evil appear to be good and desirable. They attempt to make temptation glitter like gold. In the face of it our children must make a great decision. They must understand so that they can intelligently make a choice between that which is right and that which is wrong.

The Reno Latter-day Saints Male Chorus sang the hymn, "I Need Thee Every Hour."

President David O. McKay:

For some time past members of the Council of the Twelve, through a special committee, have been working on a special project that we all feel sure will be of great value to the entire Church, and particularly to the young people of the Church.

Elder Mark E. Petersen of the Council of the Twelve will present that project to you now. We wish that you brethren listening in had television, but I am sure Elder Petersen will explain it so that you will be interested as well as the 8,000 or 10,000 members who are here in the Tabernacle.

We believe that as a general thing, if we train up a child in the way he should go, when he is old he will not depart from it. We believe that comes with the inspiration of our Father in Heaven. The Lord has said in revelation in these, the last days that he would bless us, his people, so that the gates of hell would have no power over us if we would but be obedient unto him. If we properly teach our children to do what is right, the allurements of the world need not have any great effect upon them. We need not have such great fears if we teach them properly and convert them and help them to obtain a testimony of the Gospel, because that testimony will be a fortification for them, a great defense against the temptations and the allurements of the world.

So, in our homes we endeavor to teach our young people properly. We have our Home Evenings. We sit down and talk with them and teach them objectively. We teach our children as we attend recreational events. We set them a proper example.

We do all we can to convert them to the Gospel. But as we do so, we must have help from the Church. We must have full cooperation from our brothers and sisters in the auxiliaries and the priesthood quorums so that in very deed, with the Church and the home working together, we may accomplish the great purpose we have in mind.

Saturday, April 7

Second Day

As President McKay explained, a Committee of the Twelve, under the direction of Elder Harold B. Lee, has been studying the problem of how to help you in your homes and your Church organizations better to give the young people of the Church an appreciation of the standards of the Church, that they may love them better, that they may uphold them and sustain them.

As we studied the matter over, and as we considered the allurements of the advertising, we felt that we could use advertising methods to good advantage in our program. By using the skill and the devices that are available through advertising and through the work of wonderful Latter-day Saint men in advertising, we hoped to be of some assistance in helping our young people, just at a glance at times, to catch a new view of the beauties of the standards of the Church.

So, as we talked it over as a Committee, we thought we would like to present to our young people a series of advertisements in an attractive way so that they could catch more of the spirit and the beauty of the standards of the Church, and have something to reinforce them in their resistance to the temptations of the world. As we talked about the possibilities, we realized that we would need professional assistance.

One day we invited Brother David W. Evans, who has a splendid advertising agency which operates in many parts of the United States, to come and sit in with us and discuss the matter. We told him about our idea, and asked if he would cooperate with his wonderful organization. He, like every other Latter-day Saint, responded wonderfully to the call and said that he would be glad to give us any time that he could, and give us the facilities of his organization in working out a campaign.

So as we talked further, and he told us about an artist he has working for him—Dale Kilburn—who did some beautiful work. He showed us some of the things Brother Kilburn had done, and the result was that Brother David W. Evans and members of his staff and Dale Kilburn cooperated in preparing for us the advertisements we hope to present to the Church.

It is our thought that we shall give an advertisement in poster form to every ward in the Church once every two months, so that the poster would stand in a good place in the meeting house for a two-month period. These beautiful posters—and they are beautiful—will need to be well displayed. Unless they are properly displayed they will lose much of their value, and we are asking, therefore, that a proper display be made in each one of the ward meeting houses. These posters may best be displayed in a glass covered case that might be placed upon the wall in the foyer of a meeting house.

We realize that you do not have such a case, but as we talked with Brother Lee about it, Brother Lee suggested that here would be an excellent priesthood project. The Church service committee of the elders' quorums in every ward has, in connection with its activities, the anti liquor-tobacco program. Brother Lee suggests that a project be given to each Church service committee of each elders' quorum to provide a case such as we speak of for each ward in the stake—a glass front, a wooden frame, a proper back to which may be attached these posters.

We believe this will be a very good priesthood quorum project under the direction of the Church service committee. If you will immediately begin on the construction of these cases and have them ready by the middle of May, then we will begin the presentation of these posters on the first of June, or very shortly thereafter. Keep in mind that the poster will stay up for two months, and then we will give you another one.

Before I describe the posters further, I should like to have the lights out, and we will show our pictures on the screen. For the sake of those in the building who cannot see, or those who are in other buildings, I will describe the pictures as well as I can.

Isn't that a beautiful poster? The entire approach is positive. We will not make any kind of a negative approach in connection with this program. Everything will be positive teaching. You will see here the first poster we have in mind. It is entitled, "Virtue Is Its Own Reward." There is an excellent picture of a young bride and her groom, who, having lived a beautiful, virtuous, clean life, now may go into marriage with all of the rewards that come from a pure, clean life.

You will notice that at the bottom of the poster we have the expression: "Be Honest With Yourself." That will become the theme of the entire series, and will appear on each of the posters.

The poster, as you see, carries a great message by itself, and we believe that as young people see the poster, just at a glance they will catch the idea, and they will be taught in a moment. But for those who will pause, we will have an addition to the poster, as will be seen now on the next picture. It will be a side-piece. At the top you will see the same bride and groom, the same expression, "Virtue Is Its Own Reward." At the very bottom you will notice that we have again, "Be Honest With Yourself." The message is this:

"Virtue is its own reward, and these are its rewards: peace of mind, the love of loved ones, a good name, a quiet conscience, the confidence of family and friends, the strength of personal purity, the trust of your children, the sense of purpose in life here, an assurance of everlasting life with those you love, and of peace and limitless progress hereafter. All this is yours for keeping the commandments. Be true to your friends, your family, your Father in Heaven. In other words, Be Honest With Yourself."

I was so thankful for what President McKay said yesterday about being loyal to ourselves, because this entire program will tie in with his suggestion. We will teach our children to be honest with themselves.

In the next picture you will see how the two will be displayed together—the main poster on the one side, and the additional piece on the other. That is the way it will appear in the display case we are asking the priesthood quo-runs to provide in each ward. This will come, as we say, once every two months, each time with a new theme.

As we talked about this still further, we decided it would be a wonderful thing not only to display this poster in the lobby or the foyer of a meeting house, but we thought it would be a wonderful thing to give to each young person in the ward from 12 to 20 this poster in miniature, with a beautiful message on the reverse side—something they could put in their pockets and carry home, something beautiful enough so that they could set it on their dresser, something that they would be glad to read over with their friends. So we decided that we would use the main picture of the bride and the groom with the large caption: "Virtue Is Its Own Reward," and then the theme at the bottom, "Be Honest With Yourself," as the face of this card, which will be approximately postcard size.

Then, as we show you in the next picture, on the opposite side will be a message: "Virtue is its own reward. There is more to marriage than music and moonlight. There is trust and sharing, and being loved and deserving to be. There is companionship through years of growing old together, and to each partner in an honest marriage there will come a time when nothing will be more important than personal purity, and it will not be just at some passing hour, but day after day, year after year, as long as you look at your loved ones, as long as you can feel in reality or in memory the small hand of a son or daughter as it closes around your finger. You, each of you, should take no less to marriage than personal purity. You have a right to expect it of the companion you choose. You have a sacred obligation to keep it and to offer it in return. The rewards of virtuous living are rich and enduring, but the price of sin runs high. The reward of virtue is a quiet conscience, the right to answer every question without reservation, the right to look every man squarely in the eye, and every boy and girl and woman also, without an accusing conscience. It is the right to pass on to your children and your children's children a clean record, a clean heritage, a good name. You cannot cheat, you cannot avoid consequences, so be virtuous. Be honest with yourself."

In order to insure a proper distribution of these cards so that every boy and girl, active or inactive, from the ages 12 to 20 in every ward and branch in all the stakes of the Church, shall receive a card like this, we are now going to the bishops. The bishop is the head of the Aaronic Priesthood, and the bishop has a counselor who is assigned to work with the YWMIA on the LDS Girls' Program. We are asking each one of you as bishop, when these cards are delivered to your ward, to see to it that every boy in the Aaronic Priesthood, and every boy of Aaronic Priesthood age who is not ordained to any priesthood, receives one of these cards.

Then, through your counselor who is associated with the LDS Girls' Program in the YWMIA, we ask that you see to it that every girl, active or inactive, in that age group, receives one of these cards so that it may be read and understood, and possibly be of help in converting them to be clean.

In the next picture we show you another poster—a very happy looking young couple, a boy and a girl, and the expression, "Healthy, Happy, Lucky You. Be Honest With Yourself."

In the next picture we will show you the side-piece that goes with it, which reads: "Healthy, Happy, Lucky You. Lucky is he who learns from his parents and the Church that health and happiness come with clean living, that some things should be left alone, not to be touched or tampered with. We have one mind, and one earthly body which must last a lifetime. Our Maker planned it that way. He knows what is good for us. That is why he has given us commandments, not left us alone in our search for happiness. Lucky is he who does not have to learn everything the hard way, the painful way, too often when it is nearly too late. Be smart. Be clean. Be happy. Be healthy. Be honest with yourself."

When these two are put together, they will be displayed in your display case. At that same time we will distribute small cards based on this theme.

The caption is, "Beauty Is More Than Skin Deep," and then again, our theme, "Be Honest With Yourself." The side-piece, which is shown in the next picture, reads like this: "Beauty is more than skin deep," and may I say that this is just as much a message to boys, who should have the proper measure of beauty, as it is to girls.

"What is beauty? Who can have it? Ask John Robert Powers, famous beauty authority. He will tell you, though it sounds trite. It is the glow of health, a radiant personality, a complete self assurance and naturalness, intellectual curiosity and integrity. To sum it up, beauty is largely a matter of the thoughts we think, the deeds we do, the food we eat, the interest we show in others. It is the sum of sincerity, enthusiasm, and unselfishness. It is obedience to the laws of good and wise and unselfish living. It is the reflections of what we are inside ourselves. So if you would be beautiful, be honest with yourself," so reads the side piece. And then cards will be based upon that theme also, for individual distribution.

In our next picture we have something based on Emily Post: a young couple out for the evening being offered drinks by the host. The caption at the top says, "The Guest, the Host, and Emily Post." The side-piece shown in the next picture reads like this: "When your host invites you to have a drink, or take a cigarette, what is the proper answer? When you are offered things you don't want, Emily Post says it's proper to say 'No, thank you.' The obligation of courtesy is not that of the guest, but of the host and hostess. Wanting to be popular is natural, but when an inner voice says, 'Don't do that, it is wrong,' then say no and hang on to that no. So it's not only proper, it's wise to say, 'No, thank you.' Be honest with yourself."

In our next view on the screen the side-piece is shown, and it reads like this: "Great and wise men and women of all ages have sought and received help through prayer, and all these are proper petitions to an understanding Father in Heaven: the trust of a child at his mother's knee, the prayer of a father for the return of a wayward son, the students' honest seeking for answers, a young man's reverent request for strength to do his best in a ball game or business venture, the young woman's plea for guidance in choosing a husband. Do you ever need help from a higher source? Then follow the example of the great and good of all the ages. Ask and receive. Pray. Be honest with yourself."

Brethren, we are planning to continue this program for some time. The artist has in mind painting such additional ones as representations of modesty, in dress and actions, and other such subjects.

Now, brethren, as these posters and cards come to you, you will be getting additional support. We are going to ask the publishers of all of the Church publications, the magazines and the Church Section of the Deseret News, to give us a full page, once a month. During the month when the posters appear new we will place, with their permission, a full-page display tied in with the current poster. We are having written up a series of success stories from the lives of true Latter-day Saint men who have made good in a big way in big business or in the professions, still maintaining their standards. The theme will be that they are succeeding not in spite of, but with the assistance of, their observance of the standards of the Church. This human interest story based on the standards of the Church will come in the alternate months in between the placing of the new posters.

The MIA have already pledged to us their assistance, and they will give us a further follow-through at their June Conference. The Presiding Bishopric, who have helped us in this planning, particularly Bishop Joseph L. Wirthlin, will give us their support for our program. The other organizations, although not yet contacted, are always similarly cooperative.

Brethren, we humbly ask that each one of you cooperate with this positive effort to teach good Latter-day Saint standards to the young people of the Church. We believe that by these positive methods we can help them to realize that to help them succeed most in the earth, they will desire to keep the standards of the Church, and that this may be is our humble prayer, in the name of the Lord, Jesus Christ. Amen.

Elder S. Dilworth Young of the First Council of Seventy will be our next speaker.

ELDER S. DILWORTH YOUNG

Of the First Council of the Seventy

I CANNOT express in words, my brethren, the honor that is paid me by President McKay in asking me to address you this evening. I feel very much indebted to him. I was eight years of age when he entered the Quorum of the Twelve, and I have grown up through most of my life always remembering him as an Apostle of the Lord.

It was he who called me on the phone one day in April of 1945 and invited me to come to the Conference and take my place in the First Council of the Seventy. There have been times when I have needed to be rebuked, as I guess all men do. I shall never protest as long as those I receive in the future are as gentle as those President McKay has given me, for he always leaves me built up and strengthened when he calls attention to the errors which have been made.

President McKay, I should like you to know that my own personal feeling toward you is one of deep devotion, and toward your family likewise. I think I have no greater love for any man than I do for your brother, Thomas, who has been to me always a friend, often in time of need.

Saturday, April 7

Second Day

I should like to indulge myself for a moment, and ask you to indulge me, in an imaginary thing. I should like to have you imagine with me that we have gone back 136 years. I imagine myself to be a member of a family, newly moved into New York State, by the name of Smith.

We were having a hard time. Father had contracted for some land. It was heavily forested. It is no easy thing to cut down hardwood trees of diameter from three to four feet, and yet that was our lot if we expected to clear the land and make a farm out of it. We progressed slowly by hard work.

On one particular clear sunshiny day in early spring, when the buds were starting to come out a little, a rare thing in New York state in that season of the year, I had been sent to clear in the lower bottom land, and having spent the whole day there, did not have much connection with the family. I came home that evening in time for supper and gathered with the family around the table. Our usual custom was to have a verse of Scripture and a prayer over the food, and then to indulge ourselves in conversation concerning religion. We had good cause, because at that moment there were in the town four ministers representing four churches, all of them pleading with us to be saved and to accept Christ.

My mother and my brother, Hyrum, had felt they would like to espouse the cause of the Presbyterian Church, and so indicated. Myself, I favored the Methodist Church. I thought that was nearer to what I considered Christ to be. But we were a loyal family and we did not ever quarrel over these things. It was all happy conversation, reason was given, Scripture was quoted, and we had a good laugh whenever we came to a difference we could not resolve.

After the supper was cleared away, my father said to us children, "Gather around the fire. We have something important to have you hear." And so we gathered, and after we were seated in the various chairs and on the floor, my mother gently rocking in her favorite rocking chair with her knitting in her lap, my father said:

"Now, Joseph," and then I saw my younger brother stand. I noticed he had been a little quiet during the evening. Now he spoke. He told us what we all know so well about his experience of the morning. He told us it was a vision. A remarkable thing occurred to me. In my heart as I heard him speak I had no more doubt about religion. There was no argument in my mind. Somehow, without any thought, without any analysis, I knew he spoke the truth. I did not have to analyze it. I did not want to analyze it. There was no need for it. I was sure.

As I remember back, it seems to me that each of my brothers and sisters were equally sure. I think the whole thing—the whole explanation—was summed up by my father when he said, in his quiet way, "Boys and girls, it is of God." That seemed to be the feeling of all of us.

I experienced also a new feeling toward Joseph. In my eyes, suddenly, though he was but a boy, he seemed to assume the stature of a man, and I had equal confidence, as I had of the sureness of his vision, that he had the stature and would grow to fill it in such a way that he could always carry the burdens which the Lord was placing upon him.

The passing years have done nothing to change my feelings in that respect. He did measure up. For the first time, I guess, since the history in the days of Christ, we had found the truth about the Father and the Son, which is now so clearly testified of in the Scriptures. Up until that time the Father and Son relationship had been a mystery. But another thing we also learned: we learned the true feeling which comes when the Holy Ghost bears witness of the truth, for that, my brethren, was also a part of the revelation that day.

You see, it could not very well be that the Father and the Son could come and reveal themselves to a boy and have the world believe that boy unless the third member of the Grand Presidency of Heaven also played his part and bore witness to our souls with such sureness we could not fail to accept the fact that what he said was true. It was the still, small voice, not loud, not contentious. We just knew.

Thank you for your patience in this imaginary excursion. My brethren, that great revelation of two glorious Beings, and the testimony of its truth, witnessed by the Holy Ghost—has been the basis of this Church. The strength we have today of a million and three hundred and fifty thousand, our immense outlay of buildings and the vast numbers of you of the Priesthood, is because all of us have also had borne in upon our souls that same, still, small, quiet, witness that indeed the events did transpire; that indeed Joseph Smith was a Prophet; and indeed carried his work to the satisfaction of his Father in Heaven, and we know by the same whispering of the spirit that his keys are held by President McKay and those who associate with him as prophets and seers and revelators.

That is my testimony also, in the name of Christ. Amen.

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr., will now speak to us.

PRESIDENT J. REUBEN CLARK, JR.

Second Counselor in the First Presidency

MY BRETHREN: Again in this semi-annual Priesthood Meeting, I am privileged and honored to be asked to say a few words to you. I hope that you will aid me, that the things that I wish to say, have thought I might say, will seem to be appropriate, and that I may be led either along that line or some other. I know in part the value of your prayers. I know in part the power of the Priesthood. I know in part the power of our Heavenly Father. And these things I invoke at this time.

If Brother Young will permit me, I should just like to make one observation. You know, if I cannot accept this First Vision, I do not see how I can be regarded as a member of this Church. I do not see any alternative to that, because it is elemental. There are some, in numbers I am sure few, in position of some importance, who seem to think that the Church is a great social organization and such it is, and if that were all it is I suppose it would be worth belonging to, but the Church is that and far, far more. The social activity, the economic set up of the Church is most important, but without the First Vision and all that flows from it, this Church as we know it, would never have been built, would not now exist, and would have been but a memory.

You know, of course, I cannot think for anybody else but myself but I believe that if I held that erroneous view which I have named, I would have the courage, the ordinary, everyday honesty publicly to proclaim myself and ask to be relieved of my membership. That is the way I would feel.

Now, I am sure the brethren who are still waiting here, President McKay and President Richards, have much that they want to say, and I have only one or two points that I would like to mention. What I am going to say now I cannot be too sure about, and I do not give you these things that I shall read to you, tell you about, as being actual facts. But I think they are fairly accurate. Compared with the most numerous, that is the Church with the most membership in the United States, we stand as one to 24, by which I mean that the largest is twenty-four times plus larger than are we.

However, when it comes to the Priesthood, the situation is very different. In the United States, according to our best figures, there are 165,000 holding the Melchizedek Priesthood; there are 143,000 bearing the Aaronic Priesthood; a total of 309,000.

Now I cannot be sure about the figures I shall give you next, but the best I have been able to obtain would show that they, that other Church, of which we are only 1/24th as large, has only 54,344 priests. That gives us 5.6 bearers of the Priesthood to their one.

Saturday, April 7

Now if you add in to that number of theirs, those who belong to their Seminaries, who as I understand are not yet bearers of their Priesthood, and so should not be included, but including them, it appears that we have 3.5 bearers of the Priesthood to one with them. Yet they are perhaps 24 times larger than we.

Brother Mark Petersen quoted some scriptures, and I would like, if Mark will permit it to quote them. The Lord told Moses, you will find this in Exodus 19:6:

"And ye shall be unto me a kingdom of priests, and an holy nation. These are the words which thou shalt speak unto the children of Israel."

And then as Peter has quoted it and enlarged it, Brother Mark:

"But ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people; that ye should shew forth the praises of him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvellous light." (1 Peter 2:9.)

I am sure there is no other Church on this earth that has the proportion of Priesthood to total membership that we have. The plan which the Father had for Israel could not be carried out because they refused to receive the Melchizedek Priesthood, and the Lord took the Priesthood and then Moses out of their midst and left them with the Aaronic Priesthood.

Now the lesson I would like to get out of this situation, is what a tremendous advantage not only, do we have over any other church, I think I may safely say in the world, but I would like to point out to you we have a corresponding responsibility, a responsibility that we cannot escape. We have been made in general language, a kingdom of priests, a priesthood kingdom. The Lord so looks at us, I am sure, and I am sure he will hold us responsible.

I wonder, well organized as we are (years ago when the German Army was regarded as the best drilled and best officered and best organized army in the world, we used to hear that an appraisal of us was to this effect) whether we are as well organized as the German Army. Our organization is perfect. We can have no excuse, no reason for failing to do what the Lord expects us to do, save our own indifference, unwillingness, or indolence.

Brethren, I think this is a tremendous responsibility, and how shall we meet it. I come back to the theme I have spoken of ever since I have been talking to you, unity. I want to take time with your permission to read a part of perhaps the greatest prayer of which we have record, that prayer which was uttered by the Savior the night before the crucifixion after he and the disciples had left the Upper Chamber and had gone out to the Mount. That is the one in which near the beginning, Jesus declared, "And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent." (John 17:3.)

And if you will bear with me, I want to read most of the rest of that prayer. It was uttered in behalf of the disciples by Jesus himself, and you brethren who are here, bearers of the Melchizedek Priesthood, hold precisely the same Priesthood, enjoy, I think, precisely the same rights and powers and keys that were enjoyed by them. And I want to read you by way of recalling to your remembrance, how the Lord prayed for them. I am reading from John, chapter 17.

"For I have given unto them the words (he is talking to the Father) which thou gavest me; and they have received them, and have known surely that I came out from thee, and they have believed that thou didst send me.

"I pray for them: I pray not for the world, but for them which thou hast given me; for they are thine.

"And all mine are thine, and thine are mine; and I am glorified in them. (He is speaking of those, I repeat, who hold the same Priesthood that you brethren here before me, holders of the Melchizedek Priesthood, now possess.)

"And now I am no more in the world, but these are in the world, and I come to thee. Holy Father, keep through thine own name those whom thou hast given me, that they may be one, as we are.

"While I was with them in the world, I kept them in thy name: those that thou gavest me I have kept, and none of them is lost, but the son of perdition; that the scripture might be fulfilled.

"And now come I to thee; and these things I speak in the world, that they might have my joy fulfilled in themselves.

"I have given them thy word; and the world hath hated them, because they are not of the world, even as I am not of the world.

"I pray not that thou shouldest take them out of the world, but that thou shouldest keep them from the evil.

"They are not of the world, even as I am not of the world.

"Sanctify them through thy truth: thy word is truth.

"As thou hast sent me into the world, even so have I also sent them into the world.

"And for their sakes I sanctify myself, that they also might be sanctified through truth.

"Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word;

"That they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me.

"And the glory which thou gavest me

I have given them; that they may be one, even as we are one:

"I in them, and thou in me, that they may be made perfect in one; and that the world may know that thou hast sent me, and hast loved them, as thou hast loved me.

"Father, I will that they also, whom thou hast given me, be with me where I am; that they may behold my glory, which thou hast given me: for thou lovedst me before the foundation of the world.

"O righteous Father, the world hath not known thee: but I have known thee, and these have known that thou hast sent me.

"And I have declared unto them thy name, and will declare it: that the love wherewith thou hast loved me may be in them, and I in them." (John 17:8-26.)

Brethren, I take it that that is a prayer offered for us, just as applicable to us as it was to the Apostles in whose immediate behalf Christ was intervening.

May the Lord give us the unity, the faith, the powers, which the Lord prayed that his Disciples might have, I humbly pray, in the name of Jesus. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

President Stephen L Richards will be our next speaker.

PRESIDENT STEPHEN L RICHARDS

First Counselor in the First Presidency

I MIGHT well have chosen a subject for this evening other than that on which I propose to dwell had I not been impelled a few days ago in contemplating this meeting to bring a particular matter to your attention. I trust that it may not be too inappropriate for this great occasion. If at the beginning it seems so, please reserve judgment.

I read in the newspaper the other day an article. It prompted me to bring the matter here. It is written by Judge Rudolph C. Geissler of Connecticut. Some of you may have seen it, but I fear that it was not read generally and seriously, or I would not take the time to reproduce at least part of it. The Judge says:

"In the 24 years I have been on the bench, I have never given a speeder a second chance. I never will. If he is convicted in my court or pleads guilty, the speeder gets a fine or a jail sentence and his license gets blemished.

"In the sense that I adhere strictly to the law, I am a 'tough' judge. In my opinion, that is the judge's job. As a speeder, you are one man in a traffic court on one particular day; as a judge, you are a witness day in day out, by the hundreds and thousands, to the worst carnage man has ever known. Worse than plague. Worse than war.

"Motorists are inclined to think that when they come up before a judge on their first speeding charge, they should be given a second chance. They don't want that 'black mark' on the back of their driver's license. They offer excuses. They get friends of the judge to try to fix things for them. They hire lawyers to pull strings. What they don't understand is that speed is their enemy, not the court. The court is simply their conscience.

Saturday, April 7

Second Day

"Excuses, entreaties, attempts at influence, I've heard them all:

"Judge, I've been driving for twelve years with a clean record—just give me this one chance."

"Judge, if you put this second speeding on my license the company will fire me."

"Your Honor, I don't have a job and my kids are sick and if you fine me, I'll have to go to jail."

Then he cites the cases of friends pleading for those who are arrested.

"Yes, I've heard them all, and I've turned them all down. Sometimes it makes my heart ache, like when a man is out of a job and is up against it, but I don't give him a second chance. 'What kind of justice is that?' you may ask. 'Have you no compassion? Can't a man be forgiven one mistake?' One mistake. Compassion. What do you think I have seen and heard during my 24 years on the bench? A man drives at 70 miles per hour at night on a two-lane highway. He sideswipes another car going around a curve; both cars spin out of control and crash. Four people are dead. That's only one mistake, isn't it?"

"A group of young people are coming home from a dance, and the 19-year-old driver decides to show off by pushing the speedometer up to its limit—one mistake. A driver speeds up to beat a changing light at an intersection—just one mistake.

"The fact is, that's all a speeding accident ever amounts to—just one mistake. The vast majority of serious collisions involve people, with 'clean' records. Yes, I have compassion, and so do most other judges, but the compassion is for the permanently crippled, the 'innocent' corpses in the other car, the children left without one or both parents. We judges have to look at unending photographs of butchered bodies and mangled automobiles, introduced into evidence by police officers—the mute evidence of a speeder's one mistake."

And he cites other instances. Then he says:

"I know quite a lot about boys, and I do think about them. For instance, I think about those two young fellows at Storrs, Conn., who killed themselves smashing into a tree; the Hartford boys who wound up on morgue slabs after their car turned over three times and landed in a ditch; those four college boys who were doing 75 on the Wilbur Cross Parkway—two died instantly and two in the hospital.

"I know about boys, all right. I've got three sons and eight grandsons, and if they ever start speeding I only hope and pray that a State Trooper is there to catch them and that a judge fines them properly.

"Here's what I tell most young people who come before me and try to talk themselves out of their 'jam.' 'Young man,' I say, 'consider this one of the luckiest days of your life—for you have wound up in a traffic court instead of a graveyard.'

"I recently had an 18-year-old high-school student in my court. He had been clocked at midnight doing 80 m.p.h. on a two-lane highway. I asked him why his father had not come to court with him.

"He's here," the boy said, 'in the back of the court.' I asked the father to come forward.

"My son got himself into this," the father said, 'and he'll have to get himself out of it. There's no excuse for driving a car at that speed.'

"Did you have a reason?" I asked the boy.

"Yes, sir," he answered. 'I had been up late several nights in a row, so I wanted to get home to catch up on my sleep.'

"Well," I said, 'you had a distance of twenty-five miles to cover. Now by going eighty miles an hour instead of the legal limit you probably saved about fifteen minutes. And in the process, you might have been killed—or killed somebody else. Do you think the risk was worth it?'

"No, sir," the boy said. 'I guess not. I guess I deserve to be fined.'

"I noticed the father perk up at that, and I could see he felt a little better about his son's scrape with the law. I admire that father much more than one who tries to 'protect' his son by influencing the judge or prosecutor.

"How can we slow you down? How can we make you obey the speed limit which is clearly and incessantly indicated on every highway in this country?"

"Fines haven't worked.

"Threats haven't worked.

"Public education doesn't seem to be working.

"Maybe Connecticut's new experiment will. Governor Abraham A. Ribicoff recently issued an order which, as far as I know, is the most drastic speed rule in the nation. Any one who exceeds the speed limit on any road, highway or street in the state of Connecticut now automatically loses his driver's license for 30 days; if it is a second conviction, he loses it for 60 days. And the regulation applies not only to residents of Connecticut, but also to speeders from other states with which Connecticut has reciprocity agreements." (Reprinted from This Week Magazine. Copyright 1956 by the United Newspapers Magazine Corporation.)

Now, I did not read this to advocate that Governor's recommendation. I do not know enough about it to know whether that is the best recommendation that can be proposed. I read this to try to save the lives of some of our people. I notice these smash-ups in the paper every day or two, and if it does not tell what Church they belong to, I nearly always follow it up and find where they are to be buried from, and I find out that a great proportion of all those in this area are members of my own Church, my brethren in the Priesthood.

I know that some young folks think that they have freedom to do what they will. They seem to think that they have freedom to do with their lives as they desire. They ought to be taught the Lord's words regarding life. Life is precious, "For ye are bought with a price: therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's." (1 Cor. 6:20)

No man has the freedom and the liberty to dispose of even his own life and to be so careless as to endanger the lives of others.

I used to have an old friend—Brother McKay will remember him—who was taken out of business, almost, by the prohibition act. I remember him making a statement that I never forgot. He said, "I reserve the right to criticize the law, but not to break it." As far as I know he never broke it.

Who makes the law? Your representatives. Isn't it disloyal to them to break the laws they make? I think there is not only an element of disloyalty to it, but I know that it breeds disrespect for the law, and it is immoral to break the laws of the land.

Life is too precious. It is the greatest gift that the Lord has given to us. We cannot waste it, and if I, by bringing this to your attention, can save one carload of teenagers from careening into a station and killing them, as they did the other night, I shall be grateful, and therefore I take the liberty of bringing this to the attention of my brethren of the Priesthood to see if we cannot develop a respect for the law which will enable us to avoid many of these tragic accidents. My heart bleeds for the victims. My heart bleeds for the innocent victims who ride along safely and are run into by these speed demons. This Judge has a whole lot of good sense, and I think maybe he has a deterrent that will be helpful in this greatest carnage that our Country has ever known.

The Lord bless us, help us to preserve our lives, and to use our lives for the high purposes that the Lord has given us, I pray in the name of Jesus. Amen.

PRESIDENT DAVID O. McKAY

MY ESTEEMED fellow-workers. I hope what I say now may not detract from the spiritual instructions received and the appeals made for our young people. But there are a few suggestions to you, stake officers, stake presidencies and bishoprics of wards, which we hope you will take without comment. I will just name them.

1. In our Handbook of Instructions we

Saturday, April 7

Second Day

read (which many of you bishops probably have not read, because it has not been reprinted): "Sunday School should not be closed on a day of Stake Conference. All classes with the exception of the Gospel Doctrine and other adult classes, should remain in session. This applies to every ward except where Conference is being held in a ward building and Sunday School and Conference cannot be accommodated in the building at the same time. It is understood, however, that the attendance of all members of the Church, old and young, at Stake Conference shall be encouraged, and that a member of any Sunday School class who desires to attend Stake Conference should be excused to do so, and that any class in the Sunday School may, under proper supervision, attend a Stake Conference in a body," but to close the Sunday School and turn out a hundred or several hundred, young boys and girls who do not go to Conference or who cannot find seats in the congregation, is contrary to instructions given.

2. Many wards at different times of the year decide that they will not hold any Sunday night meeting on Fast Day. These meetings should be held in the interest of the Auxiliaries.

3. This is very important. Substitutions should not be made for our Sacrament Meetings. Seminary graduation exercises should be held at some other hour or on some weekday night; they should not take the place of our Sacrament Meetings.

And now just for a final message. We have been worried, not for a few days or a few months, but for many years, over the problem of making our ward teaching more effective. This is in harmony with our great lesson tonight—to help our young people and to help those of our older ones who are indifferent.

Tonight I shall take time to mention only two features.

"The teacher's duty is to watch over the church always"—this is the Word of the Lord, and the more closely we follow that the more satisfaction we shall have in our labors.

"The teacher's duty is to watch over the church always, and be with and strengthen them;

"And see that there is no iniquity in the church, neither hardness with each other, neither lying, backbiting, nor evil speaking;

"And see that the church meet together often, and also see that all the members do their duty." (D. & C. 20:53-55)

One day, when my brother and I were in our teens, we were ready to leave the barnyard and go out to the field for a load of hay. Father came out, shut the gate behind him, and then looking towards the sidewalk, saw two men coming towards the house. He recognized them as ward teachers, "Al" Sprague and Eli Tracy. He said, "Boys, there are the ward teachers; tie up your team and come into the house." Though we demurred, we obeyed. Seated as a family, we heard our father say, "Now brethren, we are in your hands."

I give you the picture. Now I give you what the teacher said: he started with my father, who was the Bishop of the Ward, and asked him if he was doing his duty; if he was living in harmony with his neighbors; if he was sustaining the authorities. He asked Mother questions about doing her duty, and he went from the parents to each child who sat around in that meeting.

Those teachers emphasized one part of their duty. First, Father submitted himself to them, for they came as his representatives and would be in every house. Their duty was to see that "each member does his duty." Now that takes tact and some of you say for teachers so to question the people gives offense. I grant you all that, and I am not going to discuss it. But the Lord has asked you to do just that thing. How you do it, the inspiration of the Lord must prompt.

Now tonight I should like to emphasize another phase of ward teaching—"watching over the Church always."

The teacher's duty is not performed when he goes only once a month to each house. I remember when one Bishop made it a duty of the ward teacher to go at once to a house bereaved of a loved one and see what could be done in order to bring comfort to those who were grieving and to make arrangements for the funeral. It is the teacher's duty to see that there is no want; if there is sickness there, to go and administer—watching over those families always.

Tuesday morning at the dedication of the Los Angeles Temple—that was the beginning, I think, of the fifth session—we were entering the Temple when somebody said, “There is an old lady coming down the walk. Evidently she wants to see you.” She was walking, but she had to be helped. We returned and met her just as she and her companions came up the steps leading to the north entrance of the Temple. We shook her hand and greeted her and gave her a blessing as much as we could in that short, brief time, and to encourage her said, “Are these your two fine sons?” “No,” answered the one on her left, “we are her ward teachers.” What a beautiful example of watching over the church always. They knew the old lady wanted to attend that service. I do not know what help they had to give her in order to bring her there, they had to get an automobile probably. I do not know whether she had any sons. I know only what I have told you. But they were her ward teachers and they knew her needs.

Well, in every group assigned to you ward teachers, there are young folks who are crippled, there are young folks who are staggering, who need help morally. Somehow, some way, you can reach them and give them some help. Not just when you go to make a formal visit, when you are sitting there before the radio or the television, but at some party, some way, wherever they are going, get in their company, get their confidence, take a hold of their arm—“watch over them always.”

Those two things we can do, in addition to what the bishoprics are now asking you to do: teach them their duty, watch over them always and see that they attend to their meetings.

In conclusion, let me commend the Committee of the Twelve for the great project they have presented to us tonight. You can see its value. I am sure that you were all deeply impressed with Brother Petersen’s message.

These lines came to me when he gave the principal theme:

“You ought to be true for the sake of the folks who believe you are true.

You never should stoop to a deed that your friends think you wouldn’t do.

If you’re false to yourself, be the blemish but small,

You have injured your friends; you’ve been false to them all.”

(Edgar A. Guest)

God help us to save our young people, to bring peace in our wards, in our homes, and in our hearts, by keeping the commandments of God as He has given them to us in this the Latter-day through the restoration of the Gospel of Jesus Christ; given it to us by direct revelation by the direct appearance of the Father and the Son, to the boy Prophet; given unto us, as President Clark has explained tonight, the Priesthood, the same as held by the Apostles of old.

With all my heart I bless you, fellow-workers in the Priesthood of God, and I do it in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

The Reno Latter-day Saints Male Chorus will now sing, “Thanks Be to God.” In your behalf we thank these young men and their able leader for their presence here tonight and their impressive singing. They are directed by Brother Cropper.

Elder Roy D. Olpin, president of the Millard Stake, will offer the closing prayer.

The session at 10:00 o’clock Sunday morning will be broadcast over station KSL and over 14 radio stations as named heretofore. These services will also be televised over KSL-TV, channel 5, and by special arrangements over 18 television stations in Idaho, Washington, California, Oregon, Arizona, Nevada and Colorado.

The Church of the Air broadcast will be from 8:00 until 8:30 a.m. tomorrow. President Joseph Fielding Smith will be the speaker. The Tabernacle Choir broadcast will be from 9:30 to 10:00 a.m. tomorrow morning. Those desiring to attend the Tabernacle Choir broadcast must be in their seats at 9:15 a.m. It is requested, and we repeat this, that the audience during the broadcast refrain from making any disturbance. Large crowds will undoubtedly be waiting outside the closed doors. We suggest that those standing be courteous when the doors are opened and considerate of others in the crowd. Avoid pushing or crowding, will you please.

The regular session of the Conference will begin at 10:00 o'clock tomorrow morning. The Reno Male Chorus will now sing, "Thanks Be to God." The benediction will be offered by Elder Roy D. Olpin, president of the Millard Stake.

The Reno Latter-day Saints Male Chorus sang the hymn, "Thanks Be to God."

President David O. McKay:

As thousands leave this great Priesthood Meeting tonight, let us keep in mind the timely admonition given by President Richards to drive carefully.

President Roy D. Olpin of the Millard Stake offered the closing prayer.

Conference adjourned until Sunday morning, April 8, at 10 o'clock a.m.

THIRD DAY MORNING MEETING

Conference reconvened at 10 o'clock a.m., Sunday, April 8, 1956.

The Tabernacle Choir, under the direction of J. Spencer Cornwall, was present and furnished the choral music for this session of the Conference.

(For a full report of the Church of the Air and Tabernacle Choir and Organ broadcast see pages 125-129.)

President David O. McKay:

In solemn worship this Sabbath morning thousands are assembled in the Tabernacle on Temple Square, in the Assembly Hall and Barratt Hall in Salt Lake City, and many are gathered on the walks and lawns of the grounds listening to the services over the public address system.

Last evening there was held a large Priesthood Meeting—undoubtedly the largest ever held in the Church. This general Priesthood Meeting was held in the Salt Lake Tabernacle with overflow meetings in the Assembly Hall and Barratt Hall, and the proceedings were relayed by closed circuit to members of the Priesthood assembled in 22 Church buildings in Utah; 12 in Idaho; 3 in Wyoming, 2 in Nevada; 1 in Colorado; 4 in Washington; 3 in Oregon; 15 in California; 3 in Arizona; 1 in Hawaii, or a total of 66 buildings.

For your interest this morning we should like to say that as nearly as the ushers could count there were assembled in that Priesthood Meeting approximately 30,000 men holding the Priesthood. The speakers were Elder Mark E. Petersen of the Council of the Twelve, of whose message you will hear more throughout the Church; Elder S. Dilworth Young of the First Council of the Seventy; and members of the First Presidency.

The Reno Latter-day Saints Male Chorus furnished the music under the direction of Elder Ladd R. Cropper, who is our Institute Director in the University of Nevada. The singing was excellent, as was all that we have had in the Conference.

President Joseph Fielding Smith, President of the Council of the Twelve, was the speaker on Columbia's Church of the Air program this morning at 8 o'clock.

We are now assembled in the Sixth Session of the One Hundred Twenty-Sixth Annual Conference of the Church. Just a further word or two about last night—I am sure you would be interested in the following—that here in the Tabernacle, Assembly Hall and Barratt Hall, and on the Temple Grounds, there were 11,165 members of the Priesthood. In the Brigham Young University there were 2009. Other groups in Utah: 7,000; in California, 3,641; in Arizona, 712; in Colorado, 250; Idaho, 2,600; Nevada, 685; Oregon, 460; Washington, 593; Wyoming, 306; and I do not know how many in these telegrams this morning.

What an inspiration! What hopes and assurances we have for the future!

These services are broadcast in the Assembly Hall and Barratt Hall, and over a public address system and by television over 18 television stations operating in Utah, Idaho, Oregon, Nevada, Arizona, California, Washington, and Colorado, this morning. We welcome you all. We are likewise being heard over 14 radio stations in these western states. The names of these stations have already been mentioned over KSL. Thank you all. You have our appreciation for the time and facilities you are furnishing for this great Conference. In behalf of the membership of all the Church we thank you.

We welcome the following special visitors and regular members of the Church: you who are listening in will be pleased to know we have present Senator Wallace F. Bennett, Congressman H. Aldous Dixon, Mayor Adiel F. Stewart of Salt Lake City, President Ernest L. Wilkinson of the Brigham Young University, President A. Ray Olpin of the University of Utah, President Daryl Chase of the Utah State Agricultural College, Superintendent E. Allan Bateman, superintendent of Public Instruction, Superintendent M. Lynn Bennion of the Salt Lake City Schools, Brother LaMont Toronto, Secretary of State. Undoubtedly there are others whom we have not seen, but you are all cordially welcomed. It is glorious to meet with you and have you partake of the spirit of the Conference, and to let us partake of your spirit by your presence here.

PRESIDENT STEPHEN L RICHARDS

First Counselor in the First Presidency

IN THE SPIRIT of the brotherhood and the love which the gospel of our Lord inspires, I greet you this morning, my brethren and sisters and friends. The sun is shining in Salt Lake City, bringing with it good cheer to those assembled here in the conference. I hope that those who are away from us, and who listen in, are likewise happy and

The Choir this morning, as you already know, is our own Tabernacle Choir, with J. Spencer Cornwall conducting, and Alexander Schreiner at the organ, and as has been announced already by Brother Evans, the numbers that they have sung at the Broadcast and the numbers that will now be sung are from the Choir's European concert repertoire.

The Choir will now sing "The Lord's Prayer," by LeRoy Robertson, our own composer, with J. Spencer Cornwall conducting.

The opening prayer will be offered by Elder Thomas Gay Myers, president of the Las Vegas Stake.

An anthem, "The Lord's Prayer," was sung by the Tabernacle Choir.

The opening prayer was offered by President Thomas Gay Myers of the Las Vegas Stake.

President David O. McKay:

He who just offered the invocation is Elder Thomas G. Myers, president of the Las Vegas Stake.

The Tabernacle Choir will now sing, "For Unto Us a Child Is Born." Following the Choir singing, we shall hear from President Stephen L Richards.

well, rejoicing in the blessings that the Lord has so bounteously bestowed upon all.

I wish to bring you this morning a message of encouragement. I need the aid of our Father and his spirit in so doing, and I trust he will bless all of you likewise.

It is said that the Dispensation of the

Sunday, April 8

Third Day

Meridian of Time opened with the words: "Repent ye: for the kingdom of heaven is at hand" (Matt. 3:2) first uttered by John the Baptist and then by the Savior after his ordeal of fasting and temptation, when "From that time Jesus began to preach, and to say, Repent: for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." (Matt. 4:17.)

It is interesting to contemplate the intonation of voice used in the pronouncement of these first portentous words. I have heard them repeated in tones of a piercing proclamation to convey the impression of a stern command and authoritative exhortation. Undoubtedly they were meant to be all three—a penetrating pronouncement, a command, and an exhortation. But I like to think that there was also an intonation in the voice of our Lord, as he spoke these words, indicative of entreaty and kindly solicitude to the erring ones to whom the words were addressed.

A part of the mission of our Savior was to bring the element of mercy to the rigorous, exacting, hard-hearted people among whom his mission began. When he taught forbearance and kindly, merciful consideration for human frailty and weakness, he was accused of violating and dispensing with the law. His reply to this accusation was: "Think not that I am come to destroy the law, or the prophets: I am not come to destroy, but to fulfil." (Matt. 5:17.)

Repentance was always, and is, a part of the law and the gospel plan, and the mercy which the Savior brought is essential to the doctrine of repentance and to the administration of the laws of God. The fine balance between the two is preserved for us in the great principle that mercy shall not rob justice (Alma 42:25), nor justice, mercy.

Before I comment further on the principle of repentance, I wish to make it clear that I regard all laws of the gospel as essential in the plan of salvation, and that no one of his children may hope to obtain the highest exaltation in the celestial kingdom without complying with every law and every commandment given of the Lord for men to follow. I believe also that the Lord fully recognizes the frailties and the weaknesses of his children while they undergo mortal probation. He subjected them to the tests of mortality. He gave them their free agency to cope with its temptations and problems. He planted within them a sense of right, and surrounded them with his Holy Spirit to help them chart the course of their lives, but he knew from the beginning that not all would have the vision and the strength of character to pursue the straight and narrow way. He knew that many would succumb to the seductive temptations of the adversary whom he permitted to be in the world with his children to test and ultimately to strengthen their faith and determination.

So, repentance was from the beginning a necessary part of the plan. It was not the only part of the plan indicative of the love and mercy of the Lord. The laws and commandments are themselves generous and loving provisions, formulated by our Father to bring to pass the greatest possible happiness and blessing to his vast family whom he loves. Every single commandment, stern as it may appear to some, is in reality an avenue to the glorious realm of peace and happiness. But repentance is an outstanding principle of mercy and love and kindness, attesting the concern and love of the Father for his children, for in final analysis, he gave his Beloved Son, not alone to redeem us from the effect of transgressions which lay heavy upon the whole race of men, but also to give to us the inexpressibly glorious opportunity of repenting of our own individual transgressions so that we might again come back into his presence clean and forgiven, through the precious gift of repentance.

I have never regarded repentance as being a static thing. It is difficult to imagine how men may repent once and for all for a full lifetime of experience. I look upon it as a progressive principle applying to each of us day by day. With those who have been given the noble concepts of a perfect life, there must be very few, if any, who do not feel that each day he or she may have fallen short of the ideal of perfection; so, each day, working toward, but failing fully to realize this lofty goal, each must feel the need for repentance—and so each, with such a feeling of inadequacy, will seek the forgiveness of his Father in heaven and also his fellow men if them he has offended. It is this constant sorrowing and striving that constitutes the progressive, constantly applicable, principle of repentance. This ever-recurring acknowledgment of weakness and error and seeking and living for the higher and better will lead us to perfection.

We have a tendency to grade and evaluate the mistakes of life, in which we have support from the revelations. Some deviations we classify as serious, even to the point of unforgivable. Others we look upon with more allowance. In some cases the gravity of the offense and the extent of culpability are subjects for judicial determination by those appointed to be judges in the Church of our Father. All such judgments are authoritative, and we believe, almost without exception, righteous judgments. The penalties are to be observed. But even such serious infractions do not do away with the merciful principle of repentance, and I know of no judicial tribunal in the Church that does not uniformly admonish and entreat those who are convicted of offenses to repent, to sin no more, and by their lives seek and be worthy of forgiveness.

There are so-called lesser offenses which are not brought to the attention of Church tribunals but which frequently come before the presiding officials who are judges in Israel, with relation to the advancement of men and women in the offices and privileges of the Church. Questions arise in connection with advancement in the priesthood, temple recommends, and suitability for offices in the organizations. I wish each one who may feel that his progress is being retarded, and he is not recognized as he would like to be, might ask himself what there is in his life to bring about this retardation. I am sure that each one, if he is frank with himself, will find the answer. There is a remedy—a universal remedy—that does not fail. It is repentance, turning away from that which impairs progress and deprives one of the true Spirit of the Lord. While I have mentioned offenses that are spoken of as serious and those which are less serious, I would have all understand that there is no departure from the ways pointed out by the Savior which is not serious and which will not impair the full development of a child of God.

I have said these things about the great salutary doctrine of repentance as a constantly applicable, progressive principle of life. I would like now to devote a little attention to the encouragement we may give each other and all our friends in the adoption of this principle. We are enjoined by the revelations coming to us with the restored gospel to call all men to repentance. Indeed, missionary work is the first obligation laid upon the restored Church. We would like all of our friends to understand that when we issue this call to repentance, we include ourselves within it. It is hoped there will be no implication of a boastful attitude on our part and that of our missionaries that we are free from the necessity of repentance. It is true that there is inconsistency in asking our neighbor to repent and turn away from a practice in transgression of the laws of the Lord which we ourselves indulge. Such an example does not lend weight to the call; but in spite of such inconsistency we are still under divine command to preach repentance to the people of this world, for repentance is indispensable. To those who criticize because they find within our ranks digressions from the pure laws of the gospel we seek to teach others, I put this trite but pertinent question: Does one offense wipe out another? Does weakness in one, even one who has been given a testimony of the truth, justify transgression of the law or failure to listen to its precepts?

I said in the beginning that I thought there must have been much of entreaty and appeal in that initial call of the Savior to his fellow men at the beginning of his ministry: "Repent: for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." (Matt. 4:17.) He knew the weaknesses of those to whom he issued that call. He knew their pride and arrogance, their love of the things of the world. He knew that they would not receive him for what he was. He knew that infinite patience and kindness and mercy would be required to teach them the principles of love and brotherhood embraced in the holy gospel. He knew that they would have to change their ways and transform their lives and concepts before they could truly come into his fold. So the first thing that he taught them was repentance, to let them understand that they could change their lives, that they could abandon their traditional practices, their intolerance, and their arrogance, and be inducted into the higher realm of love—love of God and of their fellow men. Those who became conscious of the power and the beauty of his teachings must have received the glorious principle of repentance with great joy. He encouraged them. Jesus taught his disciples the doctrine by example and parable.

There was the woman taken in sin. I think I have never seen a more impressive spectacle featured on the screen than that portrayed years ago when the movies were without sound in the picture called "The Ten Commandments." There was the woman cast into the dust, ashamed, hopeless. Surrounding her were hard-faced men, stones poised in their hands, ready, seemingly eager, to execute the penalty of the law. The plight of the woman was pitiful, desperate. Then suddenly there came on the scene the portrayal of the Christ. In his presence they were silenced, and withheld the stones, and then the scriptural account was enacted:

"They say unto him, Master, this woman was taken in adultery, in the very act.

"Now Moses in the law commanded us, that such should be stoned: but what sayest thou?

"This they said, tempting him, that they might have to accuse him. But Jesus stooped down, and with his finger wrote on the ground, as though he heard them not.

"So when they continued asking him, he lifted up himself, and said unto them, He that is without sin among you, let him first cast a stone at her.

"And again he stooped down, and wrote on the ground.

"And they which heard it, being convicted by their own conscience, went out one by one, beginning at the eldest, even unto the last: and Jesus was left alone, and the woman standing in the midst.

"When Jesus had lifted up himself, and saw none but the woman, he said unto her, Woman, where are those thine accusers? hath no man condemned thee?

"She said, No man, Lord. And Jesus said unto her, Neither do I condemn thee: go, and sin no more." (John 8:4-11.)

He encouraged all to repentance. To do so he told one of the greatest of all his parables, of the man that had two sons, an older and a younger. The older son was devoted to his father, obedient to his commands, serving him dutifully. The younger son was apparently of a different disposition with a longing for the things of the world and its pleasures. He requested and received a portion of the father's goods that he would have inherited, thus renouncing his patrimony, so precious to the Jews. He took what he received and went into a far country and spent that which had been given to him in riotous living. It is assumed that he committed many offenses and that his life was wholly at variance with the ideals of his home, but he paid a heavy penalty for his transgressions.

When he had spent all that he had, a mighty famine came in the land, and he found himself in great want. He was obliged to seek work, and his master sent him into the fields to feed swine, perhaps the lowest, most menial and degrading of all things that could come to a Jew. We are told that so great were his hunger and desperation that he would fain have eaten the husks that the swine did eat.

When so reduced in bodily strength and spirit, he came to himself. We have reason to believe that he was caught in the spirit of repentance, and in his desperation he said to himself: "How many hired servants of my father's have bread enough and to spare, and I perish with hunger!

"I will arise and go to my father, and will say unto him, Father, I have sinned against heaven, and before thee,

"And am no more worthy to be called thy son: make me as one of thy hired servants.

"And he arose, and came to his father. But when he was yet a great way off, his father saw him, and had compassion, and ran, and fell on his neck, and kissed him.

"And the son said unto him, Father, I have sinned against heaven, and in thy sight, and am no more worthy to be called thy son." (Luke 15:17-21.)

But the father, seemingly overjoyed with the son's return, did not reply to his son's exclamation, but he called out to his servants: "Bring forth the best robe and put on him, and bring a ring for his hand and shoes for his feet, and bring hither the fatted calf, and kill it; and let us eat and be merry, for this my son was dead, and he is alive again; he was lost, and he is found." (See Luke 15:22-24.)

I have always felt that the Savior intended the father in the parable to typify the Eternal Father of all of us. He knew the rigidity of the Jewish law. He knew what a terrible offense it was to renounce one's patrimony—an unforgivable offense, I assume, in the Jewish household. So he had this wayward son come back to his father, not to be rejected, but to be received and loved. He did not have the younger son restored to all the privileges he had forfeited. The older, more dutiful son, complained of the feast that had been made on the return of his younger brother, but the father consoled him with the statement: "Son, thou art ever with me, and all that I have is thine." And then he repeated to his older boy the words he had said to the younger: "It was meet that we should make merry, and be glad; for this thy brother was dead, and is alive again; and was lost, and is found." (Luke 15:31-32.)

I think it is significant that the Lord made it clear in the parable that the younger son had lost much by his wayward course, but in a measure, at least, he paid for it, with his suffering and degradation. Justice requires that. But when the penalty had been exacted, the fond father's heart was gladdened by the repentance and the return of his son. What an encouragement for repentance! How good to know of the mercy and forgiveness of the Father! Better not to have transgressed, but wonderful to be taken back!

Just as repentance is a divine principle, so is forgiveness. The Lord has said, "I, the Lord, will forgive whom I will forgive, but of you it is required to forgive all men." (D & C 64:10.) If we were more liberal in our forgiveness, we would be more encouraging to repentance. Someone has said that the supreme charity of the world is in obedience to the divine injunction, "Judge not." When the Savior gave that injunction, he was well aware of the limitations of human understanding and sympathy. We can see overt acts, but we cannot see inner feelings nor can we read intentions. An all-wise Providence in making judgment sees and knows all the phases of human conduct. We know but few of the phases, and none very well. To be considerate and kind in judgment is a Christlike attribute.

So may we hold out the merciful, saving principle of repentance to ourselves and to all our Father's children. Let us issue the call as we have been commanded to do, but let it be so tempered in love and humility that all may receive it as a heartfelt invitation to share the glorious principles of the gospel which have come to the earth through revelation in these latter days. Let no brother or sister in the whole family of God feel that he or she has gone beyond the point where error and sin may be left behind and true repentance enlighten the soul with hope and faith.

Many years ago, while visiting one of the missions of the Church, a man asked if he might drive me to my next appointment. I spoke to the mission president, and he said he thought it would be all right. During the course of the journey, this man painfully outlined for me the course of his life. He told me something of his home and of his youth, and then in deep sorrow, he confessed his transgressions. They were very serious, and his consciousness of guilt almost overwhelmed him, and then almost choked with emotion, he asked the question he had premeditated when he sought my company: "Brother Richards, is there any hope for me? Now that I have learned the gospel from the missionaries and have come to understand the kind of life the Lord expects his children to live, the consciousness of my offenses overwhelms me. May I ever be forgiven?" He so shook with sobs that I feared somewhat for his security in the driver's seat.

His deep moving contrition touched my heart. I breathed a silent prayer that I might console and help him. And then I set before him the things I have tried to set before you this day. I gave him the same examples of the merciful principle of repentance and forgiveness, and when I held out to him hope and encouragement, he was consoled, he regained his composure, and in a voice ringing with determination, he cried out, "With the Lord's help I will make myself worthy and regain that I have lost." I was sure the Lord would help him in his effort.

This man did not know, although he must have heard the whisperings of his conscience, how grievous were his transgressions until he heard the true gospel, but members of the Church who have been taught know, and their knowledge brings accountability and responsibility. To them repentance has special significance. They are leaders and teachers to the unenlightened. On their shoulders they carry the weight of the kingdom. Its progress is retarded not so much by lack of effort as by insufficiency of repentance—individual repentance—which is essential to make them profitable servants.

So, my brethren and sisters, in the love and respect which I bear you, I appeal, I entreat you, and I offer encouragement for repentance for all the misdeeds of either commission, or omission, which retard our progress toward the perfect life and destiny the Lord so graciously holds out to beckon us on.

And to my friends and our friends, not of the Church, may I humbly and sincerely hold out this glorious doctrine as the true way to happiness and peace. I call upon all in tones of entreaty and concern to stop damning God, to refrain from intemperate judgment, to be honest and virtuous. If you want peace and happiness, if you have made mistakes, you can repent if you will. The Lord will help you, and he will reward you a thousand times over for your effort. What the world needs is a repentant world, and you may be assured there is no enduring happiness in anything but goodness.

I invoke the blessings of the Lord upon all in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER LEGRAND RICHARDS

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

AS I OCCUPY this position of responsibility this morning, I first express the feelings of my heart of gratitude to the Lord for my membership in this Church and all that it means to me and for my fellowship with the members of the Church. They are wonderful people. If we have listened to the prayers of these stake presidents who have prayed in the conference, we know something of the faith and the leadership ability of the men who preside throughout the stakes of Zion. I feel to say God bless them all, and all you fine people and those who are listening in, who are giving of their time and their talents and their means to help build the kingdom of God in the earth.

One of the great events of the last year as far as the Church is concerned was the choir trip to Europe. I thought I would like to pass on to its members this morning, since they are here, comments that came in a missionary's letter from Berlin a few days ago.

He said, "When we go out tracting now and we announce ourselves as representatives of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, and the people do not quite understand, we say, 'The Mormon Choir that was just here,' and they say, 'Oh, come in.'" The missionaries say the choir has done so much good in opening the doors of the people for them to carry on their missionary work.

I thought since the announcement has been made that these services are being broadcast all over this western part of the United States by television and radio, that for the few moments assigned to me I would like to speak primarily to those who are not members of our Church who might be listening in, and I imagine that notwithstanding the thousands here in this building, and on this temple block that there are even greater audiences listening in over the radio and the television.

I am sure that the building of the temple in Los Angeles has impressed the people who have seen it and the 662,000 who went through during the period that it was open for inspection, and I imagine that there were many of those people who would like to have heard more about this Church and its teachings because of that beautiful edifice.

Two weeks ago last night I was in a group in Los Angeles, and a man who had traveled all around the world indicated that he thought the temple there was the eighth wonder of the world.

When President Clark talked to the Primary officers and teachers who were assembled here last week, he exhorted them to teach the simple truths of the gospel, and I love the simple truths of the gospel. So I would like to preface what I say here today to those who might be listening in with this thought, that I believe that there is not an honest man nor an honest woman in this world who really loves the Lord who would not join this Church if he knew what it was.

When I say really love the Lord I have in mind such as of whom the Master spoke when he said that except a man be willing to forsake father and mother and wife and children and lands and herds and all that he hath, and take his name upon him, "he cannot be my disciple." (See Luke 14:26.)

And that is what he meant when he said that we should seek first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness, and all other things would be added unto us. (See Matt. 6:33.)

There is not a person who has that kind of love of God who would not accept this Church and join it if he really knew what it was, and our mission is to make that known to the world, and hence I appreciate the great missionary cause of this Church.

We are told now that we have over 12,000 missionaries, and nearly half of them are full-time missionaries giving their entire time to tell the world and our brothers and sisters who are not of us, of the marvelous thing the Lord has accomplished in this dispensation. If these people only knew how we love them, how we pray for them, how we pray for the Lord to lead the missionaries to their doors and to give them the ability to explain the truth to them in a convincing manner so that they will really know, I am sure they would realize that there is a sincerity in this Church that might not be found anywhere else in all the world.

I am wondering now if you had lived in the days of the Savior or the Apostle Paul, and you had heard their testimonies, knowing that they were evil-spoken of by all people, would you have believed them? You remember when Paul was brought in chains to Rome, the high priests said, "... we desire to hear of thee what thou thinkest: for as concerning this sect, we know that every where it is spoken against." (Acts 28:22.) Those who join this Church have to pass through and penetrate the opposition and evil things that have been said against us because the war that was started in heaven between Satan and the followers of the Lord is still being fought, and one of his greatest instruments is to try and prejudice the minds of men and women—and therefore the prophets have been put to death through all dispensations.

When Paul stood before Festus and King Agrippa and bore that marvelous testimony, how he had seen a light and heard a voice and how the Son of God said to him, "... Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? It is hard for thee to kick against the pricks," (Acts 26:14) and then as Paul reasoned before these two great Romans he said, "Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you that God should raise the dead?" (Acts 26:8.) To be able to accept the message of Paul in those days that God really had raised the dead, for Christ had been raised from the dead and had appeared to him, was harder, possibly, to believe than the message of the prophet of this dispensation.

You will recall that when that testimony was borne, Festus said, "Paul, thou art beside thyself; much learning doth make thee mad," to which Paul replied, "I am not mad, most noble Festus; but speak forth the words of truth and soberness," to which King Agrippa replied, "Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian." (Acts 26:24-25, 28.)

Now the Prophet Joseph Smith declared that the Father and the Son appeared to him when he was a mere lad, not quite fifteen, and the thing that he could not understand was the prejudice that that statement aroused in the minds of leaders of men and leaders of religion, for he was a boy of no great pretense, just a farmer's boy without education, and he said he could understand, but he said he felt as he imagined Paul felt. He knew that he had seen a light. He knew that he had heard the voices of these two Personages, God the Father and his Son, Jesus Christ. And he said he knew that God knew it, and he dared not deny it because he knew that by so doing he would come under condemnation before God.

Does it seem any more incredible today to believe that the God of heaven and his Son Jesus Christ who was resurrected from the grave should appear to man here upon this earth than to believe that Christ was resurrected, a thing that had never been seen or heard of before at the time of his resurrection?

We read in the scriptures how the Father announced his approval of the Son at his baptism and on the mount of the transfiguration. We read that Stephen gazed into heaven and saw Christ sitting on the right hand of his Father, so we know they do exist, and then think of all that the prophets have foretold for the latter days, and it does not seem incredible that they should usher in this the greatest gospel dispensation of all time by a personal visitation to this earth.

And if they were to come, to whom would they come? The prophet Amos tells us, "Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets." (Amos 3:7.) And when there are no prophets, there is no leadership of God in the world, for his way of leading his people is through his servants the prophets.

We read of when Jeremiah was called to be a prophet. As you will remember, he was young; he could not understand it, so the Lord had to comfort him by saying, "Before I formed thee in the belly I knew thee; and before thou camest forth out of the womb I sanctified thee, and I ordained thee a prophet unto the nations." (Jer. 1:5.)

We know through the declaration of one of the American prophets, as recorded in the Book of Mormon, that Joseph Smith was called before he was born and was in waiting three thousand years before his birth to come forth to usher in this great latter-day gospel dispensation, so that it is no miracle and not a thing incredible to believe that God would raise up a man to do the work that needed to be done in restoring his work to the earth in this dispensation.

Peter saw the latter days. The Christ looked forward to his coming in the latter days. He taught his apostles to pray, "Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven." (Matt. 6:10.) And men and women have prayed that from those days until the present, without ever realizing that those words would literally be fulfilled, that the kingdom of God would be established in earth as it is in heaven. And Peter, speaking to those who put to death the Christ, said that they should repent that their sins might be "... blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord;

"And he shall send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you:

"Whom the heaven must receive," Peter says, "until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." (Acts 3:19-21.)

There is not a man or woman in this world who really loves the Lord who would not accept the truth if he knew what God really had restored in this "restitution of all things spoken by the mouths of all the holy prophets since the world began." That is one of the simple truths declared by the restoration of the gospel through the Prophet Joseph Smith.

Then we have the statement when John was banished upon the Isle of Patmos, and the angel called him and said, "... Come up hither, and I will show thee three things which must be hereafter." (Rev. 4:1.) Now remember, Christ had already been crucified, and then John was shown that in the latter days, "another angel [would] fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel..." (Rev. 14:6) and that is the only gospel that can save men. Jesus said, "But in vain they do worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men." (Matt. 15:9.) And John saw that this angel would have "the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and [every] kindred, and [every] tongue, and [every] people." (See Rev. 14:6.) This truly is a declaration that no one would be in possession of the "everlasting gospel" when that angel would come.

We see the Angel Moroni on the temple here and on the Los Angeles Temple with his trumpet as if he were declaring to the world that:

An angel from on high
The long, long silence broke,
Descending from the sky
These gracious words he spoke.

—Parley P. Pratt

And we have his message of the restoration of the gospel.

When Daniel interpreted King Nebuchadnezzar's dream, and you will remember the king had already forgotten the dream, he said to him, "But there is a God in heaven that revealeth secrets, and maketh known to the king Nebuchadnezzar what shall be in the latter days..." (Dan. 2:28.) And then he declared the rise and fall of the kingdoms of this world until in the latter days, and he mentions that specifically, "... the God of heaven [shall] set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed: and the kingdom shall not be left to another people, and it shall... stand for ever," (Dan. 2:44) and as a little stone it should roll forth until it should become as a great mountain and fill the whole earth. (See Dan. 2:45.)

There are many other prophecies concerning the marvelous work and a wonder the Lord promised to do in the latter days. How could that kingdom be set up in the world just by men studying the scriptures, differing in their interpretation of the words of the prophets? We have to have a prophet of God, for "Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets," and it is our testimony to the world that that kingdom has been established in the earth through the instrumentality of the Prophet Joseph Smith.

Through the work of the missionaries, nearly 22,000 people have left the faith of their fathers during the last year and joined this Church because they have believed these marvelous things, and we bear witness to the world that they are true. Of course, in fifteen minutes I can not tell you much about what has gone on in this world in the restoration of the gospel, but what I have said ought to be sufficient to make you want to know more about it, and our missionaries are available. Among that 22,000 converts are ministers of the gospel, for there are many honest men among them, and this work is going forth under the inspiration of the Almighty, and our missionaries are being led to the honest in heart.

We had a man down in South Carolina, when I was there, who told us that he saw two missionaries in a dream come to his home a year before they actually knocked at his door, and when they knocked at his door, he said, "Come in, you have the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ for me."

Brother and Sister Romney are sitting down here on the front row. He just presided in the Central American Mission. I toured that mission with him a year ago last January, and two of the lady missionaries said they were walking along the street one day, and a man came up to them and said, "I know who you are. I have seen you in a dream. You have the truth. Will you come to our home and teach it to us?"

So I bear you my solemn witness today that there is evidence sufficient to any honest man or any honest woman who really loves the Lord that we do in very deed have the kingdom of God to offer unto them, and I bear you that witness in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

He to whom we have just listened is Elder LeGrand Richards, a member of the Council of the Twelve. Elder Marion D. Hanks of the First Council of Seventy will now address us.

ELDER MARION D. HANKS

Of the First Council of the Seventy

I NEED THE inspiration and guidance of the Holy Spirit and earnestly pray for them this morning.

In our files on Temple Square we have a great many letters from people who have come to us seeking to learn something of the truths which have been testified of here this morning. We have letters from many who have not been here but who have come in contact in some way with the Church or its principles or its people, and who have written to express (so often in almost the same words) what so many here have expressed, that they feel, they sense, they experience among the Latter-day Saints something different from anything they have ever known before.

Friday morning, at the opening session of this conference, we had the pleasure of the presence here of a fine gentleman who had been introduced to us by letter from President George Romney of the Detroit Stake. Prior to that session and following it, we talked for some hours with this wonderful, dedicated man. He had come here to learn a little about this feeling, this sense of dedication, this peace which he said he had experienced among the Mormons. He is a man of real loyalty to principle, whose mind and mouth and life are clean and decent, and who is seeking earnestly to do that which God would have him do.

He wanted to know many things about us. He knew much already. One statement he made, like those which I have quoted, almost to the word, was, "I have been an active, loyal, participating member of a certain church, but I think something is missing." He had come here to try to find out what.

May I bear witness that this experience has happened many times, and that out of it we have extracted the simple lesson that the truths of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ are available here to men, in reality, and that as they seek them and find them and honor them, their lives enjoy a kind of peace and fulfilment they did not know before.

I suppose it is the most fundamental and axiomatic thing we might say of religious faith that to be fruitful and productive of good it has to be based in truth. The fact that there is widespread interest in religion in this nation and the world does not warrant the supposition that all those who have religious interest and religious faith will enjoy the peace and the sense of purpose and the abundant life promised by the Lord to those who would find and follow his way, for it is not enough simply to be "religious" or to be "sincere" in one's convictions. It is not enough to be sincerely convinced of something that is false. We must have faith in true principles and live them courageously if our religion is to help us accomplish God's purposes for us.

The call for faith comes from many quarters. Carl Jung, considered by many to be one of the most important living psychiatrists, is reported recently to have said that among all his patients over thirty-five there was not one whose basic problem was not lack of religious faith. Recently in the Christmas issue of a great magazine there was printed a statement that has much meaning to the Latter-day Saints who know the statement of the prophet Amulek, quoted in Alma, chapter 10, that the prayers and lives of a righteous remnant preserved the land, and who know also that there are other accounts of this same circumstance recorded in the Book of Mormon. Concluding an editorial, the writer said: "No doubt most Americans are less religious than they should be. They then owe a vast and continuing debt to the saving remnant in their midst who do hunger and thirst after righteousness and walk humbly before their God. They do not do this for America's sake, but without them America would be little more than a geographical expression."

A widely known statement made in recent years by a great military leader calls our generation "ethical infants," "moral adolescents."

We join with all those who recognize, as those quoted have been shown to recognize, the great need for honor, integrity, humility, prayerfulness, righteousness, the whole truth—all attributes and characteristics flowing from and concomitant to deep religious faith which is founded on truth.

The witness you have heard expressed here today is that God has in our day restored through living prophets, by revelation, the simple, basic, beautiful, life-giving, peace-bringing truths which men of old knew and which Christ himself came to teach in the Meridian of Time.

May we take time to mention three contributions that the restoration has made in supplying the deep needs of man for religious truth founded in faith? First, I note the answers supplied for the universal problems men have concerning God, themselves, and their relationship with their Creator. Second, the restored Church has had revealed a program for living, a guide to conduct, which can lead one to fruitful, satisfying, purposeful living here in mortality. Third, I speak of the spiritual conviction, confidence, assurance—testimony, we sometimes call it—which will motivate one to think differently, live differently, to be different than he otherwise would be.

The President of the United States is quoted as having said something last year which has special meaning to Latter-day Saints, in connection with the first contribution of the restoration we have mentioned. These are his words: "Whence did we come? Why are we here? What is the true reason for our existence? And where are we going? For the answers we have . . . the faith . . . of our religious convictions."

One of the most important aspects of the restoration is that it supplies answers to these most fundamental spiritual questions. We may learn who we really are, and what our relationship is with Him from whom we came. We are taught that the Bible may be believed when it teaches that we are the children, the literal spirit children, of our Father in heaven. We have assurance that Christ was indeed the Living Son of God, that he came to teach men how to live and died that we might live eternally. We know that men are free and responsible agents in a world where there are alternative forces and courses to choose among, and that we are not only free to choose but also under the necessity of choosing the path and course we shall pursue. Man has within him, in an embryonic sense, those basic attributes which are characteristic of our Father in heaven and which are in him in their fulness. Man is capable of love, mercy, and justice, attributes which have their fullest development in him. We have assurance through the restored gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ that we are literal children of God, that we can become like him, that the ultimate of our possibility is that someday under his guidance we may even participate with him in his great creative work.

The truths of the restoration testify that there was a plan before this world was, and that that plan contemplated our earthly existence, our freedom, and our responsibility, and that when we had left this mortal life, we should continue to live as really and as certainly as we here exist. Moreover, they testify (and this is what first brought the Church to the attention of our friend from the east) that there is a divinely-inspired program for living among us which is designed to lead men to happiness here on this earth. What is that program? You know it well. It is a program of faith, repentance, baptism, and reception of the gift of the Holy Ghost; it is a program requiring an enduring and dedicated hunger and thirst for righteousness, a life of honor and honesty, and a "love of God and of all men."

There are able and sincere men crying out all over the world today for men to

Sunday, April 8

Third Day

"believe," to "believe." But as our friend said Friday, "They do not tell us what to believe or what to do to find happiness."

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints testifies to the world that the program restored by the Master of men in our day is the same program he taught men when he was among them. And as Christ taught men to have faith, to repent of their sins, to be baptized for the remission of those sins, in order that they might receive the gift of the Holy Ghost, so taught Paul and the others. Do you remember the occasion described in the second chapter of Acts, an occasion almost analogous to scenes we hear about in various parts of the world today, when the multitude, having been taught the mission and message of Jesus (but by the apostles who have been "chosen" and "ordained" by Christ so do) found faith in the Messiah, and came to Peter and the others and said; "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" What did Peter answer? Did he tell them to go to some Church, any church, and pursue any program or course they chose, whatever it might be, so long as they were sincere? His answer is recorded in the Holy Bible that all may read:

Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost.

For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call. (Acts 2:38-39.)

It is revealed anew in our day that not only must a man believe, but also that he must believe that which is true, and he must do that which God has commanded.

There is one final thing we spoke of: if one is to learn the answers to the basic spiritual problems of his life and is to pursue a purposeful program fruitfully and happily, he must have a motivation, an "inner aim" our friends sometimes call it, a spiritual assurance, a testimony which will inspire and impell him to learn and to live. The enjoyment of that testimony is one of the great possibilities that has come to us through the restoration of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ.

We testify to you that religious faith is important and urgently necessary, but it must be based in truth. The truth available to all men is that God in our very dispensation has spoken, restoring anew the ancient truths, restoring anew the only gospel, the good word of God for his children.

That testimony is among us; many of us enjoy it. I testify of it humbly, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER ANTOINE R. IVINS

Of the First Council of the Seventy

MY BELOVED brethren and sisters: It is a sobering thought to face you wonderful people and hope to say some encouraging word. My own ministry has been one of an effort to encourage myself and others to do better the things we have to do as members of the Church.

It is almost twenty-five years since I first faced a congregation in this capacity. I have enjoyed those twenty-five years very much. There have been a few echoes come back that help has been rendered to people. When it comes, it is always satisfying.

I believe that without reserve I can bear testimony to every thought which has been delivered in this conference. My hope is that the testimony I undertake to bear to you today may be consonant with the spirit of those to which we have listened and that perchance some help may come from it.

We have heard several times the testimony that Jesus Christ actually is the Son of God, that he was tabernacled in the flesh, that he was resurrected from the dead to open up the privilege for all of us to return to the presence of God and stand judgment for our deeds. We have heard also that in humble prayer the Prophet Joseph Smith succeeded in opening the gates of heaven and having appear to him God the Father and Jesus Christ, through which a renewed testimony as to the individuality of the Father and the Son has come back to the earth.

We have heard also that the heavens were reopened; the Angel Moroni appeared to the Prophet Joseph Smith and instructed him over many occasions in his duties and responsibilities, and further than that that the priesthood was restored through the instrumentality of heavenly beings.

Every one of those questions is a vital question to every member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

I think that all of us here without doubt would testify as to the truth of all of these things. It is that testimony on which the vitality of the Church rests.

Not the least important of all of these events was the restoration of the priesthood, because the priesthood is the order in which the ordinances essential to exaltation in the kingdom of God, when properly observed and when our action justifies it, are performed. Without that priesthood the Church could not function. There is a difference between the gospel and the Church and the priesthood. Each has its function in our lives. The priesthood then becomes as important to us perhaps as any other phase of our existence.

We were told last night of the tremendous priesthood there is in the Church as compared with that of other religious groups. My experience and the checking that I have made over the last two or three years indicates to me that there would be on an average in the stakes of Zion about ten percent of the members of the stakes who bear the Melchizedek Priesthood. That is, when united with simple, pure faith, the greatest power that there is among men.

I represent one group of that priesthood, twenty odd thousand of them. It has been my effort, along with my colleagues over these twenty-five years, to stimulate that group to greater service and greater activity. Now, if it is real, and we testify that it is, that that priesthood has come back and that priesthood is a right to function on behalf of God, our Heavenly Father, in the ordinances essential to man's blessing and happiness, then we who accept it have a tremendous responsibility, and our problem is to magnify that calling.

I take it that every man who allows me to place my hands upon his head and ordain him to an office in that priesthood, promises actually or impliedly that he will do what may be within his power to magnify that calling. It is interesting indeed when we contemplate the possibilities of it.

To show you how near some of us are to the actual restoration of that priesthood, let me tell you this: Joseph Smith received the Melchizedek Priesthood from Peter, James, and John. Joseph Smith ordained Joseph Young a seventy in the Melchizedek Priesthood. Joseph Young ordained my father at the age of seventeen as a seventy in the Melchizedek Priesthood. And my father ordained me an elder. There are others who are closer to it than that. But when we think that we are actually only a step or two away from an ordination by Peter, James, and John to the Prophet Joseph Smith, and when we think that that ordination makes us emissaries and representatives of God our Heavenly Father; when we further think that without the functioning of that priesthood we would never gain an exaltation in the kingdom of God, it is almost overwhelming, is it not?

Now, what do we do about it? I am as much interested in what we are going to do with it as the fact that we have it, and it means that we must work with ourselves and work with those people over whom we can have an influence. We cannot dream ourselves into exaltation. Dreams have no value unless they prove to be incentives for greater activity. It is fine to dream about the possibilities of life, but until we do something about it, those dreams are useless.

When we scan the statistics of the Church, we discover that there are too many, far too many of the people who have accepted this responsibility who do little or nothing about it. There is the group which should have our especial attention. The seventies of the Church are missionaries. Their field of labor is world-wide. Being world-wide, it includes their own households. It is the responsibility of every seventy, of every elder, and every high priest in the Church, first, to purify his own life, bringing it into harmony with the teachings of the gospel, that thereby he may gain the peace of mind and the happiness of which you have just heard, and then after doing that, he has the responsibility of extending his influence and his efforts beyond his own.

I feel that the primary responsibility of us individually is to bring into harmony himself and his household to the teachings of the principles of the gospel. Could we do that, what a wonderful power there would be in the priesthood which we bear.

If we understand our responsibilities, this priesthood is a thing of great power. We have been told today that Satan and his emissaries are rampant in the earth, walking up and down trying to deceive people. God knew that would happen when he placed man on the earth and when he expelled Satan from the heavens, but he, it seems to me, prepared a way to meet it, and that preparation is the life that justifies the receipt of the priesthood and the actual receipt of that priesthood through proper channels.

I believe that it is within the power of every man who holds the Melchizedek Priesthood to say, "Get thee behind me, Satan." Whenever a man holding that priesthood yields to the temptations of the flesh and does the evil that is rampant in the earth, it is an admission on his part that he does not appreciate his priesthood, that he does not accompany the gift of that priesthood with a faith that makes it powerful.

You know and I know, you have had many illustrations of the effective use of the priesthood when it is combined with faith. Besides the healing of the sick, the gift which is not given to all people I admit but which comes only through the union of faith and priesthood, there are many other gracious and wonderful gifts that come to us through the exercise of this priesthood. It is such a tremendous power that if every one of the men who hold the Melchizedek Priesthood would fully magnify his calling, united with a perfect faith, we could almost control the activities of the society in which we live, nation-wide and international. The trouble is that we just do not do it. We do not do what we know we ought to do, and it is saddening to study our statistics and find how many people fail to appreciate this wonderful thing which came back to us in the most miraculous way.

Now, brethren, what are we going to do about it? We have it. It is our privilege to use it. Will we use it wisely or will we let it lie idle and rust out? I hope that we will be conscious of this tremendous responsibility because it is just that, that we will go away from this conference with a conscious responsibility of the priesthood, that when we go back we will bear testimony to our own and to others of the wonderful things that we have heard today, that we will bring our own lives as nearly as possible into complete harmony with the gospel of Jesus Christ, for we have been told today that to attain to the highest exaltation in the kingdom of God, to sit with God in the councils of heaven, enjoying the privileges of eternal progress and eternal increase, that eventually at least we will have to learn to obey all of the commandments of God.

Let us start about it now, brethren and sisters; let us do better tomorrow than we did yesterday or than we have done today, with all of our wonderful resolutions. Let us make tomorrow a better day.

God bless us in the effort, I pray, in the name of Jesus. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Elder Antoine R. Ivins of the First Council of Seventy has just addressed us. We shall now hear Elder Hugh B. Brown, Assistant to the Twelve, who will be our concluding speaker.

ELDER HUGH B. BROWN

I WONDER IF sometimes our people think when they hear each speaker ask for divine guidance that it has come to be just a habit. If you were asked to occupy this position, you would know that that is not the case. For that guidance I humbly pray.

I should like to follow the example of being brief which was set yesterday by President Joseph Fielding Smith. I think he demonstrated the truth of the statement that for a speech to be immortal it does not need to be everlasting.

It is not surprising that Elder LeGrand Richards and I should be thinking along similar lines, because both of us have had missionary experience, and whenever a missionary stands before a congregation of Saints, if there is one single individual present who is not a member of the Church, the missionary will talk to him and ignore all the rest. I should like to follow his lead, if I may, and address what I have to say to you out there, our other brothers and sisters who are not members of the Church, and I think it is not presumptuous to think there are thousands of you listening in.

Since our last April conference, reporters, editors, commentators, and others at home and abroad have given considerable time and space to the Church and its activities. As has been intimated, this results partly at least from the tour of the choir, the dedication of the Swiss and Los Angeles temples, and the announcement of other temples to be built. We appreciate the uniform friendliness and general accuracy of these reports and comments. They have ranged from learned discussions of various phases of the gospel to such brief and inaccurate generalizations as that, "To be a Mormon simply means that one does not drink tea or coffee or use tobacco or liquor."

Now, we do accept and try to live the Word of Wisdom, a law of health, first because the Lord thought enough of it to give a revelation on it and also because for a hundred years we have proved its worth. But there are other things we would like our friends to know about the Church, and so for a few moments I would like to discuss some phases of Mormonism which are not so generally known.

Because of limitation of time and of the speaker, any attempted exposition will be inadequate and incomplete. I should like first, however, to say to you that the conduct of a typical member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, or Mormon, is influenced not so much by prohibitions, inhibitions, or Church discipline as by his own inner convictions regarding the essential dignity and possible glory of the individual, the meaning of life, man's origin, purpose, and possible destiny.

Mormonism is not just a code of ethics; it is not merely a set of inhibitive injunctions; it is not just a theoretical system of doctrine and philosophy. It is rather a way of life, based upon a concept of God as our Eternal Father, and of man, created in the bodily image of God, a son of God, who has all of the obligations, opportunities, and potentials of heirship. The Mormon concept of Deity with its accompanying concept of man's potential Godlike status, should cause believers to resist the down drag of habits and indulgences which are inimical to or would impede or delay man's progress towards his goal.

Perhaps you would like to take a quick look at Mormonism through the eyes of a non-member of the Church who has taken time to study it. I have the author's permission to read some paragraphs from a pamphlet recently published by the department of humanities of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology under the general caption "The Sociology of Mormonism." These studies were made and written by Dr. Thomas F. O'Dea, who has a distinguished academic career at Harvard, at Stanford, and at M.I.T. These writings show careful study, keen analysis, and an enviable facility of expression. I shall read some excerpts:

Of the many churches founded in the regions south of the Great Lakes in the first half of the nineteenth century, the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints or the Mormon Church alone avoided the stagnant back-waters of sectarianism. The need to start over again four times in sixteen years contributed to flexibility and avoided sectarian atmosphere and culture.

And again he says,

In 1847 the Mormons, harassed and persecuted, dispossessed of all but faith, leadership and a superb organization, crossed the plains and settled in the Utah desert. * * * The Mormon leadership deliberately chose an unattractive region to gain the necessary respite that isolation would give, and resisted the seductions of more pleasant prospects.

And then speaking of our Americanism, he said:

Their American patriotism is an Article of Faith with them. * * * The development of a nationhood was inhibited by American patriotic convictions on the part of the Latter-day Saints themselves. Mormonism sees America as a chosen land and holds that the second coming of Christ will be to this continent. America is a divinely-preferred country and the previous periods of history were preparatory for the Mormon restoration. Thus the Mormons, while exalting America and exulting in it, could at the same time feel called out of Babylon to build the city of God. * * * The Mormons are pre-eminently practical and are the typical American religious movement. As such Mormonism presents a heightening, a more explicit formulation and summation of the American experience of time and of America's timeliness.

The Mormon Church defines itself as a restoration in the latter days of the original gospel of Jesus Christ, which had been corrupted and lost in part for the past fifteen centuries. Its restoration is conceived in terms of Christian history. * * * It is a new interpretation of Christianity itself. A unique prophet and a unique and timely moment as well as a uniquely appropriate place are part of this conception. Mormonism holds itself to have been revealed in the fullness of time—a fullness of time which involves the destiny of the Western Hemisphere and the American nation. The discovery of America and the development of the political institutions of the United States are seen as prepared by divine guidance for the restoration which was to be made through the agency of the original prophet, Joseph Smith.

Within this larger framework the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints has its own history, a record of wandering and persecution, of construction and conquest over hostile elements coming to fruition in the building of Zion in the mountain tops. * * * Mormonism lived its Exodus and Chronicles not once but many times. It had its Moses and its Joshua. Circumstances had given it a stage upon which its reenactment of Biblical history was neither farce nor symbolic pageant.

Yes, our history has been in part a reenactment of biblical history, but what is more important, our doctrine is a reaffirmation of biblical truth. We believe in the God of the Old Testament—Jehovah, the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. We believe that that Divine Personage became Jesus the Christ of the New Testament, the Son of God, the Redeemer of the world. We believe that through the atonement of Christ all mankind may be saved by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the gospel. We emphasize "all mankind" and "obedience" because the gospel and its saving ordinances are to be made available to the living on this earth, and to the living elsewhere, with obedience as prerequisite to blessings.

For for this cause was the gospel preached also to them that are dead, that they might be judged according to men in the flesh, but live according to God in the spirit. (1 Peter 4:6.)

Believing as we do in the great vicarious service of the Master which is the very foundation of Christianity, we undertake to do for our dead, what they cannot do for themselves, and therefore we build these temples which you, our friends, have seen and of which you have heard.

We believe in a pre-existent state where we exercised free agency, where there were individual differences, where life was purposeful and progressive, and where man in his original state existed as intelligence.

After referring to "the inestimable contributions to the settlement of the West and the planting there of a viable and vital American civilization," Dr. O'Dea says: "How remarkably familiar are the basic elements of the Mormon gospel, how remarkably like the general apprehension of America by other Americans when it sheds its theological poignancy." He refers to Mormon theology as

A distillation of what is peculiarly American in America and that by incorporating the goals of the present world into a vision of eternal progression the Church succeeded in annihilating for its followers the line of demarcation between time and eternity in quite a new way.

For Mormonism the world is uncreated and God and men are winning mastery over other uncreated elements. God has become a demiurge once again * * * which means one who works on existing material, a craftsman.

All that is, is in process, and it is a process that is marked by two main characteristics: It is becoming increasingly more complex, and intelligent beings, God and men, are collaboratively gaining increasing mastery over it. Man's life on earth is seen as one of an infinity of episodes characterized by increasing development and mastery of the other elements of nature. This concept of God's purpose and method respecting man's existence was clearly stated by the late Dr. John A. Widtsoe, himself a great scholar and a profound student of the gospel,

The law of progression is then a law of endless development of all the powers of man in the midst of a universe, becoming increasingly more complex. No more hopeful principle can be incorporated into a philosophy of life. (A Rational Theology.)

The Lord revealed in the 93rd Section of the Doctrine and Covenants, verse 29,

Man was also in the beginning with God. Intelligence, or the light of truth, was not created or made, neither indeed can be. * * * For man is spirit. The elements are eternal, and spirit and element, inseparably connected, receive a fulness of joy; . . .

On this point Dr. Widtsoe wrote as follows:

In the beginning, which transcends our understanding, God undoubtedly exercised his will vigorously and thus gained great experience of the forces lying about him. As knowledge grew into greater knowledge by the persistent efforts of the will, his recognition of universal laws became greater until he obtained at last a conquest over the universe which to our finite understanding seems absolutely complete.

We proclaim the scriptural and inspiring doctrine that man should look up and not down for his source, for he is of divine lineage; that man is innocent at birth, which is the antithesis of the ball and chain doctrine of original sin and innate wickedness.

Every spirit of man was innocent in the beginning; and God having redeemed man from the fall, men became again, in their infant state, innocent before God. (D & C 93:38.)

Man faces a vista of limitless development, eternal progression, if he will cooperate in winning mastery over himself and the universe. We believe that man's earth life was made possible by Adam's role in a foreordained plan which included the provision for man to come face to face with both good and evil and, under the eternal law of free agency, elect good or evil without compulsion, knowing however that under the immutable law of the harvest he must abide the consequences of his choice, must reap as he sows. Free agency is prerequisite to any character-building plan, and while with free agency any plan is inevitably crammed with risk, we, with all the sons of God, accepted that risk and shouted for joy at the prospect of earth life. The Lord said to Job,

Where wast thou when I laid the foundations of the earth? . . .

When the morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy? (Job 38:4, 7.)

If God is in fact our Father, then we, Father and children, belong to the same society of eternal intelligences. Among them he is supreme, he is the most advanced, most powerful, and most intelligent.

Now the Lord had shown unto me, Abraham, the intelligences that were organized before the world was; and among all these there were many of the noble and great ones. . . .

I am the Lord thy God, I am more intelligent than they all. (Abraham 3:22, 19.)

When we say man may become like our Father, we do not mean to humanize God, but rather to deify man—not as he now is but as he may become. The difference between us is indescribably great, but it is one of degree rather than of kind.

Sunday, April 8

Third Day

But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, . . . (John 1:12.)

To the Latter-day Saints salvation or being saved does not imply a sudden transformation or metamorphosis into something entirely unlike one's nature nor can it be achieved by mere mental assent or sudden conversion. It is rather a continuing process of becoming or unfolding pursuant to law and divine plan, of bringing one's life into harmony with eternal and inexorable law.

We believe that in his infinite and eternal development toward a Godlike status, man moves toward and through a turnstile called death; that there is no interruption of life at this portal, for eternity is indefinitely prolonged time. We believe that man, after passing through this turnstile, will continue his eternal journey from the point where his actions in this life have brought him. "Whatever principle of intelligence we attain unto in this life, it will rise with us in the resurrection." (D & C 130:18.) To deny the possibility of eternal progression is to accept the awful alternative of eventual stagnation which would be damnation.

We believe that being saved involves education, that man cannot be saved in ignorance any more than he can be saved in sin, for as the glory of God is intelligence, or light and truth, so the degree of our intelligence will be the measure of our glory. Neither the ignorant nor the sinner would be comfortable or at home in heaven. This concept glorifies intelligence as well as righteousness. But let us not confuse mere knowledge with intelligence. The knowledge of which we speak must seek enlightenment and be applied with wisdom. The knowledge that will save us is not mere know-how, certainly not cunning or mental agility or sagacity; it is not just erudition. The wise man may not be learned, and the learned are not always wise. The intelligence which is the glory of God is all knowledge (and knowledge is power) applied with supreme wisdom and total righteousness.

Time will not permit a further discussion of our teachings with respect to some of the things that Dr. O'Dea has mentioned. Suffice it to say that Mormonism, among other things, is an eternal quest for knowledge which is power, for truth which is joyous because it makes us free, for intelligence, which is the glory of God, and for the righteousness which will enable us to feel at home in his holy presence.

God help us to live worthily and to go forward fearlessly in our search for truth, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Elder Hugh B. Brown, Assistant to the Twelve, has just addressed us.

For a few moments we should like to add some words of appreciation because many on the Coast who are looking at their televisions may not be with us this afternoon. The attendance at the Priesthood Meeting last evening should be changed because of some telegrams that have come in. We gave you the number of 29,371; 1809 should be added to that, making a total of 31,180 men holding the Priesthood assembled in the Priesthood Meeting last evening.

Words of welcome were extended to you educators this morning and we are glad. We have seen and hope that we have present others, John L. Clarke, President of Ricks College; President Lester Whetten of Snow College; Arthur F. Bruhn of Dixie College. We have not seen Dr. Braithwaite of U.S.A.C. Branch, and I am not sure whether William Miller of Weber is present. We welcome these and two other groups, the presence of members of which indicates the extent of the attendance at this great Conference: our mission presidents who represent areas from Guatemala, Mexico, on the south, to Canada on the north, and our servicemen who represent boys in the service from Greenland on the north to Texas on the south. God bless them.

We should like to express appreciation, too, before we dismiss at this time to those who have sent these beautiful flowers that adorn the rostrum. The Berkeley Stake has graciously furnished us flowers to beautify this building; the calla lilies are messengers of their affection and loyal support. We thank the members of this stake for these gifts. Sister Mary R. Persson of Woodland, California, sent calla lilies and in the note that accompanied it, I read "Grown in my own garden." We wish to extend our thanks to this lady, and to the Puyallup Daffodil Festival, who through the Tacoma Stake in the north sent these beautiful daffodils.

Expression of appreciation to others, many others, we can give at the close of meeting this afternoon.

The singing this morning has been furnished by the Tabernacle Choir, with J. Spencer Cornwall conducting, and Alexander Schreiner has been at the organ. The closing song by the Tabernacle Choir will be, "Glorious, Everlasting." The closing prayer will be offered by Elder Alonzo F. Hopkin, president of the Woodruff Stake, following which this Conference will stand adjourned until two o'clock this afternoon.

The Choir sang an anthem, "Glorious, Everlasting."

Elder Alonzo F. Hopkin, president of the Woodruff Stake, offered the closing prayer.

Conference adjourned until 2 o'clock p.m.

THIRD DAY AFTERNOON MEETING

The concluding session of the Conference convened at 2 o'clock p.m. Sunday, April 8, 1956.

The music for this session was furnished by the Tabernacle Choir, under the direction of J. Spencer Cornwall.

President David O. McKay:

The music for this the seventh and concluding session of the 126th Annual Conference will be rendered by the Tabernacle Choir, under the direction of Elder J. Spencer Cornwall, with Elder Frank W. Asper at the organ.

We shall begin this service this afternoon by the Tabernacle Choir Men's Chorus singing "O My Father," Elder Cornwall conducting, and the prayer will be offered by Elder Dee Lloyd Andreasen, president of the Bannock Stake.

The Choir sang the hymn, "O My Father."

President Dee L. Andreasen, president of the Bannock Stake, offered the invocation.

President David O. McKay:

The invocation just offered was by Elder Dee Lloyd Andreasen, president of the Bannock Stake. The Tabernacle Choir will now sing, "Beautiful Savior," after which Elder Harold B. Lee of the Council of the Twelve will address us.

---

The Choir sang the anthem, "Beautiful Savior."

President David O. McKay:

Our first speaker this afternoon will be Elder Harold B. Lee of the Council of the Twelve. He will be followed by Elder George Q. Morris of the same Council.

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

SEVERAL DAYS AGO my attention was attracted to a picture in one of the local newspapers. The picture shows two men with a shovel setting a highway sign. Within the block "U," which is the official designation of the Utah state highway department, is the figure 187, and then a sign underneath the block "U," which reads: "The shortest designated highway in the state." Then I read the cutlines underneath and the accompanying article which described this short highway as being only one-quarter of a mile in length. It curved

Sunday, April 8

gracefully off to the right of the main highway 91 going south and led down over the brow of the hill, seemingly to invite anyone who wanted to travel that pleasant way. Then I looked more closely to see what the picture was. One of the men in the picture was the warden of the Utah State Penitentiary, and the other was a member of the state prison board. The highway marked U 187 led to a building which I could distinguish at the foot of the hill. With somewhat of a shock I recognized this building as the Utah State Penitentiary. The shortest designated highway in the state was a wide paved road from the mainly traveled road to the state prison!

If I could get the spirit of this great conference, I think probably I would like to title the few words of my brief address this afternoon as "The Shortest Designated Highway in Life" and draw something of a parallel to that other "shortest designated highway" to which I have made reference. As I seek for that guidance, my earnest prayer would be that what I say would be in harmony with the great messages of our beloved leaders, the First Presidency. I suppose there is nothing that a General Authority desires more than that what he does and what he says will be in harmony with their desires, and more than that, what he says would be in harmony with Him of whom we have sung so beautifully at the opening of this service.

This other highway in life is also broad. It is a way to destruction, as the Master explained to his disciples when he said in a very significant statement,

... for wide is the gate, and broad is the way, that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat. (Matt. 7:13.)

I would like now for the next few minutes to talk about that highway because it is clearly blueprinted in the records of life which the Lord has given us. I remember a remark the late President Charles A. Callis made to me one day—we were talking about some of these matters, and he remarked, "You know, I think that probably the most important thing we as General Authorities ought to be preaching is not only repentance from sin, but even more important than that, to teach the young people particularly, and the entire Church generally, the awfulness of sin and the terror that follows him who has so indulged."

Years of experience since that time and interviews with those who have unfortunately taken that short, broad highway, have convinced me that because of their suffering, those who have or are living lives of unrepented sinning would have given all that they possessed if someone could have warned them and could have told them of the awfulness of the sins from which they now suffer.

Nephi predicted and spoke of the sad state of those who habitually sinned and would not repent when he said:

For the Spirit of the Lord will not always strive with man. And when the Spirit ceaseth to strive with man then cometh speedy destruction, and this grieveth my soul. (2 Nephi 26:11.)

Mormon described some people, his people, from whom the spirit of the Lord had departed, and when I read that and then read what I shall now read to you, it seems clear to me that what he was talking about was not merely the inability to have the companionship of or the gift of the Holy Ghost, but he was talking of that light of truth to which every one born into the world is entitled and will never cease to strive with the individual unless he loses it through his own sinning. This is what Mormon said:

For behold, the Spirit of the Lord hath already ceased to strive with their fathers; and they are without Christ and God in the world; and they are driven about as chaff before the wind.

... behold, they are led about by Satan, even as chaff is driven before the wind, or as an vessel is tossed about upon the waves, without sail or anchor, or without anything wherewith to steer her; and even as she is, so are they. (Mormon 5:16, 18.)

The story is told of the late President Calvin Coolidge who was a master of few words in his expressions. He came home from his church meeting one morning, and his wife asked, "What did the preacher talk about this morning?" His reply was, "Sin." She again asked "What did the minister say about it?" His reply was, "The minister was agin' it." And so are all preachers of righteousness, they are against this thing called sin.

What is sin? The Apostle John described it or defined it as the transgression of the law.

Whosoever committeth sin transgresseth also the law; for sin is the transgression of the law. (1 John 3:4.)

Brigham Young made that definition still more meaningful when he said that "Sin consists in doing wrong when we know and can do better and it will be punished with a just retribution in the due time of the Lord." (J of D 2:242.)

The source of sin is a subject oft debated and theorized by philosophers and others as to how it originates and from whence it comes, but we with the sacred scriptures are left with a certainty which removes all question as to the author and the beginning of sin. The record tells us that Satan came among the children of Adam and Eve and said unto them:

I am also a son of God; and he commanded them, saying: Believe it not; and they believed it not, and they loved Satan more than God. And men began from that time forth to be carnal, sensual, and devilish. (Moses 5:13.)

And then King Benjamin taught:

... neither will ye suffer that they transgress the laws of God, and fight and quarrel one with another, and serve the devil, who is the master of sin, or who is the evil spirit which hath been spoken of by our fathers, he being an enemy to all righteousness. (Mosiah 4:14.)

The Master understood how powerful was this master of sin when he spoke of him as the "Prince of this world," and he taught his disciples to pray that they might not be led into temptation.

This like that other highway to the Utah state prison is also a very short highway down the road of sin. You will remember the Lord's warning to Cain when he said,

If thou doest well, shalt thou not be accepted? and if thou doest not well, sin lieth at the door. . . . (Gen. 4:7.)

It is just that short to the way of sin—right at our very doors.

Now the scriptures have told us about the identity of those who are going to inhabit that prison which lies at the end of that short highway:

These are they who are liars, and sorcerers, and adulterers, and whoremongers, and whosoever loves and makes a lie.

These are they who suffer the wrath of God on earth.

These are they who suffer the vengeance of eternal fire.

These are they who are cast down to hell [and that is the name of the prison] and suffer the wrath of Almighty God, until the fulness of times, when Christ shall have subdued all enemies under his feet, and shall have perfected his work. (D & C 76:103-106.)

And again, the nature of the punishment which shall be received in that prison is clearly explained:

"For behold," said the prophet Amulek, "if ye have procrastinated the day of your repentance even until death, behold, ye have become subjected to the spirit of the devil, and he doth seal you his; therefore the Spirit of the Lord hath withdrawn from you, and hath no place in you, and the devil hath all power over you; and this is the final state of the wicked." (Alma 34:35.)

Now as to the location of that place, reference is made to it in these words:

And the end thereof, neither the place thereof, nor their torment, no man knows. (D & C 76:45.)

Like all broad highways of life which beckon to that prison, there are allurements which we are oftentimes encouraged to follow. As Father Lehi explained to his son, Jacob

... it must needs be that there was an opposition; even the forbidden fruit in opposition to the tree of life; the one being sweet and the other bitter. (2 Nephi 2:15.)

In other words, he set the tree of the knowledge of good and evil in opposition to the tree of life. The fruit of the one which was "bitter" was the tree of life, and the forbidden fruit was the one which was "sweet to the taste."

James Russell Lowell caught this great truth in his poem, "The Present Crisis:"

Careless seems the great Avenger; history's pages but record

Sunday, April 8

Third Day

One death-grapple in the darkness 'twixt old systems and the word;
Truth forever on the scaffold, wrong forever on the throne,
Yet that scaffold sways the future, and, behind the dim unknown
Standeth God within the shadow, keeping watch above his own.

We see some of the signs which like the signs to the state penitentiary we know lead us downward. Some are called taverns; some are called lounges; and some are called roadhouses. They have bright, neon-lighted signs outside with catch-phrase names. They are dimly lighted inside; they have sensuous music. These are the unmistakable trademarks of the hell holes of Satan.

Nephi spoke of some teachings against which we must be on guard lest we follow that road, when he said that in a day to come, which we realize now is our day, there would be those who would "teach us to become angry against that which is good, to lull us away into carnal security and to flatter us by telling us there is no devil, there is no hell." (See 2 Nephi 28:20-22.)

In President Joseph Fielding Smith's impressive discourse this morning over the CBS broadcast, he explained the meaning and the need of a Redeemer, in order to redeem a "fallen" world. The "fall," by which men became subject to the temptation of the devil, is as necessary to the progress of man as is the creation.

Dr. J. M. Sjodahl makes this rather interesting comment:

Some have asserted that the story of the fall is but a myth, or an allegory, but it is given in the Scriptures as part of the history of the human family, and must be either accepted as such, or rejected as fiction. The fall was as necessary for the development of the race as was the creation.

Now mark you this statement: "The story of the first fall is, moreover, the story of every sin." (D & C Commentary, 1919 edition, p. 211.)

Now consider, for illustration, the various sins; the breaking of the Word of Wisdom, unchastity, dishonesty, etc. and then think of what is said here:

Temptation begins with doubt as to the truth of the prohibition. "Has God said?" [is always the question of him who doubts and is tempted to sin.] "It is continued by a contemplation of the pleasure that may be derived from doing that which has been prohibited. It ends with a sense of shame and degradation and dread of the presence of God. Such is the beginning and development of every transgression. (Idem.)

Now the way to eternal life has fortunately been marked out just as plainly. There sits in this congregation a young woman who was about to fail in her faith because of a sudden sorrow which she was not quite prepared to bridge over after having been a convert of a few years. She had a dream in which she saw herself going back to the church of her previous acquaintance. As she drove along in her car, she came to a road which she took only to find that it was a road under construction, and after ten tortuous miles returning she found to her amazement that there were plain warning signs all along the way which, if she had observed, would have guided her along a safe detour road and passed the shoals of difficulty.

Well, the Master said it:

Enter ye in at the strait gate: . . .

Because strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it. (Matt. 7:13-14.)

As Jesus was teaching in the cities and villages towards Jerusalem as to what the kingdom of heaven was like, one asked him, "Are there few that be saved?" That question reminded me of the remark of a good friend of mine who had heard one of the brethren talk about the requirements in order to attain the celestial kingdom. This friend said to me somewhat wearily after he had heard the sermon, "He has made it so difficult that I don't think anyone could qualify for the celestial kingdom."

Contrary to that, the Master said,

Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls.

For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light." (Matt. 11:29-30.)

When you think about it there is so much promised in the gospel for so little required on our part; for example, the ordinance of baptism is given us for the remission of sins, for entrance into the kingdom—a new birth; the gift of the Holy Ghost gives us the right to companionship with one of the God-head; administration to the sick, qualifies the individual with faith for a special blessing; by paying our tithing, the windows of heaven may be opened unto us; by fasting and by paying our fast offerings, we are told that then we might call on the Lord and he will hear our cry and our call; celestial marriage promises us that family life will exist beyond the grave. But all of these blessings are ours on one condition, and this is spoken of by Nephi, when he said:

For we labor diligently to write, to persuade our children and also our brethren, to believe in Christ, and to be reconciled to God; for we know that it is by grace that we are saved, [but mark you this condition,] after all we can do. (2 Nephi 25:23. Italics added.)

The Master did not directly answer that question, "Are there few that be saved?" But he answered, "Strive to enter in at the strait gate." Strive means to struggle in opposition or contention, to contend, to battle for or against a person or a thing opposed, to strive as against temptation, and to strive for truth.

Well, in all that striving, remember Temple Bailey's parable for mothers: "The young mother said to the guide at the beginning of her way, 'Is the way long?' And the guide replied, 'Yes, and the way is hard, and you will be old before you reach the end of it. But the end will be better than the beginning.'"

Oh, that we might think of these warnings and remember the prayer of the Prophet Joseph in the midst of his persecutions, when he cried out, asking why the Lord would not see and hear the sufferings of the Saints, and then hear the Lord answer:

My son, peace be unto thy soul; thine adversity and thine afflictions shall be but a small moment;

And then, if thou endure it well, God shall exalt thee on high; thou shalt triumph over all thy foes. (D & C 121:7-8.)

Oh, may we pray the prayer of the Alcoholics Anonymous, those men who are striving to come back: "O Lord," they pray, "give me the humility to accept the things I cannot change, and the courage to change the things I can change, and then the wisdom to tell the difference."

And may we pray that prayer which I heard set to beautiful music at a stake conference just recently:

Lord, when the twilight of life is falling
Help me and guide me where you want me.
Lord, when I hear that your voice is calling,
Make me worthy to abide with thee.

Lord, when I feel that at times I'm straying Lead me, O Lord, lead me aright.
Send forth thy light and thy love I'm praying
That the dark and dreary way be bright.

Lord, give me faith that I may heed thy call
Lord, give me strength that I may never fall.
Help me to find the path that thou hast trod,
Help me to love, and obey thee, my Lord, my God.

—C. S. Thornwall

Which I pray humbly for all of us, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ.
Amen.

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

MY DEAR brethren and sisters: I have enjoyed thoroughly these wonderful conference sessions, and now in this position I sincerely pray that the beautiful spirit that has pervaded every session may lead me to say that which is true and what the Lord would have me say.

I had thought I might say something about the atonement. I was just freshening up on it this morning a few minutes before eight, but I wanted to

Sunday, April 8

Third Day

tune in and hear President Smith's talk, and as I tuned in I thought to myself, "I am sure that President Smith is going to talk about the atonement," which he did. So I refer you to his beautiful talk this morning, concise and authoritative, and I say "amen" to it.

I should like to mention in the few moments that I shall be here, something with relation to the atonement, and that it might be fresh in your mind, I wish to read that beautiful statement of Lehi, the great prophet, referring to certain aspects of the atonement:

And now, behold, if Adam had not transgressed he would not have fallen, but he would have remained in the garden of Eden. And all things which were created must have remained in the same state in which they were after they were created; and they must have remained forever, and had no end.

And they would have had no children; wherefore they would have remained in a state of innocence, having no joy, for they knew no misery; doing no good, for they knew no sin.

But behold, all things have been done in the wisdom of him who knoweth all things.

Adam fell that men might be; and men are, that they might have joy. (2 Nephi 2:22-25.)

What a wonderful statement that is. So it was the design of our Father in heaven that man should have an earth experience and that Adam should fall and that transgression and sin should come into the world which called for the atonement.

Now, I think the principle question before us is not do we comprehend the atonement, but do we accept it and know that it is true. Many things about us we do not comprehend; as one speaker said, with respect to electricity, the scientific men say they do not know all about it, do not know much about it, they do not know what it is. They know how it acts, but they do not know why it acts, and yet we all avail ourselves of the blessing of electricity without comprehending it.

I think it is exactly the same with the glorious principle of atonement. If electricity in our highly developed civilization were taken out of our lives, our civilization would stop, it is so integrated into our activities. And if the principle of the atonement were taken away, what would be the result? We would have no Jewish scriptures, we would have no Jewish people. There would have been no covenant with Abraham. We would have no New Testament. We would have no gospel of Jesus Christ, for the atonement is the foundation of it all.

And what would spirit world existence mean, what objective would it have, if there were nothing beyond our existence in the spirit world, because God found it necessary for us to come to the earth to get our experience, to gain a body, to pass through death, to be raised an immortalized and glorified being so that we might go on to perfection. Without the atonement there would have been no creation of an earth because that would have meant that we would have all come to the earth as is stated by Lehi, and after transgression had occurred, death would follow, and the earth would be merely the eternal graveyard of the sons and daughters of God. That would have been the end.

The Lord would not undertake to create an earth for that end. An earth life would never have been planned except for this glorious principle of the atonement. And would we have an heaven without the principle of the atonement, would we ever have had an existence in heaven as spirit children of God without the atonement, for God the Eternal Father is a being, a Glorified Being of flesh and bone, exalted and celestialized, and that comes through death and the resurrection by means of the atonement. Unless spirit and matter are inseparably connected, we cannot have a fulness of joy. And if they are so connected, we may have joy in its fullest degree, which I would say means attainment, achievement, exaltation. We must come to the earth; we must have earth life; we must go through death; and we must be exalted and glorified through the power of God and through the gospel and the resurrection.

None of these things would have been possible or contemplated or planned or carried out without this glorious principle of atonement, the Son of God dying for all the children of men. We may not be able to comprehend it, in its fulness, but we can know it, and we can understand how the Son of God, the Firstborn among all the children of God, dying for all the rest, would gain power and influence over the children of men, and we can understand what their love should be for him and their devotion should be towards him because his suffering was such that no human being could endure it. He accepted it. It was so terrible that he almost wished that he might not have to endure it. But he accepted it and glorified his Father in heaven and made possible our earth life, our resurrection, our exaltation, and the blessings of eternal life.

It is impossible for me to understand why so-called Christian men and men of intelligence try to rob the Lord Jesus Christ of his Messiahship. It can only be because of their darkness. Scholarship, barren and cold, does not comprehend life and does not give us the key to this life.

Our relationship with God our Eternal Father is a relationship of our hearts, and a pure heart is wiser and more intelligent than a barren intellect.

We are called upon to love God with all our hearts and our fellow men as ourselves; and by this glorious principle of the atonement, we are here today through the mercy and blessings of God.

May we always remember that we are the children of God; may we live like the children of God. Thank God for the truth, the most glorious, the strongest, most wonderful thing in the world or in the eternities. Thank God for the restored truth. I bear my witness that the truth is here in this Church and kingdom of God, and the power of God is here unto our salvation. Jesus Christ is our Messiah; he said those who would not accept his Messiahship would die in their sins, and I bear witness this is true, and that those who will accept his Messiahship may be redeemed and exalted.

I bear my humble witness that Joseph

Smith was a Prophet of the Living God, through whom the Lord restored these glorious truths for the salvation of the human family. I thank God for him and his successors, and I bear witness that all the keys and powers that the Lord gave to Peter, James, and John are here resident now in those who are in our midst. May God help us to be true in all things, I humbly pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Elder George Q. Morris of the Council of the Twelve has just addressed us.

We have had many telegrams stating how well the exercises, addresses, and testimonies of this Conference have gone over the various radio stations. We cannot read them all, but here is one that has just come, which I am constrained to read for the benefit of parents who may have boys in this group. It is addressed to the General Authorities from Fort Knox:

"Though unable to be present at Conference or reach you by radio or television our thoughts and prayers are with you. We sustain you in your callings. With the help of the Lord our servicemen's group is prospering here at Fort Knox. Fort Knox Servicemen's group, Melvin Banner, President."

And here is one just handed in from Elder Benson:

"Washington. President David O. McKay. My thoughts and prayers are with you all in Conference. My loneliness was eased this afternoon when a member of the Washington Stake presidency returned from Salt Lake and reported the inspirational Priesthood Meeting of last night to an overflow meeting in the Washington Chapel. Affectionate greetings to all. God bless you. Ezra Taft Benson."

Elder El Ray L. Christiansen, Assistant to the Twelve, will now speak to us.

THE WONDERFUL addresses, the singing, and all that has pertained to the conference, including the prayers of the brethren, have found lodgment in my soul. I am determined to leave here and live a better life, and to do some things better that I may not have done so well. I hope, brethren and sisters, that all of us will have that determination. Someone said, "He who learns and learns and acts not what he knows, is like the man who plows and plows and never sows." So I hope that we can go from here and sow seeds of righteousness in our own homes and hearts and among others.

Sunday, April 8

Now I pray in all humility that my brief and sketchy message may not detract from that which has been said and that I may have your sympathy and prayers in presenting what I have to say. I speak in the spirit of commendation and encouragement and not in the way of fault-finding or criticism.

I believe, my brethren and sisters, that there is a need in the world for emphasis to be given to a great principle of which the Lord has spoken many times and which his apostles, old and modern, have advocated. That is the need of our being more charitable, and I assume that need exists among us. I know that it exists with me. I do not have in mind at this moment the relief of the suffering through the giving of our substance; that is a necessary and proper principle, of course, but rather I have in mind the kind of charity that is demonstrated in being lenient and tolerant in judging others and in judging their action; the kind of charity that forgives those who accuse us wrongfully, who misinterpret our intentions; the kind of charity that is patient in the presence of those who are quick to judge us.

I have in mind the charity that impels us to be sympathetic, compassionate, and merciful, not only in times of sickness and affliction and distress, but also in times of weakness or error on the part of others.

We are taught that he that is merciful shall be rewarded in kind. The Lord has said, "Blessed are the merciful: for they shall obtain mercy." (Matt. 5:7.) I speak of the kind of charity that not only forgives but also that forgets the acts of those who trespass against us, who offend us, who hurt us. There is need of that brand of charity, if I may call it such, which causes one to refuse to speak of or to repeat unkind remarks which are said about another—even though they may be true! The more perfect one becomes, the less he is inclined to speak of the imperfections of others.

There is need of that kind of charity that gives hope to those who are unnoticed, those who are discouraged, and the afflicted. There is need of charity that can instill into the hearts of those who have made mistakes the desire to repent and to seek forgiveness of those against whom they may have done wrong. After all, true charity is love in action. And it seems to me that the need of charity, like the need of God, is everywhere.

There is need of that type of charity which refuses to find satisfaction either in hearing or in repeating or broadcasting the reports of misfortunes that befall others, unless in so doing the unfortunate one may be benefited.

Horace Mann once said: "To pity distress is but human; to relieve it is Godlike."

There is need for the kind of charity that causes one to refuse to be a tale-bearer among the people, for, as the Apostle James taught,

If any man among you seem to be religious, and bridleth not his tongue, but deceiveth his own heart, this man's religion is vain. (James 1:26.)

Never, in my opinion, has there been recorded a more eloquent and appealing discourse or communication on the subject of charity than that found in the first epistle of Paul to the Corinthian Saints, with which you are all well acquainted, but which I hope you will permit me to bring to you again:

Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, and have not charity, I am become as sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal.

And though I have the gift of prophecy, and understand all mysteries, and knowledge; and though I have all faith, so that I could remove mountains, and have not charity, I am nothing.

And though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, and though I give my body to be burned, and have not charity, it profiteth me nothing.

Charity suffereth long, and is kind; charity envieth not; charity vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up.

Doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil;

Rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth;

Beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things.

Charity never faileth: . . .

And now abideth faith, hope, charity, these three; but the greatest of these is charity. (I Cor. 13:1-8, 13.)

At the conclusion of one of the last sessions of a general conference, back in 1902, I believe it was, President Joseph F. Smith appealed to the members of the Church in these words:

"We hope and pray that you will go from this conference to your homes feeling in your hearts and from the depths of your souls to forgive one another and never from this time forth bear malice toward another fellow creature! I do not care whether he is a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints or not, whether he is a friend or foe, whether he is good or bad. It is extremely hurtful for any man holding the priesthood, enjoying the gift of the Holy Ghost to harbor the spirit of envy or malice, or retaliation, or intolerance toward or against his fellow man. We ought to say in our hearts: 'Let God be judge between me and thee, but as for me, I will forgive!' I will say unto you, that Latter-day Saints who harbor feelings of unforgiveness in their souls are more censurable than the one who has sinned against them. Go home and dismiss envy, and hatred from your hearts; dismiss the feeling of unforgiveness; and cultivate in your souls the spirit of Christ which crieth out on the cross: 'Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do.'"

"... except ye have charity," Moroni said in his farewell message to the Lamanites, "ye can in nowise be saved in the kingdom of God; neither can ye be saved in the kingdom of God if ye have not faith; neither can ye if ye have no hope." (Moroni 10:21.)

His father, Mormon, spoke of charity in these words: "But charity is the pure love of Christ, and it endureth forever; and whosoever is found possessed of it at the last day, it shall be well with him.

"Wherefore, my beloved brethren, pray unto the Father with all the energy of heart, that ye may be filled with this love, which he hath bestowed upon all who are true followers of his Son, Jesus Christ; that ye may become the sons of God; that when he shall appear we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is; . . ." (Moroni 7:47-48.)

And in the words of Mormon, I pray, as he prayed, "that we may have this hope; that we may be purified even as he is pure," in the name of Jesus Christ, the Lord. Amen.

ELDER CLIFFORD E. YOUNG

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve Apostles

SOMEONE SUGGESTED in his opening prayer that this had been the most outstanding conference he had ever attended. I think we all feel that way as we come to the end of this very impressive service that has now been held for these three days. What I say this afternoon, my brethren and sisters,

I hope will not in any way detract from the sweetness of spirit that we all feel.

I desire to make a few comments, and they could be enlarged upon if time would permit, prompted by the inspired address of President McKay in the opening session of this conference in which he gave us a great ideal, an ideal of what a home and our lives ought to be. I do not know how you felt about it, but after President McKay had finished, I felt in my heart that I would from now on like to be just a little kinder and a little more considerate, less impatient, less impulsive. I would like to be able to offer counsel, and I would like to be worthy to offer that counsel to our boys and girls, our youth.

I would like them to feel as we felt that in a home of a Latter-day Saint may be found the finest concepts of life, a pattern of life, that when our young people take upon themselves the responsibilities of a home, they may lay such a foundation that will ultimately give them the same type of home as President McKay so impressively portrayed to us.

As our leader spoke, he spoke authoritatively. We had that demonstrated Saturday in the impressive address of Brother Thomas E. McKay, my colleague. I have been in his home; I know the sweetness of spirit there. And he reflected yesterday in his address those high ideals and great virtues as he told of the home life from which he came. We knew again of the power of example that we have had demonstrated to us by these two of our beloved brethren.

I have a little concern for our young people. Last night I read some figures in the Deseret News. I want to call attention to these figures and some of the comments of the writer of the editorial. I quote from the editorial entitled "Lengthening Debt's Shadow": "Economists and economizers—home, business and government—have reason to raise an eyebrow over the fact that the nation has posted a record increase of $660 million debt for installment buying of goods other than autos since a year ago.

"For these types of goods, Americans are now in debt $6¼ billions.

"This is not all they owe, either. Americans have also increased their pay-by-the-month personal loans to 5½ billions. This is a gain of $733 millions, or 15% in the space of 12 months. . . ."

This does not include the purchasing of homes. This just refers to consumer debts.

The danger there, my brethren and sisters, as I see it, lies in our young people undertaking obligations they cannot meet. It has always seemed to me that a young man was justified in going in debt for a home, provided that obligation did not exceed his ability to pay. A young man should not feel that when just starting out in life he should have as good a home as his father. His father probably has struggled for many years to get his home. But a young man and woman starting out should take into consideration the fact that his parents had little to start with and that they are starting from the beginning, and theirs should be a humble home. The tendency today, however, is to build and buy extravagantly, frequently beyond the ability to pay.

And that is not the only difficulty. In addition to the obligations incident to a home are the obligations incident to this consumer buying. We think we must have all of the gadgets, all of the conveniences that are advertised. They are desirable to have. They are convenient. No one would refuse a mother an electric washer, an electric dryer, a freezer, if we could afford them. No one would refuse his children television or a radio or a good car, if he could afford them. But brethren and sisters, if we are going to maintain the high standard, the spiritual standard of our homes, we must safeguard ourselves and our children against obligations that will bring sorrow and friction into the home and that will upset the high standards that we want to preserve for them.

This is the reason that I mention these things, and much more could be said about them. I have seen so many cases of sorrow and suffering incident to too much debt. It has been my experience now for over forty years to be connected with financing. I have seen young couples start out happily in life and finally bring to themselves distress, not only financially, but also spiritually and emotionally, all because their debts had reached a point where they could not pay them. They became upset, and friction and quarreling ensued, which brought about a condition in the home that is in contravention to the spirit and the ideals taught us in this conference.

I hope you will not consider it presumptuous on my part if I offer a word of caution to our young people against these practices. We should teach our boys and girls to have honor above everything else, honor in paying their debts.

Someone in this conference spoke of bonds, not government bonds, but a bond of integrity and honor. We need to teach that to our children and to ourselves. Somewhere I read of an old Chinese practice. If a young man wanted to borrow money (I do not know how it is now) but in the days of the older civilization, if a Chinese boy wished to borrow money, he would go to the banker and tell him, "I am a son of Lu Sing. I would like to borrow a thousand dollars." And the banker, knowing the integrity of Lu Sing, would lend the boy the thousand dollars without a scratch of a pen. There was nothing but a verbal contract because the banker knew of the integrity of the family, the honor of the family, and he knew that the family would not let him down, even if the boy should fail, and rarely did the boy fail. It is a striking example of the value of one's word, and we can well adopt it in our lives—not necessarily the practice of it, but the intrinsic value of honor and integrity that our word is as good as our bond.

Young people, do not go into debt beyond your ability to pay. Let us as parents help them to avoid these pitfalls.

Now, one other thought. As President McKay spoke of the ideal home and the love of home, I thought of an ideal home back in 1820, of a boy who came into that home one spring morning to tell his father and mother of a great revelation, and the father and mother believed the boy. His brother Hyrum believed him, and his brother Alvin. Hyrum was twenty, six years older than the Prophet, and Alvin was eight years older, he being over twenty-two.

It is significant, my brethren and sisters—a fourteen-year-old boy telling his father and mother of the greatest revelation of all time since the birth of the Savior and having his parents and brothers and sisters believe him. From that time on there was loyalty and devotion in that home. The boy was to instruct his father, not in unkindness but in love, because his father believed in him, his mother believed in him. If there had been any element of fraud, if the boy had been inclined to tell an untruth, the parents would have known it; his brothers would have detected it, and the mother, above all others, would have known it. She would not have talked about it, but she would have known it, keeping the boy's weakness wrapped up in her own soul. Mothers generally protect their children regardless of their weaknesses.

I repeat, they believed in their boy, and to me that has always been an example of a perfect home, an ideal home. Confidence, faith, love and devotion were to be exemplified throughout the life of the boy. Hyrum was to give his life as a witness of his confidence in his younger brother and the divinity of his calling. His father, too, was to suffer persecution that was to cause an early death.

You will recall the night the Angel Moroni appeared to Joseph Smith and revealed to him the sacred record from which the Book of Mormon was to be translated. In the morning, Joseph, somewhat weary, having been awake most of the night, went to the field to assist his father. "You look weary, my boy, go back to the house and rest." As he reached the edge of the field, the Angel again appeared to Joseph and instructed him to tell his father. He returned to his father in the field and rehearsed the whole matter to him. His father replied to him, "It was of God. Do as commanded by the messenger."

And there was no failure, and I submit to you, my brethren and sisters, that here we have an example of a perfect trust between father and son, an example of what should be in an ideal home. That home was a humble one, probably with candlelights, certainly no modern conveniences, but a home in which abounded love, trust, confidence, and faith, and from that faith and that home was to come the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

I bear you my witness in the name of Jesus. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Elder Clifford E. Young, Assistant to the Twelve, has just concluded speaking. Elder Spencer W. Kimball of the Council of the Twelve will now address us.

ELDER SPENCER W. KIMBALL

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

MY BELOVED brothers and sisters and friends: This has been a most inspirational experience in three days of general conference.

Elder Clifford E. Young has been speaking of the boy who communed with Jehovah. We all sang that song a few moments ago, "Praise to the Man Who Communed with Jehovah." I should now like to pay my devotion to that Jehovah with whom he communed, my Lord Jesus Christ. I love him with all my heart. We are coming to the close of this great gathering. For seven sessions every prayer has been made in the name of Jesus Christ. Every one of the many eloquent sermons has closed in the name of Jesus Christ. I think they have all begun with it also, sometimes unexpressed.

Mention has already been made of the meeting that was held in the temple on Thursday, prior to the beginning of this conference—a preparation meeting for all of the members of the General Authorities. It was a meeting of fasting and the Sacrament, of prayer and testimony. There were appeals unto our Heavenly Father that this great conference might touch the hearts of the many people who would listen, and as one of the concluding speakers I should like to bear witness that the Lord has answered those prayers, for it has been an inspirational conference, and our Brethren have spoken with great strength and power, and each one has inspired me.

In my files I find a description of the Savior written by one who gave his own artistic concept. I give it to you without author as it came to me:

There lives at this time in Judea a man of singular virtue whose name is Jesus, whom the barbarians esteem as a prophet; but his followers love and adore him as the offspring of God. He calls back the dead from the graves and heals all sorts of diseases with a word or a touch. He is a tall man, well shaped, an amiable and reverent aspect, his hair of a color that can hardly be matched, falling into graceful curls, waving about and very agreeably couching upon his shoulders, parted on the crown of his head, running as a stream to the front after the fashion of the Nazarites. His forehead is high, large, imposing; his cheeks without spot or wrinkle, beautiful with a lovely red, his nose and mouth formed with exquisite symmetry; his beard, and of a color suitable to his hair, reaching below his chin and parted in the middle like a fork; his eyes, bright blue, clear and serene look innocent, dignified, manly and mature; in proportion of body most perfect and captivating, his arms and hands delectable to behold. He rebukes with majesty, counsels with mildness, and his whole address, whether in word or deed, being eloquent and grave. No man has seen him laugh, yet his manners are exceedingly pleasant, but he has wept frequently in the presence of men. He is temperate, modest, wise—a man for his extraordinary beauty and divine perfection, surpassing the children of men in every sense.

Also in the temple meeting above mentioned, President McKay read to us a paragraph describing the Master, and if I may have his permission I should like to repeat it to you:

Description of Christ

The following epistle is said to have been taken by Napoleon from the records of Rome when he deprived that city of so many valuable manuscripts. It was written at the time and on the spot where Jesus commenced his ministry, by Publius Lentulus, Governor of Judea, to the senate of Rome, Caesar, emperor. It was the custom in those days for the governor to write home any event that transpired while he held his office.

Conscript Fathers: In these our days appeared a man named Jesus Christ, who is yet living among us, and of the Gentiles is accepted as a prophet of great truth; but his own disciples call him the son of God. He hath raised the dead and cured all manner of diseases. He is a man of stature somewhat tall and comely, with a ruddy countenance, such as the beholder may both love and fear. His hair is the color of filbert when fully ripe, plain to his ear, whence downward it is more of orient color, curling and waving on his shoulders; in the middle of his head is a seam of long hair, after the manner of the Nazarites. His forehead is plain and delicate; the face without spot or wrinkle, beautiful with a comely red, his nose and mouth are exactly formed; his beard is the color of his hair and thick, not of any length but forked.

In reproving he is terrible; admonishing, courteous; in speaking, very modest and wise; in proportion of body, well-shaped. None have seen him laugh, many have seen him weep. A man for his surpassing beauty excelling the children of men.

Whether authentic or not I do not know, but it may stir our imaginations.

I have a little paragraph from another writer, Charles Edward Jefferson, who says,

But when we come to Jesus, we find ourselves in the presence of a man without a flaw. He was enthusiastic, blazing with enthusiasm, but he never became fanatical. He was emotional. Men could feel the throbbing of his heart, but he never became hysterical. He was imaginative, full of poetry and music, seeing pictures everywhere, throwing upon everything he touched a light that never was on land or sea, the inspiration of a poet's dream. But he never was flighty. He was practical, hard-headed, matter-of-fact, but he was never prosaic, never dull. His life always had in it the glamour of romance. He was courageous, but never reckless; prudent, but never a coward; unique, but not eccentric; sympathetic, but never sentimental. Great streams of sympathy flowed from his tender heart toward those who needed sympathy; but at the same time streams of lava glowed from the same heart to scorch and overwhelm the workers of iniquity. He was pious, but there was not a trace about him of sanctimoniousness.

That is the picture that men have of him. In my own office at home and at the Church Office Building I have rather large pictures of Jesus as he has been portrayed by artists. I appreciate them, but they do not give me the complete or acceptable picture of the Lord, and no picture I have ever seen is adequate. I can never see the Christ with my eyes open. I must close them to get my concepts of him.

The Christ of whom they spoke and whom they tried to picture was the Master as he lived on the earth among mortals. I should like now to give you another picture of the Christ as it is given by one who saw him after he was immortal, after his resurrection. I quote:

I John, who also am your brother, and companion in tribulation . . . was in the isle that is called Patmos, for the word of God, and for the testimony of Jesus Christ.

I was in the Spirit on the Lord's day, and heard behind me a great voice, as of a trumpet, Saying, I am Alpha and Omega, the first and the last: and, What thou seest, write in a book, . . .

And I turned to see the voice that spake with me. And being turned, I saw, . . .

One like unto the Son of man, clothed with a garment down to the foot, and girt about the paps with a golden girdle.

His head and his hairs were white like wool, as white as snow; and his eyes were as a flame of fire;

And his feet like unto fine brass, as if they burned in a furnace; and his voice as the sound of many waters.

. . . and his countenance was as the sun shineth in his strength.

And when I saw him, I fell at his feet as dead. And he laid his right hand upon me, saying unto me, Fear not; I am the first and the last:

I am he that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive for evermore, Amen; . . .

Write the things which thou hast seen, . . . (Rev. 1:9-19.)

I think of the Lord as he walked through Galilee and Palestine. I realize that he must have become tired and hungry and weary and thirsty, but he was ever patient. He was loving; he was kind. It seems that though it was necessary at times to rebuke people, he did what he told us in the modern revelations to do, he reproved then showed forth afterwards an increase of love toward him he had reproved (see D & C 121:43) —he had his arm around them, too. O how I love him for his tenderness—so forgiving, so kind.

I think of him on the cross during his great agony. He was thinking of his sweet mother down beneath him. He was tender and kind as he said to John, "Behold thy mother," and to his mother, "Woman, behold thy son!" (See John 19:26-27.) And from that hour that disciple took her into his own home.

I think of his kindness when proud and loving mothers so wanted their children to have a sight of the Master, to touch the hem of his garment, and they were pushed away—(I think of that incident at the conclusion of nearly every session of conference as we go out the back door and people crowd around to just see and speak to Christ's modern prophet—) and he said, "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not: for of such is the kingdom of God." (Mark 10:14.)

Sunday, April 8

Third Day

I think of the Christ who came in our own day to the Prophet Joseph Smith and his associate in the Kirtland Temple.

The veil was taken from our minds, and the eyes of our understanding were opened.

We saw the Lord standing upon the breastwork of the pulpit, before us; and under his feet was paved work of pure gold, in color like amber.

His eyes were as a flame of fire; the hair of his head was white like the pure snow; his countenance shone above the brightness of the sun; and his voice was as the sound of the rushing waters, even the voice of Jehovah, saying:

I am the first and the last; I am he who liveth, I am he who was slain; I am your advocate with the Father. (D & C 110:1-4.)

Several have said no one ever saw Him laugh; however, I can imagine the Lord Jesus Christ smiling as he looked upon his people in their devotion. This great conference—with its thirty-one thousand men and boys holding the Holy Priesthood, in attendance at one meeting; with its tens of thousands who have come long distances to listen and to worship together, and to hear the word of that Lord Jesus Christ—must have pleased him greatly.

I think he smiles when he looks upon this his prophet, President David O. McKay, who gives such inspired leadership to his people, who is so close to him, who hears his word, and who receives his revelations. I think the Lord Jesus Christ is smiling when he looks into the homes of this people and sees them on their knees in family prayer night and morning, the children participating also. I think he smiles when he sees young husbands and wives, and older ones, with deep affection for each other, who continue their courtship as our prophet has said, who continue to love each other with all their souls until the day they die and then accentuate it through eternity.

I think he is pleased with the families which sacrifice and share, like the family I visited a week ago and with whom I had lunch. There were ten wonderful children in one family—all happy together, and working all their problems out together, sharing all their limited assets together! I think the Lord Jesus Christ is smiling when he looks down and sees more than four thousand men this past year—four thousand men with some of their wives and some of their children who were inactive a year ago, but today are happy in the kingdom, many of whom have been to the holy temple of God and had their endowments and their sealings, and who with tears of gratitude thank the Lord for his program.

I think I see tears of joy in his eyes and a smile on his lips as he sees the twenty-one thousand new souls who have come unto him this year, who have professed his name, who have gone into the waters of baptism, and I think he loves those who helped to convert them also.

I see him smile as he sees his numerous people on their knees in repentance, changing their lives, making them brighter and cleaner, and more like their Heavenly Father and their Brother, Jesus Christ.

I think he is pleased and smiles as he sees youth as they organize their lives and protect and fortify themselves against the errors of the day. I think he is first grieved, and then perhaps pleased, when he sees, as he must have done a few days ago in my office, a young couple who had made serious error and were now on their knees together with their hands tightly clasped together. There must have been joy in his smile when he saw into their souls and saw that they were making the adjustment, as their tears bathed my hand which I had tenderly placed on theirs.

Oh, I love the Lord Jesus Christ. I hope that I can show to him and manifest my sincerity and devotion. I want to live close to him. I want to be like him, and I pray that the Lord will help all of us that we may so be as he said to his Nephite disciples, "Therefore, what manner of men ought ye to be?" and he answered his own question by saying, "Even as I am," (3 Nephi 27:27) and so, as Elder ElRay L. Christiansen said, I go from this conference determined to live even closer to my Heavenly Father and his Son Jesus Christ than I have ever lived before. And I pray this in his name—in the name of him whom I love, adore, and worship, in the name of our Lord and Savior and Redeemer, Jesus Christ. Amen.

PRESIDENT DAVID O. McKAY

THE FIRST SPEAKER of this session, Elder Lee, referred to the "shortest designated highway in the State," and that shortest highway leads to the penitentiary. His excellent discourse and the inspirational discourses of the other brethren who have followed him have inspired us all. The spirit of the Lord is here, and what I am going to say in a few words I hope will be in harmony with the spirit of those addresses.

That reference to the highway reminded me of something to which we should have called the attention of 31,000 men of the priesthood last evening. But now I am glad that I overlooked it, for here is a better time and place, I think, to mention it. It refers to a number of young people who get on that shortest of highways. For several years we have asked the bishops to help us to protect them from getting on that highway. For a while we received help, and then that help practically ceased. There are two members of the Council of the Twelve appointed to receive your suggestions and recommendations, but these two members are helpless without your suggestions.

In brief, many of our young girls, particularly, and not a few of our young boys, leave their homes, with the consent of parents, sometimes without the consent, and they come to larger centers in hopes of bettering their financial conditions, probably social conditions; and without proper guidance, without help, not a few get on that one-way road. And so we have asked that whenever one of those girls or one of the boys leaves home to come to the city, the bishop will send word to Elder Spencer W. Kimball or Elder Mark E. Petersen giving the home town address, and, if possible, the address of the boy or girl in Salt Lake City, Ogden, or some other center.

The ward teachers should know the name of that boy and the name of that girl, for it is his duty "to watch over the church always, to be with and strengthen them." (D & C 20:53.) If the teacher will notify the bishop that one of the members of his district is leaving home, and the bishop will inform the committee of the Twelve of the fact, safeguards can be put around the young person. They are not bad boys or bad girls, intrinsically, but there are traps into which they may fall here and be caught in sin, as we have heard. Bishops, will you please do that? Ward teachers throughout the Church, will you please watch over the Church always—over those who are sick, those who need your help, and particularly some of these discouraged young people?

I think the thought that I am trying to get over is well expressed by that poem which the Presiding Bishopric has put into the hands of the lesser priesthood of the Church. It is as follows:

"He stood at the crossroads all alone
The sunlight in his face;
He had no thought for the world unknown,
He was set for a manly race.
But the roads stretched east and the roads stretched west,
And the lad knew not which road was best.
So he chose the road that led him down,
And he lost the race and the victor's crown.
He was caught at last in an angry snare,
Because no one stood at the crossroads there
To show him the better road.

"Another day at the selfsame place,
A boy with high hopes stood,
He too was set for a manly race,
He too was seeking the things that were good,
But one was there who the roads did know
And that one showed him which way to go.

Sunday, April 8

Third Day

So he turned from the road that would lead him down,
And he won the race and the victor's crown.

He walks today the highway fair
Because one stood at the crossroads there

To show him the better way."

We are just reminding you bishops of this safeguard. How effective the protection or guidance, though, depends upon you, and more upon the ward teacher.

As this conference draws to a close, my heart is full of appreciation. This has been a great conference. Do you know how many have contributed to its success? I want to point out a few even at the risk of omitting merited names.

I have mentioned those who beforehand wished to make attractive and beautiful the rostrum and express their love in flowers. Again we mention them.

Throughout the sessions we have expressed our gratitude to the radio stations and television stations, making it possible for tens of thousands to hear the message of the gospel from these leaders, and how impressively, eloquently they have given their messages.

We have said "thank you" to the members of the choirs, but let me mention them again: The Brigham Young University choruses, with Brother Ralph Woodward and Brother Crawford Gates conducting. Those young people—you will never forget that picture—filling the seats of the choir and overflowing into the galleries, young people with high hopes, young people with faith, young people of purity. We appreciate what they did.

And even more impressive, if that could be, our Singing Mothers! I cannot mention the name "mother" without being overcome with emotion. Those mothers who furnished that singing were the mothers of 1600 children! Even their title, "Singing Mothers," tells a story of sacrifice, a story of love, a story of home. No wonder they could sing the songs of Zion so inspirationally under the masterful leadership of Sister Florence Jepperson Madsen.

Then there was the Reno Latter-day

Saints male chorus under Ladd R. Cropper, director—whose singing inspired 31,000 members of the priesthood last night. We thank them.

And today the Tabernacle Choir, singing the songs which inspired thousands in Europe. And when they sing the closing song, try to picture yourself listening to them in London or in Glasgow or Paris, Switzerland, Holland, or East Germany, and see those audiences filled with enthusiasm, inspired, as this wonderful choir sang, "Come, Come, Ye Saints." It is said that our "echoes roll from soul to soul, and go forever and forever." Well, the echoes of those choruses are rolling in the souls of thousands over in Europe and will continue so to do for a long time to come. To Director Cornwall and the organists we again express appreciation.

Not many of you, I think, have noticed how attentive, how considerate, how prompt have been the ushers under the direction of Bishop Isaacson. They have spent hours here since conference began—during meeting, between sessions—from morning till night. We extend to you ushers thanks for your courtesy, consideration, and the very excellent way in which you have directed the affairs put into your hands.

I have often spoken about the attention given by our police department. I do not know that they have ever rendered greater service than they have throughout this conference. You who have had to travel around this block have noticed three of our policemen, courteously watching to see that no accident occurs: here on the south gate two men; at the west gate another; out at the north gate another; and others at crowded intersections throughout the city. To the mayor and city council, chief of police, and to all the members of that force we say "thank you" this day. To the Red Cross who have been here faithfully to render any help to those in need, to the fire department, members of which have stood on guard in case of some accident, to the reporters who have reported the exercises so efficiently and accurately—to all of you, we express sincere appreciation.

Now I should like to express appreciation for a group of workers not connected directly with this conference but who are energetically contributing to the advancement of the work of the Lord: the volunteer labor missionaries who are down in New Zealand, down in Hawaïi, who will be in Mexico and other places where schools and temples are being built; we should like them to know that we have them in mind and that they have our blessing, able businessmen, skilled in carpentry, cement work, steel work. Not many in the Church know what they are doing. But it is a great force of skilled workmen contributing to the upbuilding of the kingdom of God.

And we shall mention, too, the young men who accept one-year, two-year mission calls to lay bricks, or to drive trucks, repair machinery, etc. Young men, we appreciate what you are doing. It is a great school for you, and you learn much even while you contribute your time and effort.

Finally, I wish to express gratitude to my beloved associates, the General Authorities, who so kindly and considerately made mention of my half century of service in the Council of the Twelve. It was most gracious of you to express your congratulations and particularly your loyalty. The words coming from your hearts as they did touched me deeply.

Next to the affection we have for our home and loved ones, we prize the loyalty of friends, but even more precious is the true feeling of brotherhood in Christ. This choicest of all blessings in human association in the Church has been most manifest during this conference ever since our meeting referred to by Brother Kimball of the General Authorities in the house of the Lord last Thursday morning, and as expressed throughout this conference. Truly, we can sense more clearly than ever what John the apostle had in mind when he wrote, "We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren." (I John 3:14.) And I wish to tell you auxiliary workers and you members in the priesthood quorums of stakes and wards, that the brethren love you just that way.

And what the Primary is doing—you could see by the reports of the great convention, and the high percentage of children that they have in attendance at their weekly meetings—they are doing just what you brethren have asked them to do. The Young Women's Mutual Improvement Association has enrolled every girl in the Church. They will help you teachers—your local Young Women's Association and its officers—to find out when one of the girls is moving to another place, and they will be there to welcome them and to try to help them. The Young Men's Mutual Improvement Association in their competitive games, in their cultural, inspirational meetings—what a wonderful work they are doing! So, also, the great Sunday School cause, and our mothers in Relief Society—where in all the world can you find so many groups working so efficiently—helps in government, as guides to your children—as you find in the Church of Jesus Christ!

We are not boasting; we are just stating facts. We might not say it to you officers of these auxiliaries, but we love you, and in our hearts are prayers for your success. And the priesthood quorums, the deacons and the Aaronic Priesthood, the teachers and the priests—there again, every one enrolled, an opportunity for every boy to be active; instead of having the gang-spirit, where the members try to destroy or to interfere with the ease and comfort of others, we have them active and rendering service to others. And that means, as President Clark stated, over a hundred thousand of them, and the Presiding Bishopric bringing in the Senior Aaronic members; then the Melchizedek, the elders, seventies, and high priests—there is where we touch our home life.

There are three parables to which I shall refer and close, all relating to lost ones. What I have said relates to preventing them from getting on the highway that leads to the detention home or to the penitentiary. Christ gave three parables which you will find in the 15th chapter of Luke. One is the parable of the Lost Sheep which wandered away from the flock; the second was the loss of one of Ten Pieces of Silver by a housewife; and the third was the Prodigal Son.

The first referred to one that just simply wandered because it wanted to seek the best in sustenance of life; there was no sin involved. It became so engrossed in its own welfare that it wandered away from the flock.

Sunday, April 8

Third Day

The second was largely due to carelessness, neglect; and the third was a determination to an abandonment to a life of indulgence and sin.

Now you will find many in the Church of these boys and girls who drift from the Church because of other interests. They are not bad boys. Find them, bring them back into activity in the fold.

In the second parable, the parents, through carelessness, let the girls go, or the girls defy parental interference or authority. Often the boys start out with wrong companions. You know how to deal with them—get them, too, into activity.

The third, the prodigal son or the prodigal girl who goes down the line, who refuses the invitation to come back, refuses to enter into the activity of the Church—such a one, as did the prodigal son, will go, I suppose, until he comes to himself and then, as President Richards so eloquently expressed today, the spirit of repentance and the spirit of forgiveness will be operative.

Brethren and sisters, may our Heavenly Father sanctify the instructions, admonitions, and testimonies that we have heard throughout this great and memorable conference. May he fill our hearts with love for one another in the true brotherhood of Christ. May that love in our homes, in our groups, in priesthood, and in the auxiliaries radiate so effectively that others seeing our good lives may be led to glorify our Father in heaven, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

The Choir will now sing "Come, Come, Ye Saints," as they sang it throughout Europe. Following the singing, the closing prayer will be offered by Elder Samuel Ross Fox, Sr., president of South Salt Lake Stake, after which this Conference will be adjourned for six months.

---

The Tabernacle Choir sang the hymn, "Come, Come, Ye Saints."

President David O. McKay:

The Deseret Sunday School Conference will convene in the Salt Lake Tabernacle tonight at 7:00 o'clock. Sunday School workers are expected to be in attendance, and all others are invited.

Now we shall have the benediction by Elder Samuel Ross Fox, and this Conference will stand adjourned.

Elder Samuel Ross Fox, president of the South Salt Lake Stake, offered the benediction.

Conference adjourned sine die.

The congregational singing was conducted by J. Spencer Cornwall and Richard P. Condie, Conductor and Assistant Conductor, respectively, of the Tabernacle Choir.

The choral music for the Friday sessions was furnished by the Brigham Young University Combined Choruses, with Ralph Woodward conducting at the morning meeting, and Crawford Gates at the afternoon meeting.

The Relief Society Singing Mothers of the Pioneer, Salt Lake and Sugar House Regions and the Davis, Layton and North Davis Stakes, furnished music for the Saturday morning and afternoon sessions, with Sister Florence Jepsen Madsen conducting.

At the General Priesthood meeting Saturday evening, the Reno Latter-day Saints Male Chorus furnished musical numbers, the director being Ladd R. Cropper.

J. Spencer Cornwall directed the singing of the Tabernacle Choir at the Sunday sessions, and also the Church of the Air and the Tabernacle Choir and Organ broadcasts.

Accompaniments and interludes on the organ were played by Alexander Schreiner, Frank W. Asper and Roy M. Darley.

CHURCH OF THE AIR

Columbia Broadcasting Company's Church of the Air was presented at 8:00 a.m., Sunday, April 8, 1956. The program was as follows:

The Tabernacle Choir, under the direction of J. Spencer Cornwall, furnished the music for this service, with Alexander Schreiner at the organ. Richard L. Evans was the announcer.

Music: Organ and humming choir: "Sweet is the Work."

Announcer: The Church of the Air is presented by CBS Radio so that clergymen of many faiths may speak to a nationwide congregation. Today's program, in connection with the Annual General Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, comes to you transcribed from the Mormon Tabernacle on Temple Square, through the facilities of Station KSL in Salt Lake City, Utah. Our speaker is Elder Joseph Fielding Smith, President of the Council of Twelve Apostles of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Music is by the Tabernacle Choir directed by J. Spencer Cornwall, with Alexander Schreiner at the organ.

The Tabernacle Choir opens this service today with two hymn melodies by George Careless: the first, with words by John Jaques: "Softly Beams the Sacred Dawning. . . . Swiftly flee the clouds of darkness, Speedily the mists retire; Nature's universal blackness is consumed by heav'nly fire."

And the second with the words of Eliza R. Snow: "Though Deep'ning Trials Throng Your Way, Press on, ye Saints of God! Ere long the resurrection day will spread its life and truth abroad. Lift up your hearts in praise to God; Let your rejoicing never cease; Though tribulations rage abroad, Christ says, 'In me ye shall have peace.'"

(The Choir sang: "Softly Beams the Sacred Dawning," — Careless; and "Though Deep'ning Trials." — Careless.)

Announcer: We shall now hear on this Church of the Air service President Joseph Fielding Smith, Author, Church Historian and President of the Council of Twelve Apostles of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. President Smith has titled today's talk: "Significance of the Atonement."

PRESIDENT JOSEPH FIELDING SMITH

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

AT THIS season of the year the attention of Christians everywhere is centered on the resurrection of our Lord Jesus Christ. It is well that it is so; for this is the most important event that ever occurred in our fallen world. When Adam and Eve were placed in the Garden of Eden, there was no death. It was by the violation of a commandment that brought mortality and death upon them. The Lord said to them:

"... Of every tree of the garden thou mayest freely eat: But of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it: for in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." (Genesis 2:16, 17.)

After they had eaten the Lord cursed the ground for their sakes and said:

"In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken: for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." (Genesis 3:19.)

This mortal death we have inherited, and it is decreed that every soul shall die. However, it is not the purpose of the Lord that this condition shall endure forever. Justice demanded that the broken law should be repaired. Death was not to gain the victory. Mankind were not to be forced to partake of everlasting destruction from which there could be no relief. Knowing what Adam would do, the Lord has prepared the way for man's escape from this awful fate. To bring this restoration it was necessary that there could be an infinite atonement that would repair the broken law. It would have been Adam's place to pay the penalty for his transgression; but Adam had placed himself beyond the power by which such an atonement could come. Death had gained a victory over him and likewise over his posterity.

Therefore it became necessary that one who was without sin and free from the power of death, and yet with the power to die, should come to make the sacrifice and redeem mankind from the grave and likewise grant them power of remission of their sins. To fulfill this mission the Son of God was chosen and sent into the world to pay the debt. Peter bears record of this wherein he declared:

"Forasmuch as ye know that ye were not redeemed with corruptible things, as silver and gold, from your vain conversations received by tradition from your fathers: But with the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb without blemish and without spot;

"Who verily was foreordained before the foundation of the world, but was manifest in these times for you." (1 Peter 1:18-20.)

Likewise the angel revealed to John in his glorious vision:

"And all that dwell upon the earth shall worship him, whose names are not written in the book of life of the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world." (Rev. 13:8.)

Paul, in writing to the Church in Corinth taught the atonement of Jesus Christ and the redemption from the grave. Said he:

"If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable.

"But now is Christ risen from the dead, and became the first fruits of them that slept.

"For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead.

"For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive.

"But every man in his own order: Christ the firstfruits; afterward they that are Christ's at his coming.

"Then cometh the end, when he shall have delivered up the kingdom of God, even the Father; when he shall have put down all rule and all authority and power.

"For he must reign till he hath put all enemies under his feet.

"The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death.

"For he hath put all things under his feet. But when he saith all things are put under him, it is manifest that he is excepted, which did put all things under him.

"And when all things shall be subdued unto him, then shall the Son also himself be subject unto him that put all things under him, that God may be all in all." (1 Cor. 15:19-38.)

Jesus proclaimed himself to be the "resurrection and the life," (John 11:25) and to the Jews he said:

"For as the Father raiseth up the dead, and quickeneth them; even so the Son quickeneth whom he will. * * *

"Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation, but is passed from death unto life.

"Verily, verily, I say unto you. The hour is coming and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God: and they that hear shall live.

"For as the Father hath life in himself; so hath he given to the Son to have life in himself;

"And hath given him authority to execute judgment also, because he is the Son of man.

"Marvel not at this: For the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice,

"And shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation." (John 5:21, 24-29.)

Again he said to the Jews:

"Even as the Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many." (Matt. 20:28.)

There is not a more beautiful saying in the Bible than these words of Jesus:

"And as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of Man be lifted up;

"That whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life.

"For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life.

"For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through him might be saved.

"He that believeth on him is not condemned: but he that believeth not is condemned already, because he hath not believed in the name of the only begotten Son of God.

"And this is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil.

"For every one that doeth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, lest his deeds should be reproved.

"But he that doeth truth cometh to the light that his deeds may be made manifest, that they are wrought in God." (John 3:14-21.)

The atonement by which men are redeemed, was made by one without blemish and without spot. He had to be one who had life in himself, and therefore all power over death. No mortal man could make the atonement. Moreover, the atonement had to be made by the shedding of blood, for blood is the vitalizing force of the mortal body. Therefore the Lord said to ancient Israel:

"And whatsoever man there be of the house of Israel, or of the strangers that sojourn among you, that eateth my manner of blood: I will even set my face against that soul that eateth blood, and will cut him off from among the people.

"For the life of the flesh is in the blood: and I have given it to you upon the altar to make an atonement for your souls: for it is the blood that maketh an atonement for the soul." (Lev. 17:10-11.)

In Hebrews it is also written:

"And almost all things are by the law purged with blood; and without shedding of blood is no remission." (Hebrews 9:22.)

The Scriptures are replete with passages teaching us that there could be no remission of sins without the shedding of the blood of Jesus Christ. He, when with his apostles at the feast of the last Passover, broke and blessed bread and gave it to them to eat; likewise he blessed the wine and gave it to them to drink, saying:

"For this is my blood of the testament, which is shed for many for the remission of sins." (Matt. 26:28.)

Again to his disciples he said:

"I am the good shepherd, and know my sheep, and am known of mine.

"As the Father knoweth me, even so know I the Father, and I lay down my life for the sheep. * * *

"Therefore doth my Father love me, because I lay down my life that I might take it again.

"No man taketh it from me, but I lay it down of myself. I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again. This commandment have I received of my Father." (John 10:14, 15, 17, 18.)

We learn then from these passages that the atonement is universal in its application. And every creature will benefit by it. First, there is a universal redemption from death. It is unconditional. The children of Adam had no agency in the transgression of their first parents, therefore they are not required to exercise any agency in their redemption from its penalty. They are redeemed from death, without faith, repentance, baptism, or any other act, either of mind or of body. These are the dead who have broken the covenants, violated the commandments and who loved darkness rather than light.

The other salvation is that which is given to the righteous, those who confess repentance and a willingness to obey the commandments of God. These are they of whom the Savior spoke, who have "everlasting life," and shall not come into condemnation; but have "passed from death unto life," which life is to dwell in eternal glory.

"And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God; and the books were opened: and another book was opened, which is the book of life: and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books according to their works.

"And the sea gave up the dead which were in it; and death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them: and they were judged every man according to their works." (Rev. 20:12-13.)

(The Choir sang: "I Need Thee Every Hour.")

Announcer: "Our Father which art in heaven, Hallow'd be Thy Name. Thy kingdom come, thy will be done in earth as it is in heav'n." The Tabernacle Choir closes this service from Temple Square with "The Lord's Prayer," music by B. Cecil Gates.

(The Choir sang: "The Lord's Prayer."—Gates.)

Music: Organ and humming choir: "Sweet is the Work."

Announcer: You have been attending CBS Radio's Church of the Air. Today's service, in connection with the Annual General Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, came to you transcribed from the Mormon Tabernacle on Temple Square through the facilities of Station KSL in Salt Lake City, Utah. Our speaker was Elder Joseph Fielding Smith, President of the Council of Twelve Apostles of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Music was by the Tabernacle Choir under the direction of J. Spencer Cornwall. Alexander Schreiner was at the organ.

SALT LAKE TABERNACLE CHOIR AND ORGAN BROADCAST

The following broadcast, written and announced by Richard L. Evans, and originating with Station KSL, Salt Lake City, was presented from 9:30 to 10:00 a.m. Sunday, April 8, 1956, through the courtesy and facilities of the Columbia Broadcasting System's network, throughout the United States. The broadcast was as follows:

(The organ played "As the Dew from Heaven Distilling," and on signal the Choir and organ broke into the hymn, "Gently Raise The Sacred Strain," singing the words to the end of the second line, and humming to end of verse for announcer's background.)

Announcer: Once more we welcome you within these walls with music and the spoken word from the Crossroads of the West.

The CBS Radio Network and its affiliated stations bring you at this hour another presentation from Temple Square in Salt Lake City, with J. Spencer Cornwall conducting the Tabernacle Choir, Alexander Schreiner, Tabernacle Organist and the spoken word by Richard Evans.

First sung by the Choir is Philip James' choral setting of a theme from Franz Liszt: "Ave Verum" "Jesu, Word of God Incarnate."

(The Choir sang: "Ave Verum."—Liszt.)

Announcer: Alexander Schreiner turns first today to the quiet meditative quality of a study in pastel harmonies by Leo Sowerby—a study called: "Carillon."

(Organ selection: "Carillon."—Sowerby.)

Announcer: The Tabernacle Choir next sings a sacred song from the 17th century—with a theme by Johann Cruger as harmonized by Bach: "Jesu, Priceless Treasure."

(The Choir sang: "Jesu, Priceless Treasure."—Bach.)

Announcer: With the women's voices of the Choir we turn to Ernest Charles' thoughtful writing of the ever restless moving, of the inconstant clouds: "Clouds adrift in the summer sky, resemble life as they wander by. Whence they come and whither they go, we often wonder but never know . . . Part of the infinite shall we say, part of the moment we call today."

(The Women's Chorus of the Choir sang: "Clouds."—Charles.)

Announcer:

Last week we talked of the reality of the resurrection and of man's immortality. Scripture and reason and revelation, as well as the very awareness within us, all attest to man's eternal continuance. Since this is so, since men are immortal, how should we best use our time, what should we most try to acquire? The answer to this calls for another question: What can we take with us when we leave this life; what can we take with us into eternity?—the reward of our works; the love of loved ones; memory; the knowledge of truth; intelligence; our own indestructible identity—and the power to progress. Since this is so, what men learn, what they think, what they know, how they live, what they are inside themselves, is of everlasting importance. And this places a premium on the pursuit of knowledge, on the love of learning, on acquiring true and timeless things within ourselves. This places less of a premium on mere things, and more on what we could carry with us—anywhere—wherever we went—even if we had to flee for our lives—even if we lost our lives. This places a premium on learning, not as narrowly defined, not merely as academic credits and credentials, but learning in the largest, sincerest sense, with the assurance that “whatever principle of intelligence we attain unto in this life, it will rise with us in the resurrection.”<sup>1</sup> This places an obligation upon us to improve our minds, to feed our souls, to seek, and never to be smugly satisfied, and never to starve the spirit, and never to pursue the search along too narrow lines—but to feed each side of ourselves and acquire acquaintance with great truths, great books, great minds, great men; with scripture and with things of the spirit, as well as the tangible physical factors—in short to seek out everything “. . . virtuous, lovely, or of good report or praiseworthy . . .”<sup>2</sup>—to seek knowledge, truth, and understanding for the present and for everlasting life, for “The Glory of God is intelligence . . .”<sup>3</sup>—and intelligence leads to light and truth, and to the love of light and truth. All this makes learning and the sincere love of learning, the love of truth and light, not only an opportunity but an obligation.

Announcer: With Alexander Schreiner at the organ, we have heard one of the hymn melodies of George Careless: “Ye Children of our God, Ye Saints of latter days, Surround the table of our Lord, and join to sing his praise.”

And now from the Viking legends of the Northland, we hear Grieg’s song of Olav Trygvason who boldly sailed the northern seas in search of virgin shores—of Olav Trygvason who failed to find harbor, and faced the loss of life—but who found himself; and faith, and God, and much more than the material and perishable things for which he first set out to search. The men’s chorus of the Choir sings in closing Grieg’s stirring song of “Discovery.”

(The Men’s Chorus of the Choir sang: “Discovery.”—Grieg.)

Announcer: Once more we leave you within the shadows of the everlasting hills. May peace be with you, this day—and always.

This concludes the 1390th presentation, continuing the 27th year of this traditional broadcast from the Mormon Tabernacle on Temple Square, brought to you by CBS Radio and its affiliated stations, originating with Radio Station KSL in Salt Lake City.

J. Spencer Cornwall conducted the Tabernacle Choir with its three hundred seventy-five voices. Alexander Schreiner was at the organ. The spoken word by Richard Evans.

In another seven days, at this same hour, music and the spoken word will be heard once more from the Crossroads of the West.

FIRST DAY

MORNING MEETING

The opening session of the 127th Semi-Annual Conference of the Church convened in the great Tabernacle, Salt Lake City, Utah, Friday, October 5, 1956 at 10:00 a.m., with President David O. McKay presiding and conducting the services.

The Relief Society Singing Mothers from the Northern Utah Region, Ogden Region, and Summit Stake, with Florence J. Madsen conducting and Frank W. Asper at the organ, furnished the choral music for this session.

President McKay made the following introductory remarks:

President David O. McKay:

The opening session of the 127th Semi-Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is now convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square in Salt Lake City, Utah.

All the General Authorities of the Church are in attendance, excepting Elder Milton R. Hunter of the First Council of Seventy, whose attending physician telephoned us the other day, saying it would be be unwise for Elder Hunter to attempt to attend Conference as perfect quiet is necessary for his restoration to health. Elder Hunter, you have our faith and prayers this morning for your complete recovery.

Elder Joseph Anderson is Clerk of the Conference.

These services, and all General Sessions of the Conference, will be broadcast in the Assembly Hall and in Barratt Hall over a public address system and by television.

The services this morning are also being televised over KSL-TV, Channel 5, and are being heard over Radio Station KSL and by arrangement through KSL over 10 Radio Stations in Utah, Idaho, and Nevada. The names of these stations have already been announced to the radio audience.

We express our gratitude to these various television and radio stations for their courtesy in making available their time and facilities for these broadcasts.

To the audience seated in the Tabernacle and the Assembly Hall and to the thousands listening in over the radio, the First Presidency and General Authorities of the Church extend a most hearty welcome, and pray that we may receive encouragement and inspiration during our attendance at this great Conference of the Church.

I wish to announce, too, that we have greetings from missions and from others who wish us well. One of these comes from New Zealand, from President Ariel S. Ballif, president of that mission. "The love of the Saints and the thoughts of all Church members in New Zealand are now turned toward the assembly of our leaders and the great congregation of Saints. We send our 'Aroha-Nui' and bear witness to you of our testimony of the truthfulness of the Gospel in the great activity of our people here in the land of Aotearoa. We long for the inspiration that comes from our Church leaders. We are looking forward to the time when we shall have the blessing of a general visit to our land."

To the members of the Air Force and others in the armed forces, we extend a hearty welcome. Many are here in the audience, some with their respective officers, and they propose to attend the services throughout.

We acknowledge the presence of the following distinguished visitors and others who hold prominent positions in educational circles and in the State. We are not sure that we have been able to observe all who are present, but we mention the following:

Elder Benson, member of the Council of the Twelve, and also in the Cabinet of the President of the United States; Senator Wallace F. Bennett; Representative William A. Dawson; Representative H. Aldous Dixon; Lamont Toronto, Secretary of State; Adiel F. Stewart, Mayor of Salt Lake City; Ernest L. Wilkinson, president of Brigham Young University; President A. Ray Olpin, president of the University of Utah; President John L. Clarke, president of Ricks College.

We have a letter, an expression of appreciation, from the president of

Friday, October 5

First Day

Weber College; we have present Superintendent of Public Instruction E. Allen Bateman; and the Superintendent of Salt Lake City Schools, Dr. M. Lynn Ben-nion.

Undoubtedly there are others to whom as to these we extend a hearty welcome. We are glad to see you and have you participate in these exercises and partake of the spirit of this occasion.

We also have before us our Stake Presidencies, the Bishoprics of the Church, and we also have the wives of our mission presidents who have come here to attend the dedicatory services of the beautiful Relief Society home.

To all we extend a hearty welcome and express satisfaction and pleasure in your presence and your cooperative spirit.

The singing for this morning will be furnished by the Relief Society Singing Mothers from the Northern Utah Region, Ogden Region, and Summit Stake, with Sister Florence J. Madsen conducting, with Frank W. Asper at the organ.

We shall begin this session by the Relief Society Singing Mothers singing: "In Heavenly Love Abiding," conducted by Sister Florence J. Madsen.

The opening prayer will be offered by Elder Francis M. Zimmerman, president of the Long Beach Stake.

Singing by the Singing Mothers, "In Heavenly Love Abiding."

Elder Francis M. Zimmerman, president of the Long Beach Stake offered the opening prayer.

President David O. McKay:

The invocation was just offered by President Francis M. Zimmerman of the Long Beach Stake, California.

The Relief Society Singing Mothers will now sing: "The Lord's Prayer," conducted by Sister Florence J. Madsen.

"The Lord's Prayer" was sung by the Singing Mothers.

PRESIDENT DAVID O. MCKAY

THE PASSING OF YEARS and the repetition of experience fail to lessen the sense of great responsibility of addressing the congregation in this great tabernacle and others listening in over the radio. I have prayed and now pray for the inspiration of the Lord, that I may be able to perform this duty acceptably to him and to you, my brethren and sisters.

What I have in mind I should like to associate with this passage of scripture taken from Matthew:

"Then said Jesus unto his disciples, If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me.

"For whosoever will save his life shall lose it: and whosoever will lose his life for my sake shall find it.

"For what is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul? or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?

"For the Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father with his angels; and then he shall reward every man

according to his works." (Matt. 16:24-27.)

Before emphasizing one or more particular points contained in that remarkable passage, I should like to give a brief report regarding some activities of the Church since our conference six months ago. During that interim the Church has been moving forward most encouragingly. Priesthood quorums have increased in number, particularly in the mission field, and, through the efficient efforts of the priesthood committees among the General Authorities, a greater enrolment in the quorums generally has resulted. There are today in the stakes and missions of the Church 237 high priests quorums; 449 seventies quorums and 17 units; 1,750 elders quorums and two units; 171 quorums and 1,725 groups of priests; 737 quorums, and 1,230 groups of teachers; 1,988 quorums, and 551 groups of deacons.

Those are all organizations established by revelation for activity in spiritual things, as well as temporal, for boys, and for young men under nineteen years of age, most of them seventeen and eighteen.

The general boards of auxiliaries are functioning efficiently, and local organizations are co-operating with them in earnest efforts to instill high ideals in the minds of childhood and youth.

It is a sobering thought, my brothers and sisters, to realize that all quorums, all auxiliaries, all Church schools, seminaries, institutes, colleges, the Church university, all Church edifices, all preparations of lessons, the expenditure of hundreds of thousands of dollars monthly for the publication of books, equipment, illustrative material, and so forth—all efforts of thousands of officers and teachers—are for one purpose: namely, the education and proper training of your boys and girls and the edification of all members of the Church. Everything that has been and is now being done points to that one general purpose. Do you appreciate it by co-operating with these forces and sending your young children, and your young men and women to these various organizations in the Church? If not, you are shirking part of your duty.

We have only words of commendation to the Twelve, the Assistants to the Twelve, and other General Authorities, including the Presiding Bishopric; to the general boards, the members of the general Church building committee, the stake and ward officers, each and all working for the good of the individual to bring to pass the Lord's purposes, who declared: ". . . this is my work and my glory—to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man." (P of G P, Moses 1:39.)

You will be interested to learn that since the first of the year there have been 136 Church edifices dedicated. It is estimated that in the final quarter of 1956 there will possibly be added to this number forty-four more buildings, making a total of buildings dedicated in English-speaking wards and stakes and missions of 180. In foreign missions it is estimated that there will be somewhere in the neighborhood of fifty to sixty houses of worship dedicated in this year 1956, making a total in all of approximately 240.

A means to an end! From the standpoint of numbers and material prosperity, therefore, the Church has every reason to be encouraged. All these things, I repeat, are means to the perfecting of the soul—that is the end.

The great question is: Have we progressed spiritually as well as in these physical and teaching organizations? The answer is "yes."

The accomplishments before mentioned, the efforts put forth, are in themselves really expressions of spirituality, and here we offer in our hearts a prayer that God will bless the total membership of the Church who have contributed of their means, talents, and efforts to the accomplishment of the purposes named, the means, and structures and Church edifices especially. It is marvelous what you have done.

"Every noble impulse, every unselfish expression of love, every brave suffering for the right; every surrender of self to something higher than self; every loyalty to an ideal; every unselfish devotion to principle; every helpfulness to humanity; every act of self-control; every fine courage of the soul, undefeated by pretense or policy, but by being, doing, and living of good for the very good's sake—that is spirituality."

And our text emphasizes the fact that the human being consists of spirit and body: "For what is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul? or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?" (Matt. 16:26.)

Indeed, man's earthly existence is but a test, whether he will concentrate his efforts, his mind, his soul upon things which contribute to his comfort and gratification of his physical instincts and passions, or whether he will make as his life's purpose and aim the acquisition of spiritual qualities.

The spiritual road has Christ as its ideal, not the gratification of the physical, for he that would save his life, yielding to that present gratification of a seeming need, will lose his life.

If he would seek the real purpose of life, the individual must live for something higher than self. He hears the Savior's voice saying: "I am the way, the truth, and the life." (John 14:6.) Following that voice, he soon learns that there is no one great thing which he can do to attain happiness or eternal life. He learns that "life is made up not of great sacrifices or duties, but of little things in which smiles and kindness and small obligations given habitually are what win and preserve the heart and secure comfort."

Spirituality, our true aim, is the consciousness of victory over self and of communion with the Infinite. Spirituality impels one to conquer difficulties and acquire more and more strength. To feel one's faculties unfolding and truth expanding the soul is one of life's sublimest experiences. Would that all might so live as to experience that ecstasy!

Being "honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous, and in doing good to all men" are attributes which contribute to spirituality, the highest acquisition of the soul. It is the divine in man, the supreme, crowning gift that makes him king of all created things.

The spiritual life is the true life of man. It is what distinguishes him from the beasts of the forests. It lifts him above the physical, yet he is still susceptible to all the natural contributions that life can give him that are needful for his happiness or contributive to his advancement. "Though in the world, not of the world." (See John 8:23.)

Jesus taught that men and women fail to live truly, unless they have spirituality. In Jefferson's Life and Teachings of Jesus, we read that the spiritual force underlies everything, and without it nothing worthwhile can be accomplished. And I quote: "Spiritual needs can be met only by spiritual means. All government, laws, methods, and organizations are of no value unless" spirituality guides them. All "men and women are filled with truth," with this spirituality—and "righteousness, and mercy. Material things have no power to raise the sunken spirit. Gravitation, electricity, and steam are great forces, but they are all powerless to change the motives of men and women." "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." (See John 3:3.)

Spirituality and morality as taught by the Church of Jesus Christ are firmly anchored in fundamental principles—principles from which the world can never escape even if it would, and the first fundamental is a belief—and among the members of the Church who are truly converted, a knowledge—of the existence of God the Father and his Son Jesus Christ. Children of the Church are taught, at least should be taught, to recognize him and to pray to him as one who can listen and hear and feel just as an earthly father can listen and hear and feel, and they have absorbed into their very beings, if taught rightly, from their mothers and their fathers, the real testimony that this personal God has spoken in this dispensation.

Inseparable from the acceptance of the existence of God is an attitude of reverence, to which I wish now to call attention most earnestly to the entire Church. The greatest manifestation of spirituality is reverence; indeed, reverence is spirituality. Reverence is profound respect mingled with love. It is "a complex emotion made up of mingled feelings of the soul." Carlyle says it is "the highest of human feelings." I have said elsewhere that if reverence is the highest, then irreverence is the lowest state in which a man can live in the world. Be that as it may, it is nevertheless true that an irreverent man has a crudeness about him that is repellent. He is cynical, often sneering, and always iconoclastic.

Reverence embraces regard, deference, honor, and esteem. Without some degree of it, therefore, there would be no courtesy, no gentility, no consideration of others' feelings, or of others' rights. Reverence is the fundamental virtue in religion. It is "one of the signs of strength; irreverence, one of the surest indications of weakness. No man will rise high," says one man, "who jeers at sacred things. The fine loyalties of life," he continues, "must be revered or they will be foresworn in the day of trial."

Parents, Reverence, as charity, begins at home. In early childhood children should be trained to be respectful, deferential—respectful to one another, to strangers and visitors—deferential to the aged and infirm—reverential to things sacred, to parents and parental love.

Three influences in home life awaken reverence in children and contribute to its development in their souls. These are; first, firm but Gentle Guidance; second, Courtesy shown by parents to each other, and to children; and third, Prayer in which children participate. In every home in this Church parents should strive to act intelligently in impressing children with those three fundamentals.

Churches are dedicated and set apart as houses of worship. This means, of course, that all who enter do so, or at least pretend to do so, with an intent to get nearer the presence of the Lord than they can in the street or amidst the worries of a workaday life. In other words, we go to the Lord's house to meet him and to commune with him in spirit. Such a meeting place, then, should first of all be fitting and appropriate in all respects, whether God is considered as the invited guest, or the worshippers as his guests.

Whether the place of meeting is a humble chapel or a "poem in architecture" built of white marble and inlaid with precious stones makes little or no difference in our approach and attitude toward the Infinite Presence. To know God is there should be sufficient to impel us to conduct ourselves orderly, reverently.

In this regard, as members of the Church in our worshipping assemblies, we have much room for improvement. Presiding authorities in stake, ward, and quorum meetings, and especially teachers in classes, should make special effort to maintain better order and more reverence during hours of worship and of study. Less talking behind the pulpit will have a salutary effect upon those who face it. By example and precept, children should be impressed with the inappropriateness of confusion and disorder in a worshipping congregation. They should be impressed in childhood, and have it emphasized in youth, that it is disrespectful to talk or even to whisper during a sermon, and that it is the height of rudeness, excepting in an emergency, to leave a worshipping assembly before dismissal.

One of the most pronounced outbursts of Jesus' indignation was caused by the desecration of the Lord's temple. As he overturned the tables of moneychangers and ordered out those who were bartering and trading in the holy sanctuary, he gave a warning admonition that has come down through the centuries:

"... make not my Father's house an house of merchandise." (John 2:16.) Making and spending money, even in conversation, faultfinding, and particularly gossiping about neighbors in a house of worship, are essentially violations of this command given nearly two thousand years ago.

If there were more reverence in human hearts, there would be less room for sin and resultant sorrow; more capacity for joy and gladness. To make more cherished, more adaptable, more attractive this gem among brilliant virtues, is a project worthy of the most united and prayerful efforts of every officer, every parent, and every member of the Church.

I repeat now:

"If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me.

"For whosoever will save his life shall lose it; and whosoever will lose his life for my sake shall find it.

"For what is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole world, [physical desires, gratification of appetites, money, wealth]—gain the whole world, and lose his own soul? or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?

"For the Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father with his angels; and then he shall reward every man according to his works." (Matt. 16:24-27.)

In these words of the Savior we have designated either by direct statement or implication four eternal truths—

First, the existence of God our Eternal Father.

Second, the divine Sonship of Jesus Christ.

Third, that man has a spirit as well as a body, and he may direct his life to serve him,

Fourth, that soul development results from complete control of physical desires and passions.

With that scripture in conclusion I desire to call attention to another fundamental truth:

Friday, October 5

First Day

"... a marvelous work is about to come forth among the children of men.

"Therefore, O ye that embark in the service of God, see that ye serve him with all your heart, might, mind and strength, that ye may stand blameless before God at the last day.

"Therefore, if ye have desires to serve God ye are called to the work;

"For behold the field is white already to harvest; and lo, he that thrusteth in his sickle with his might, the same layeth up in store that he perisheth not, but bringeth salvation to his soul;

"And faith, hope, charity and love, with an eye single to the glory of God, qualify him for the work.

"Remember faith, virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, brotherly kindness, godliness, charity, humility, diligence.

"Ask, and ye shall receive; knock, and it shall be opened unto you." (D & C Sec 4.)

That this work has come forth and is now established by divine revelation testifying to the existence of God the Father, his son Jesus Christ, and that through Jesus Christ and his gospel mankind will be brought back into his presence, I bear witness to you, and to the world, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Elder Clifford E. Young, Assistant to the Twelve, will now speak to us. He will be followed by Bishop Thorpe B. Isaacson of the Presiding Bishopric.

ELDER CLIFFORD E. YOUNG

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve Apostles

MY BRETHREN AND SISTERS, I am sure you can appreciate my feelings in occupying this position following the impressive address to which we have just listened. I trust that what I shall say may add to your faith.

You will remember that following the crucifixion of the Savior and his resurrection, he tarried with his disciples for some forty days, giving them instructions and administering to them the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper. Then he assured them that as he left them, he would again come in like manner to bless the children of men. He enjoined upon the Twelve that they should tarry in Jerusalem until they could be endowed with power from on high; then they were to go forth and to proclaim the gospel, his gospel, to all nations, a message of eternal life.

So, following these events, we find the people gathered "with one accord" on the Day of Pentecost, and Peter, feeling this great power that had been promised, declared to the multitude Jesus Christ and him crucified. We are told that "they were pricked in their hearts," impressed by the Spirit, and they cried with one accord, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?"

Then Peter taught them the basic principles of the gospel, that they should repent and be baptized for the remission of their sins; and he promised them that they, too, would have the blessings of the Holy Ghost which had rested upon him and others of the Twelve. Later, we find Peter and John going up to the temple.

Now Peter and John went up together into the temple at the hour of prayer, being the ninth hour.

And a certain man lame from his mother's womb was carried, whom they laid daily at the gate of the temple which is called Beautiful, to ask alms of them that entered into the temple;

Who seeing Peter and John about to go into the temple asked an alms.

And Peter, fastening his eyes upon him with John, said, Look on us.

And he gave heed unto them, expecting to receive something of them. [Something material.]

Then Peter said, Silver and gold have I none; but such as I have give I thee: In the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth rise up and walk.

And he took him by the right hand, and lifted him up: and immediately his feet and ankle bones received strength.

And he leaping up stood, and walked, and entered with them into the temple, walking and leaping, and praising God.

And all the people saw him walking and praising God:

And they knew that it was he which sat for alms at the Beautiful gate of the temple: and they were filled with wonder and amazement at that which had happened unto him.

And as the lame man which was healed held Peter and John, all the people ran together unto them in the porch that is called Solomon's, greatly wondering. (Acts 3:1-11.)

When the fame of this miracle spread, people gathered from near and far to listen to the message, as they had on the Day of Pentecost. Among these people were some who doubtless had participated in the crucifixion of Jesus. They had not realized what they had done. Then Peter, preaching to them, said:

And now, brethren, I wot that through ignorance ye did it, as did also your rulers, [I know, using the old English expression, "I wot," I know that through ignorance ye did it, as did also your rulers.]

But those things, which God before had shewed by the mouth of all his prophets, that Christ should suffer, he hath so fulfilled.

Repent ye therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord;

And he shall send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you:

Whom the heaven must receive until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began. (Ibid., 3:17-21.)

There are three things, my brethren and sisters, that I would like to touch on in connection with these scriptures which I have read. Time will not permit my enlarging on them.

The first one: "Silver and gold have I none; but such as I have give I thee." Then the power of God was manifested, and he was healed—not by silver and gold, not by something tangible, but an inward power to the afflicted, a power just as real and more potent than had he received silver and gold. It is something that stimulates our souls and builds our faith, prompts us to live nearer our Heavenly Father and more fully to keep his commandments.

As we listened to President McKay, I had a feeling that if we could leave this conference with the inspiration and mellowing influence of the President's message, we would have an influence for good wherever we go and with those with whom we come in contact, and our communities would reap a blessing thereby.

It is very much like the feelings and emotions that are stirred within us when we attend a funeral service. Our hearts are drawn in love and sympathy, and we leave feeling that if there is anything we can do to bring comfort to an aching heart, we will do it. I have wondered many times if the Lord has not given us trials, even death, in order that our hearts might be touched, that we might feel something that is greater than silver and gold.

So it is here this morning. We have heard President McKay quote this verse which I would like to give on this occasion. It is so appropriate.

If there is righteousness in the heart,

There will be beauty in the character.

If there is beauty in the character,

There will be harmony in the home.

If there is harmony in the home,

There will be order in the nation.

If there is order in the nation,

There will be peace in the world.

One step after another leads to a life of peace. How much better the world could be and would be if we could be conscious of the spiritual forces, inspiring such attributes as love and devotion.

Another phase I would like to mention here: Peter said to the people who were gathered, "[I know] I wot that through ignorance ye did it. . . . Repent ye therefore, and be converted. . . ." Here we have Peter, who was raised under the Mosaic law with its strict codes, and yet the Spirit promised by the Savior had rested upon him, and here he manifested sympathy toward even those who had participated in the crucifixion of the Savior, because they knew not what they had done. He was teaching the lesson that Jesus had taught while on the cross when he said, "Father, forgive them for they know not what they do."*

So Peter said, I know that what ye did ye did in ignorance; therefore, repent. What a blessed privilege, and what a source of consolation it is, to know that it is in our knowledge of things for which we are held responsible. The Lord recognizes that his children are not always aware of the things required of them, and hence his compassion and love are extended to his children. The great principle of repentance is vouchsafed to them, that they may turn from error and evil and return to God and feel the power of these blessings that come through faithfulness and devotion to his work when once his work is understood by his children. So we have in this a message of hope.

Finally, as Peter said, "Repent and be converted." We need conversion in our homes. We need to correct some of the practices of faultfinding, of misconstruing motives.

Now we are in the throes of a political campaign. Whatever we do, brethren and sisters, let us not impugn the motives of our brethren because they do not agree with us; and may they not question our motives. Let us recognize principle. We may disagree with our neighbors as to policy or methods, but let us not question the integrity of anyone. This leads to bearing of false witness. It leads to enmity and the cankering of one's soul. I think much of the unhappiness found in homes is due to faultfinding and questioning of motives. We need to cultivate the spirit of understanding and forbearance. We can have this spirit if we kneel together in prayer and if we show a sympathetic interest in one another's problems, in the problems of our children. Be interested in them and in their well-being.

I was impressed recently in going into the home of one of our stake presidents in Logan. He and his wife have two lovely boys. One of them was going out on a Scout trip during the week to win a merit badge. Do you know that good mother of the boy who was only twelve years old was taking her sleeping bag and going to camp out with him under the stars to give him guidance and help, knowing that in his extreme youth he needed that guidance?

As I learned of this, I thought, "What an ideal mother! What a lovely spirit to have in a home!" That is what we need. We need to be converted to some of the old concepts and to carry them out in our lives. Then we will have righteousness in our hearts. We will have joy and peace in the world because of the blessings given unto us by our Heavenly Father through his divine Spirit, blessings that were given to the disciples on the Day of Pentecost, that they might proclaim the truth.

May we not only be able to proclaim the truth in word, but also in deed! May we be able to take from this meeting the spirit of this solemn occasion with its impressiveness into our homes, our wards, and stakes, and, above all, into our lives, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Elder Clifford E. Young, Assistant to the Twelve, has just spoken to us. Bishop Thorpe B. Isaacson of the Presiding Bishopric will be our next speaker.

BISHOP THORPE B. ISAACSON

First Counselor in the Presiding Bishopric

PRESIDENT MCKAY, President Richards, President Clark, my dear brothers and sisters, and friends of the radio and television audience, I wish every person in this vast congregation could stand here and look at this beautiful sight, with a background of these beautiful Singing Mothers. I humbly pray that I may have an interest in your faith and prayers, that I shall say nothing that will detract from the beautiful addresses that we have already listened to.

There is great strength that comes to those who attend the sessions of the general conferences of the Church, or to those who listen to them over radio and television. Those who read the conference messages will be strengthened in their faith because these conferences, in the planning of them, everything that is said and done here is done under the inspiration of God, our Eternal Father. You must know, of course, that we come to you very humbly, full of love, prayerful, and dependent upon the Lord.

I would like to use as my theme for a few moments verses five and six from the third chapter of Proverbs. My reason for deciding upon this theme is that recently I have had contacts with a few young men, fine young men, who for one reason or another have been confused. Teachers have disturbed them, and they were seeking counsel.

Trust in the Lord with all thine heart; and lean not unto thine own understanding.

In all thy ways acknowledge him, and he shall direct thy paths.

That is the best advice that I could give to any person who may be disturbed. I think to follow that course would give us the answer to any problem or any sorrow or any disturbance with which we may now or later be confronted.

"Lean not unto thine own understanding." That scripture reminds me, if I may inject it without being misunderstood, of the proceedings at the inauguration nearly four years ago of President Dwight D. Eisenhower, where he bowed his head and prayed because he felt the need for divine aid and guidance.

That same course has been followed by other great leaders. In fact, as I have tried to study great men, I could not find one who has not followed that same practice. This was even true of Jesus, the Son of God, as he went into the Garden of Gethsemane. It was my pleasure to stand there a couple of years ago, in Jerusalem, and when I think now of the Garden of Gethsemane on the outskirts of Jerusalem, I think of the place where Jesus, the Son of God, went to pray. He did not lean on his own understanding, but there he went, not once, but on many occasions, seeking strength from his Father. This was particularly true the night before his crucifixion when he desired to be blessed and sustained by his Father to go through the ordeal that was to face him on the morrow.

Our beloved Prophet Joseph did not lean on his own understanding. No, he went into the Sacred Grove to seek divine guidance. As I stood on the banks of the Susquehanna River some months ago, I could not help thinking of the visit that Joseph and Oliver made to the banks of that river when they needed divine guidance, and they could not lean on their own understanding. They went to that secluded place close to his home where they, too, knelt down on their knees and asked God to reveal his will unto them, and he sent a heavenly messenger, John the Baptist, to deliver his message. "Lean not unto thine own understanding."

I have always felt bad to think that that great organization as we know it—the United Nations, composed of representative leaders throughout the world—studying and planning and trying to solve the problem of a just and everlasting peace, do not open their sessions with prayer. A man who attended that session once reported to me that he went away from there sad. There was confusion; there was anger; there was disagreement. There had been no petition to the Lord asking for divine guidance, and yet the very peace of the world largely hinges on that great body of men. Because some disbelieve and some will not admit divine guidance, we are denied the blessings that would result if that very important group of men would call upon the Lord for inspiration and guidance.

What would our Founding Fathers think of that? Our Pioneer fathers? Our Pilgrim fathers, and those who formed the Constitution of this land? They did not lean on their own understanding. I hope the leaders of the nations of the world will change that policy in the United Nations and lean not on their own understanding.

Recently as I was traveling in an airplane headed for Texas, and as the luncheon tray was served, there was a card on that tray, the first that I had ever seen, on which was inscribed: "For those who want to say . . . a table of grace." I felt comforted to know that in traveling in a plane, someone had had the spiritual courage to understand and recognize that a table of grace or prayer was appropriate on an airplane, and there were three prepared blessings. Then at the bottom were inscribed these words: "You may bow your head in prayer if you so desire." I thought how appropriate and what spiritual courage and faith the one who originated that idea possessed, and I noticed that around that plane, there were others who silently bowed their heads and thanked the Lord for the blessings and grace on that food.

Friday, October 5

Recently I read an article. I do not recall the paper or magazine. It indicated a very encouraging religious trend in colleges and universities throughout the land. In our colleges and universities there is a revival of religious training, and it is having a dynamic effect on the lives of the young people.

There was a time in academic circles that one detected sneering at religion as an "outworn superstition," but that is past. Courses in biblical literature, Christian ethics, and church history had almost disappeared from the curriculum, but that is changing. Many educators have detected that scoffing has now given way to very serious inquiry. Religion again is "intellectually respectable" and sound. Students and teachers have a growing disposition to seek faith in God, and they realize that the ultimate answers lie far beyond the reach of scientific research.

Many of our large universities have now experienced a great growth in undergraduate study for religious courses, and many churches are now attracting crowds that overflow their meeting-houses. Attendance at religious courses has doubled. Many colleges and universities now hold what they call a "Religious Emphasis Week," and specialists have found that eighty percent recognize the need for religious faith, and now there are very few who will admit atheism. "Lean not on thine own understanding."

Religion in all its forms is very popular and a significant topic in formal debates and common conversation by intelligent people today. In the educational world, the indifference long accorded religion has now given way. It was only in recent years that the study of theology was merely tolerated. Today it is almost a universal acknowledgment that the study of religion rightfully belongs to every person.

That new interest in religion is widespread, and many have come to recognize that science alone cannot measure up to expectations in providing answers to the deepest questions of religion, and sometimes religion has something tremendous to say in the present world struggle. This change or revival is one of honest and intelligent inquiry, and students are approaching courses with open-mindedness.

It would be well if all students would place religion first in their lives, and this would give them faith in living in the world today, as well as in tomorrow's world. The love of God and the seeking of his divine guidance will lend strength to the soul of every person.

Yes, there is a divine spark in every man's soul that never wholly goes out. Religion plays a great part in the life of every soul. The cycle has now come around full turn. Perhaps once we may have doubted our faith, but now we have come to doubt our doubts.

The Church has been the fountain-head of good over the centuries, and its spiritual message of God's love for man has brought not only comfort and pureness of heart to men and women down through the ages, but it has also inspired them to the heights of achievement when they turn to God for strength.

Young people, ask and it shall be given. Watch your thinking, young people. Do not let anyone disturb your thinking. There may be those who lack the faith of your forefathers. Remember, you are today where your thoughts have brought you. You will be tomorrow, and the next day, and every day where your thoughts will take you. "In all thy ways acknowledge him." Keep your ideals. Ideals are like the stars: You cannot touch them with your hands, but like the mariner, you can use them for your guidance; and if you follow them, they will light the way, and you will reach your destination. But, "lean not on thine own understanding." Thank God for the religious purpose of the membership of the Latter-day Saint Church.

I am grateful to God for his kindness and blessings unto me. I know that God lives. I know that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the Living God. I know that the Prophet today, the President of the Church, President David O. McKay, is God's servant on the earth. What a blessing he is to the people, and if we are ever in doubt in knowing what course we may follow, we need only stop for one second and ask one question of ourselves, "What would the President of the Church do in a similar position?"

God bless us with great faith, not with self-sufficiency, that we may not lean on our own understanding, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER MARION D. HANKS

Of the First Council of the Seventy

THE GOSPEL of Jesus Christ teaches us that the salvation and exaltation of men are made possible solely through the graciousness and goodness and love of God in his gift to us of his Divine Son, whose life exemplified the Father's purposeful plan for abundant living and whose sacrificial death made available to us and gave us a vision of our eternal possibilities as children of God. From the record of Nephi we read these impressive words:

For we labor diligently to write, to persuade our children, and also our brethren, to believe in Christ, and to be reconciled to God; for we know that it is by grace that we are saved, after all we can do. (2 Nephi 25:23.)

The records of latter-day revelation, as well as those of former days, attest to the great truth that through the atonement of Christ all men will certainly be resurrected, and that all who are willing and obedient may enjoy the blessing of God's great gift of eternal life.

The Latter-day Saint understands that through the gift of God, through the great atoning sacrifice of his Divine

The Choir and congregation joined in singing the hymn, "O Say, What Is Truth?"

President David O. McKay:

Elder Marion D. Hanks of the First Council of Seventy will now speak to us.

Son, all that we might achieve is made possible for us, but he understands also that in the plan of God it is necessary that we accept this free gift if we would enjoy all of our eternal possibilities. For the Lord told his people through the Prophet in 1832,

For what doth it profit a man if a gift is bestowed upon him, and he receive not the gift? Behold, he rejoices not in that which is given unto him, neither rejoices in him who is the giver of the gift. (D & C 88:33.)

What must we do to "receive" his gift? The answer of the prophets has been the same, both anciently and in this dispensation, both in the eastern hemisphere and the western. Brother Clifford Young alluded this morning to the answer given by Peter at Pentecost to those who, having been pricked in their hearts by the witness of Christ born by the apostles, asked what they must do. The answer was clear and unequivocal:

Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. (Acts 2:38.)

Friday, October 5

First Day

Nephi in his parting testimony expressed his feeling of compassion for his own people, for the Jew, and for the gentile, and said:

But behold, for none of these can I hope except they shall be reconciled unto Christ, and enter into the narrow gate, and walk in the straight path which leads to life, and continue in the path until the end of the day of probation. (2 Nephi 33:9.)

And after bearing his witness of the Messiah to his people this same prophet said:

For the gate by which ye should enter is repentance and baptism by water; and then cometh a remission of your sins by fire and by the Holy Ghost. (Ibid., 31:17.)

In 1831 the Lord revealed to the Prophet the following:

... he that receiveth my gospel receiveth me; and he that receiveth not my gospel receiveth not me.

And this is my gospel—repentance and baptism by water, and then cometh the baptism of fire and the Holy Ghost. . . . (D & C 39:5-6.)

There is one other thought companion to these. Testifying that fundamental to everything we believe and hope for and have faith in is the great sacrifice of the Son of the Living God, knowing that he requires of us that we accept his great gift, there is something else necessary if we are to enjoy the high spiritual possibilities which it is within our capacity to achieve. Let me refer to the teachings of Nephi to his people after he had taught them faith, repentance, baptism, and the reception of the gift of the Holy Ghost, as previously quoted. Said he,

And then are ye in this straight and narrow path which leads to eternal life; yea, ye have entered in by the gate; ye have done according to the commandments of the Father and the Son; . . .

And now, my beloved brethren, after ye have gotten into this straight and narrow path, I would ask if all is done? Behold, I say unto you, Nay; for ye have not come thus far save it were by the word of Christ with unshaken faith in him, relying wholly upon the merits of him who is mighty to save.

Wherefore, ye must press forward with a steadfastness in Christ, having a perfect brightness of hope, and a love of God and of all men. Wherefore, if ye shall press forward, feasting upon the word of Christ, and endure to the end, behold, thus saith the Father: Ye shall have eternal life.

And now, behold, my beloved brethren, this is the way; and there is none other way nor name given under heaven whereby man can be saved in the kingdom of God. . . . (2 Nephi 31:18-21.)

We accept with all our souls the absolute efficacy and essentiality of the atonement of Christ. We attest to the words of Peter and of other prophets ancient and modern that it is necessary for us to accept our Heavenly Father's gift by obedience to what we know as the first principles and ordinances of the gospel. We know also that if we are to enjoy the high possibilities for which we are created and which we might desire as children of God, we must build upon our faith and obedience with right thinking and well-doing. We must press forward with steadfastness in Christ, having a perfect brightness of hope, and a love of God and of all men. Through so doing, if we endure to the end, we shall have eternal life. There is no other way.

I testify of this in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Elder Marion D. Hanks of the First Council of Seventy has just addressed us. Elder Marion G. Romney of the Council of the Twelve will be our concluding speaker.

ELDER MARION G. ROMNEY

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

MY BELOVED brethren and sisters: The very short talk just given by Brother Marion D. Hanks reminds me of an experience I had in Provo in the early days of my ministry. While I was attending a Utah Stake conference, President Roy Murdock showed me through a recently remodeled Church edifice. I expressed satisfaction with it and remarked that I thought they had everything in it that they would need. He said, "Yes, Brother Romney, we have everything we need except a trap door behind the pulpit to let the speakers through when they talk too long."

We do not need a trap door here for Brother Hanks. I appreciate very much his yielding so much time to me.

I was tremendously moved by President McKay's opening address. With it he set this conference on a very high spiritual plane. I have also enjoyed what the brethren who have followed him have said. I am sure that what I shall say will be anti-climax to President McKay's great talk, but I hope it will be in harmony therewith. I invite you to join with me in praying that our Heavenly Father will bless us these few minutes while I speak, to the end that we may conclude this meeting on the same high plane on which President McKay launched it.

I have in mind making a few remarks about "the perfecting of the saints," which Paul listed first when, in writing to the Ephesians, he set forth the purposes for which Church officers and teachers were given. You will remember that he said:

And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers;

For the perfecting of the saints. . . (Eph. 4:11-12.)

It has been said that the major responsibilities resting upon the membership of the Church may be classified under three heads:

1. Preaching the gospel.
2. Performing vicariously the saving ordinances of the gospel for the dead.
3. Perfecting the Saints.

As to the preaching of the gospel, our obligation is to carry it "unto the ends of the world," "unto every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people," "and before kings and rulers." (D & C 1:23; 133:37.)

It is thrilling to contemplate the progress being made in carrying out this great commission. I am sure we shall all be inspired anew when we hear Elders Moyle and Bennion report their recent tours of the South American and the European missions.

That in discharging our obligations to the dead we are keeping pace with our missionary service is abundantly clear from the fact that western United States is blanketed with temples in which a prodigious work for the dead is being carried forward night and day. Much work is also being done in Canada, Hawaii, and Switzerland, and temples are now being reared in England and in far-off New Zealand.

Statistics also indicate that in "the perfecting of the saints" we are making headway. During the last twenty years there has been a great increase in the payment of tithing, in fast offerings, and other financial contributions, and there has been a substantial increase in attendance at Sacrament meetings and stake conferences. As to many other activities, there are like encouraging reports, all of which give us cause to rejoice.

We have reason, therefore, to take courage and strive for still better records. And as we do so, may I suggest that we keep in mind always that neither statistics nor Church averages guarantee perfection. Important as these are in stirring us to activity and keeping us aware of our progress, the fact remains that attaining the perfection commanded by the Savior and alluded to by Paul is an individual matter.

Years ago I read an article, which, as I remember it, made the point that while living the Word of Wisdom would on the average improve the health and lengthen the life span of the members of any group who observed it, still no one member of the group could safely rely upon receiving the promised blessings himself. I did not believe the doctrine then, and I do not believe it now.

The perfection upon which exaltation hangs, I repeat, is an individual matter. It is conditioned upon the observance of celestial laws as they apply to earth life. The Word of Wisdom is one of them, so also are chastity, tithing, observance of the Sabbath day, prayer, honesty, industry, love of God and fellow men, patience, kindness, charity, and all the rest of the principles and ordinances of the gospel of Jesus Christ. Each individual who ob-

Friday, October 5

First Day

serves one or more of these laws shall receive the blessings predicated thereon, and each Church member who will, with all the energy of his soul, diligently strive to live them all, shall receive the blessings predicated upon such striving. Eternal life, the greatest gift of God, is that blessing, and it will follow the living of the gospel as the night the day, regardless of statistics or averages, or of what others think or say or do, for the Lord Almighty himself has said that

... every soul who forsaketh his sins and cometh unto me, and calleth on my name, and obeyeth my voice, and keepeth my commandments, shall see my face and know that I am. (D & C 93:1.)

The converse, that every member of the Church who refuses to do so will fall short of the glory of God, is just as true, for the Lord has also said that

... no unclean thing can enter into his kingdom; therefore nothing entereth into his rest save it be those who have washed their garments in my blood, because of their faith, and the repentance of all their sins, and their faithfulness unto the end. (3 Nephi 27:19.)

If I had the power, I would impress every member of the Church with the transcendent import to himself of strictly obeying the principles of the gospel. In these remarks I hope I can so present this matter that at least one of you will join with me in a resolution to make a greater effort to do so in the future than we have ever made in the past. With the great prize of eternal life set before us, and in light of the emphasis the Lord has put upon the fact that this eternal life is attainable only upon condition that we "endure to the end, in following the example of the Son of the living God," it does seem to me that no Latter-day Saint should be content to stand day after day in the same place on the way to eternal life.

On the mountain Jesus instructed his disciples to be "perfect, even as" their "Father which is in heaven is perfect." To the Nephites he varied the instruction just a little. He wanted them to "be perfect even as" he, or their "Father who is in heaven is perfect." John, the beloved apostle, made plain that all of us, if we see the Savior, must purify ourselves, "even as he is pure." (Matt. 5:48; 3 Nephi 12:48; I John 3:3.)

Because there are so many people about us who have no vision of the goal to which we are inspired by the gospel, we are in danger of becoming surfeited with the things of the world and are apt to slacken in our daily striving to move onward in our quest for eternal life. It has therefore been one of the burdens of Church leadership in all dispensations to encourage the Saints to keep these things constantly in their remembrance.

Peter, the chief apostle, was deeply concerned about this matter when, almost within the shadow of his own cross, he penned his second and, so far as we know, his last epistle. Greeting the saints, who he said had "obtained like precious faith" with him, he reminded them that they had been rescued from the lusts of this world and brought into glory and virtue through the righteousness of Christ. He assured them that by possessing themselves of the Christian virtues he enumerated, and which President McKay this day repeated in our hearing, they could be made "partakers of the divine nature."

"For," said he,

if these things be in you, and abound, they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ.

But he that lacketh these things is blind, and cannot see afar off, and hath forgotten that he was purged from his old sins.

Wherefore the rather, brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure: for if ye do these things, ye shall never fall:

For so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

Wherefore I will not be negligent to put you always in remembrance of these things, though ye know them, and be established in the present truth.

Yea, I think it meet, as long as I am in this tabernacle, to stir you up by putting you in remembrance;

Knowing that shortly I must put off this my tabernacle, even as our Lord Jesus Christ hath shewed me.

Moreover I will endeavour that ye may be able after my decease to have these things always in remembrance. (II Peter 1:8-15.)

The Prophet Joseph Smith in his day over and over again pleaded with the Saints in the very words of Peter to make their "calling and election sure." Explaining what he meant by this admonition he said,

After a person has faith in Christ, repents of his sins, and is baptized for the remission of his sins and receives the Holy Ghost . . . then let him continue to humble himself before God, hungering and thirsting after righteousness, and living by every word of God, and the Lord will soon say unto him, Son, thou shalt be exalted. When the Lord has thoroughly proved him, and finds that the man is determined to serve Him at all hazards, then the man will find his calling and his election made sure. (D. H. C., Vol. 3, p. 380.)

In similar vein, our present leaders are continually putting us in remembrance of the importance of living the gospel. They are repeatedly urging us to gird up our loins and take upon us the whole armor of Christ. We heard President McKay make the plea this morning, and only recently and on more than one occasion, we have heard President McKay urge us to become "partakers of the divine nature,"—I think this is one of his favorite quotations,—which Peter says we may do by escaping through the righteousness of Christ "the corruption that is in the world through lust." (II Peter 1:4.)

Let us be reminded that we came into the Church of Jesus Christ through a cleansing and a purifying process. Believing that Jesus brought about our resurrection and put into operation the great plan of mercy by which our sins may be washed away in his blood, we developed a faith in him which moved us to repentance in the hope that we, by complying with the saving principles of the gospel, might be raised unto life eternal and gain an exaltation "through the atonement of Christ and the power of his resurrection." (Moroni 9:41.)

Then, in final preparation for Church membership, and as evidence of our willingness to take upon us the name of Christ and of our determination to keep his commandments, we were baptized by immersion for the remission of sin. As Jesus came forth from the tomb with a glorified body, having left all corruptibleness in the grave, so we through baptism should have buried in the watery grave the corruption of our sins, and come forth to walk in newness of life, never again to return to worldly lusts. Thus prepared we were confirmed members of the Church and given the gift of the Holy Ghost. Through these principles and ordinances we were cleansed and purified. Having thus washed our garments in the blood of Christ, we entered through the straight gate and stood redeemed on the narrow way which leads to life eternal. It should have then been, and it should now be, the controlling desire of every Church member, and it is the desire of every member who is on the way to eternal life always to retain this redeemed status.

With complete surrender to the spirit of the gospel let us, honestly and without guile, search our own souls and find the weakness which presently impedes our upward climb to eternal life. If that weakness be faultfinding, evil speaking of the Lord's anointed, or profaning the name of Deity, let us desist. If it be neglecting our prayers, let us pause night and morning in our mad rush and kneel with our families and in our secret chambers while we pour out our souls in thanksgiving and petition, until hungering and thirsting after righteousness we are filled with the Holy Ghost. If it be failure to obtain the sealing ordinances of the temple for ourselves and families, let us straightway prepare to enter that holy place and obtain them before it is too late. If it be the giving way to anger or appetite for the things forbidden in the Word of Wisdom, or surrendering to baser lusts; if it be desecration of the Sabbath day or refusing to contribute of our time and means according to the laws of the Church for the building of the kingdom; whatever it be, let us find it, recognize it, and do something about it daily.

Let us resolve never to relax in our striving for that perfection in ourselves which will bring us to eternal life. Doing so we can all measurably hasten that great day foreshadowed by Paul when he instructed the Saints that Jesus prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers;

. . . gave some, apostles; and some,

For the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ:

Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ: (Eph. 4:11-13.)

That we may do so, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ, our Redeemer. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Elder Marion G. Romney of the Council of the Twelve has just spoken to us.

In announcing the attendance of our distinguished visitors, I think I stumbled over the name of Dr. John L. Clarke, president of Ricks College, who is in attendance here also as president of the Rexburg Stake.

I commend this large audience for the perfect order of this session. And now we ask that you will confer a favor in continuing to contribute to the orderly conduct of those who attend the sessions of the Conference.

I have a note here that there are literature distributors at our gates. We implore those who receive the leaflets that are being passed out not to throw them on the street. Please cooperate with our City Fathers and use the receptacles that have been furnished by our city officials. (Laughter) Well, that is all right. This also applies to our Tabernacle Grounds. Please do not clutter this beautiful square with papers, lunch boxes, and so forth. There are receptacles conveniently placed for your waste paper.

We should also like to ask you to clear the building between meetings. Please do not eat your lunches in this sacred building.

Elder Edward L. Clissold, president of the Oahu Stake, has sent us word that the beautiful Anthuriums and other tropical flowers that beautify this building this morning bring to us the greetings and love of the members of the Church in Hawaii, and I wish to add, appreciatively, that these flowers were flown from Hawaii by the United Air Lines free of charge. We thank them for cooperating with our Hawaiian Saints in thus beautifying this Tabernacle.

This afternoon we shall again be favored by the presence and the singing of our Relief Society Singing Mothers, who will now favor us by singing, "Prayer for Service," conducted by Sister Florence J. Madsen.

The closing prayer will be offered by Elder Winslow B. Whiteley, president of the Cassia Stake, after which this Conference will stand adjourned until two o'clock this afternoon.

The Singing Mothers sang a selection, "Prayer for Service."

Elder Winslow B. Whiteley, president of the Cassia Stake, offered the closing prayer.

Conference adjourned until 2:00 p.m.

FIRST DAY

AFTERNOON MEETING

Conference reconvened Friday afternoon at 2:00 p.m., Friday, October 5.

The music for this session of the Conference was furnished by the Relief Society Singing Mothers from the Northern Utah Region, Ogden Region, and Summit Stake.

President David O. McKay, who presided and conducted the meeting, opened the session promptly at 2 o'clock.

President David O. McKay:

Members of the Church are convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square in Salt Lake City in the second session of the 127th Semi-Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

There are present on the stand this afternoon all the General Authorities

These services are also being televised over KSL-TV, Channel 5, of Salt Lake City, and are being heard over radio station KSL of Salt Lake City and by arrangement through KSL over 11 radio stations in Utah, Idaho, and Nevada, and three television stations in Utah and Idaho. The names of these stations have already been announced to the radio audience.

We desire to express our appreciation to these various radio stations for their courtesy in making available their time and facilities for these broadcasts.

We are favored again this afternoon by the presence of the Relief Society Singing Mothers from the Northern Utah Region, Ogden Region, and Summit Stake, with Florence J. Madsen conducting, and Frank W. Asper at the organ.

We shall begin these services by the Relief Society Singing Mothers singing, "Holy Lord God," conducted by Sister Madsen.

The opening prayer will be offered by Elder Ross C. Lee, president of the Gooding Stake.

The Choir will now sing, "Holy Lord God."

As announced by the President, the Singing Mothers sang as an opening number, "Holy Lord God."

President Ross C. Lee of the Gooding Stake offered the invocation.

President David O. McKay:

The invocation was offered by President Ross C. Lee of the Gooding Stake.

The Relief Society Singing Mothers will now favor us with, "The Twenty-Third Psalm."

Following this, President Joseph Fielding Smith will speak to us.

The Singing Mothers sang an anthem, "The Twenty-Third Psalm."

President David O. McKay:

President Joseph Fielding Smith of the Council of the Twelve Apostles will be our first speaker this afternoon. He will be followed by Elder LeGrand Richards.

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

AS A WITNESS to the mission of the Lord Jesus Christ, I address my remarks not only to those who are assembled here, but also to those who are scattered abroad, many of whom may not be members of the Church.

The Lord said that in the mouth of two or three witnesses, all things should be established, and he has always had witnesses who could bear testimony of this truth by divine revelation and appointment.

When he sent the missionaries out in the early days after the restoration of the gospel, the Lord said he sent them that they might "be prepared in all things when I shall send you again to magnify the calling whereunto I have called you, and the mission with which I have commissioned you.

"Behold, I sent you out to testify and warn the people, and it becometh every man who hath been warned to warn his neighbor.

"Therefore, they are left without excuse, and their sins are upon their own heads." (D & C 88:80-82.)

So the words that are spoken by those who are commissioned and have the authority to bear witness of the truth are binding not only upon the members of the Church, but also upon all unto whom this message comes.

In regard to the coming forth of the Book of Mormon, the Lord said that he would choose witnesses. There should be three special witnesses that should bear record to the world, and said he:

"And there is none other which shall view it, save it be a few according to the will of God, to bear testimony of his word unto the children of men; for the

Friday, October 5

First Day

Lord God hath said that the words of the faithful should speak as if it were from the dead.

"Wherefore, the Lord God will proceed to bring forth the words of the book; and in the mouth of as many witnesses as seemeth him good will he establish his word; and wo be unto him that rejecteth the word of God!" (2 Ne. 27:13-14.)

I shall not take time to read the testimonies of the Three Witnesses, nor of the Eight Witnesses to the Book of Mormon. These are published in each copy of that book. The testimony of Oliver Cowdery, David Whitmer, and Martin Harris was that in the presence of an angel they beheld the record from which the Book of Mormon was translated, and had the privilege of examining it in the presence of that heavenly being, and the voice of the Lord sounded to them from the heavens calling upon them to bear witness of this truth, to every nation, kindred, tongue, and people.

Eight other witnesses beheld the plates, but not in the presence of an angel. These are the witnesses spoken of in the Book of Mormon, whom the Lord said he would call to bear record of the truth of this Book of Mormon.

All those who have heard of the Book of Mormon, all those who have read it, have had the opportunity to read the testimonies of Oliver Cowdery, David Whitmer, and Martin Harris, who bore solemn testimony to the truth of this record, that is, of its being revealed. If they refuse to read (and yet their attention has been called to this fact, that the Lord has spoken, that he has given into the hands of the world today the record of those people who lived anciently) and they turn away and reject it, they will have to answer for it before the judgment seat of God.

And wo be unto those who take it upon themselves to fight these revelations.

I bear witness to you that the Lord has made it very clear to me by revelation which I have received, and many of you who are here present can bear witness likewise, that these things are true, and that is the privilege of any sincere person who will endeavor to read with a prayerful spirit and a desire to know whether the book is true or not; and he will receive that testimony according to the promise that was made by Moroni, who sealed the record to come forth in the Dispensation of the Fulness of Times.

I thought it would be well, however, to bring two testimonies here and read them, one from David Whitmer and one from Oliver Cowdery. When I read these, I am going to read the copies that I made from the original sources. This is not a copy from a copy, but a copy from the original, that I read to you.

This is a testimony of David Whitmer, given in Richmond, Missouri, March 19, 1881—copied from the original document, which was published in the Richmond Conservator on that date.

"Unto all nations, kindreds, tongues and people unto whom these presence shall come—

"It having been represented by one John Murphy of Polo [Caldwell County], Missouri, that I had in a conversation with him last summer, denied my testimony as one of the three witnesses to the Book of Mormon—

"To the end thereof, that he may understand me now if he did not then, and that the world may know the truth, I wish now, standing as it were, in the very sunset of life, and in the fear of God, once for all to make this public statement:

"That I have never at any time, denied that testimony or any part thereof, which has so long since been published with that book, as one of the three witnesses.

"Those who know me best, will know that I have always adhered to that testimony—And that no man may be misled or doubt my present views in regard to the same, I do now again affirm the truth of all my statements as then made and published.

"He that hath an ear to hear, let him hear: It was no delusion. What is written is written, and he that readeth let him understand. . . .

"And if any man doubt should he not carefully and honestly read and understand the same before presuming to sit in judgment, and condemning the light which shineth in darkness, and sheweth the way to eternal life, as pointed out by the hand of God?

"In the Spirit of Christ who hath said follow thou me; for 'I am the life, the light, and the way.' I submit this statement to the world. God, in whom I trust being my judge, as to the sincerity of my motives and the faith and hope that is in me of eternal life.

"My sincere desire is that the world may be benefited by the plain and simple statement of the truth.

"And all the honor be to the Father, the Son and the Holy Ghost, which is one God. Amen."

The following editorial in the Richmond Conservator was also published:

"Elsewhere we publish a letter from David Whitmer, Sen., an old and well known citizen of Ray, as well as an endorsement of his standing as a man, signed by a number of the leading citizens of this community, in reply to some unwarranted aspersions made upon him.

"There is no doubt that Mr. Whitmer, who was one of the Three Witnesses of the authenticity of the gold plates, from which he asserts that Joe Smith translated the Book of Mormon (a facsimile of them he now has in his possession with the original records)" —may I be pardoned to pause there and say he did not have the original records; what the editor meant was that he had a copy of the manuscript of the Book of Mormon, which manuscript was used in the translation of the record—"is firmly convinced of its divine origin, and while he makes no effort to obtrude his views or belief, he simply wants the world to know that so far as he is concerned there is no 'variableness or shadow of turning.' Having resided here for half of a century, it is with no little pride that he points to his past record, with the consciousness that he has done nothing derogatory to his character as a citizen and a believer in the Son of Mary to warrant such an attack on him, coming from what source it may, and now, with the lilies of seventy-five winters crowning him like an aureole, and, his pilgrimage on earth well nigh ended he reiterates his former statement and will leave futurity to solve the problem that he was but a passing witness of its fulfillment."

From a letter written by Oliver Cowdery, another of the three witnesses, to his brother-in-law, Phineas Young, March 23, 1846, from Tiffin, Ohio, I copy this:

"I have cherished a hope, and that one of my fondest, that I might leave such a character as those who might believe in my testimony, after I should be called hence, might do so, not only for the sake of the truth, but might not blush for the private character of the man who bore that testimony. I have been sensitive on this subject, I admit, but I ought to be so, you would be under the circumstances, had you stood in the presence of John with our departed Brother Joseph, to receive the Lesser Priesthood, and in the presence of Peter, to receive the Greater, and look down through time, and witness the effects these two must produce—you would feel what you have never felt, were wicked men conspiring to lessen the effects of your testimony on man, after you have gone to your long-sought rest."

Friday, October 5

First Day

You know, when Oliver Cowdery wrote that he was not a member of the Church, he had left the Church through some transgression. Not long, however, after he wrote this letter to his brother-in-law he found his way back to the body of the Church.

When the Prophet Joseph Smith was in Carthage Jail with his brother Hyrum, John Taylor, and Willard Richards, the Prophet asked that a letter be written to Oliver Cowdery asking him if he had not fed upon the husks long enough. I do not know what became of that letter, but evidently it must have been written and shortly after the martyrdom, Oliver Cowdery found his way back to Nauvoo and then continued his journey across the Territory of Iowa to the camp of the Latter-day Saints at Kanesville, where he made his plea to be brought back again into the Church, testifying there again, which testimony I think is quite generally known, that he was not asking to come back for any place or position, but merely to be a humble member of the Church, and he bore witness to the same things on his return.

Just another word—if Oliver Cowdery had been lying and the story was not true, at the time when unstable members of the Church were forsaking it, he never would have gone to Nauvoo, among the enemies of the people, and then continued his journey westward to find the body of the Latter-day Saints when everyone else thought they had gone to their destruction.

The Lord bless you, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

I AM SURE I express the feeling of every heart here today when I say that I have thrilled with the sessions of this conference up to this present moment. The music has been out of this world, and the prayers have been beautiful, and the instructions and counsel and advice and the testimonies of the brethren have been wonderful.

I pray that I may make a contribution that may be helpful to the final success of this conference.

I would like to say a few words about prophecy. I have always been a great believer in the words of the prophets. Through Isaiah the Lord said:

I am God, and there is none like me,

Declaring the end from the beginning. . . .
(Isa. 46:9-10.)

To me it seems that the prophets have laid out just about as completely and perfectly the great plan of the Lord with respect to this earth and the inhabitants thereof until the final winding up scenes when his kingdom shall have been established, and he shall come and reign as King of kings, as an architect does when he plans a building.

So I believe in prophecy. You remember when the Savior appeared to the two disciples on the way to Emmaus; as he listened to them he said: "O fools, and slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have spoken."

(Luke 24:25.) And Peter tells us that "We have also a more sure word of prophecy;" more sure than anything else, "... a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day star arise in your hearts." (II Peter 1:19.)

I want to refer to two prophecies from the Book of Mormon. I quote the words of Moroni:

For the eternal purposes of the Lord shall roll on, until all his promises shall be fulfilled.

Search the prophecies of Isaiah. . . . (Mormon 8:22-23.)

Then I read a statement from Nephi:

... in the days that the prophecies of Isaiah shall be fulfilled men shall know of a surety, at the times when they shall come to pass.

... for I know that they shall be of great worth unto them in the last days; for in that day shall they understand them; wherefore, for their good have I written them. (2 Nephi 25:7-8.)

We are all here today in fulfilment of the words of the prophets, and I love the prophecies of Isaiah because it seems to me that he lived almost more in our day than when he was actually upon the earth, because the Lord gave him to see so many of the things that would transpire in the latter days in the redemption of these valleys and the building of this house of the God of Jacob in the tops of the mountains and the gathering of Israel from all the nations of the earth.

You will recall that when the angel Moroni appeared to the Prophet Joseph Smith three times during the night and the next morning, and this was when he was only a young man of eighteen, Moroni quoted from the eleventh chapter of Isaiah and told the Prophet that these things were about to come to pass, and I read from that chapter the following:

And it shall come to pass in that day, that the Lord shall set his hand again the second time to recover the remnant of his people. . . .

And he shall set up an ensign for the nations, and shall assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth.

The envy also of Ephraim shall depart, and the adversaries of Judah shall be cut off; Ephraim shall not envy Judah, and Judah shall not vex Ephraim. (Isa. 11:11-13.)

Now we have lived to see the first part of that prediction literally fulfilled. He has gathered Israel into these valleys of the mountains according to his promise. He has set up an ensign unto the nations. It seems to me that no thoughtful, honest person could examine what the Lord has done in the establishment of this Church, his kingdom on the earth, and then give any mortal man or group of men the credit for what has been accomplished. It has been the God of heaven that has done this, according to the words of the prophets.

Now, for a few moments I would like to refer to the second part of this promise, "and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth." There is not time today to consider fully what the Lord is doing, according to his promise, in gathering the Jews back to the Holy Land. After two thousand years they now have a nation of their own and it is to be hoped that with the help of the Lord they can establish it in permanency and fulfil all the words of the prophets.

Then Isaiah says, "The envy also of Ephraim shall depart, and the adversaries of Judah shall be cut off: Ephraim shall not envy Judah, and Judah shall not vex Ephraim." We are from Ephraim. The Lord expects us, since we are the custodians of his gospel as restored in these latter days, according to my understanding, to extend the hand of friendship to Judah, because after all we are all descendants of the prophets Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and we come under the promises that through their descendants should all the nations of the earth be blessed.

I do not know how the enmity and the envy between Ephraim and Judah can disappear except that we of the house of Ephraim, who have the custody of the gospel, should lead out in trying to bring to this branch of the house of Israel the blessings of the restored gospel.

In a revelation given to the Prophet Joseph Smith on November 3, 1831, the Lord said:

Friday, October 5

First Day

Send forth the elders of my church unto the nations which are afar off; unto the islands of the sea; send forth unto foreign lands; call upon all nations, first upon the Gentiles, and then upon the Jews. (D & C 133:8.)

You know how literally the Church has fulfilled that command; the gospel is going to nearly every nation under heaven, and now into the Far Eastern countries, to the Japanese and the Chinese and the Koreans and the Filipinos and so forth, and the Lord said that it should go first to the gentiles and then unto the Jews. That is the command which the Lord gave unto the elders of the Church in this day.

Then the Lord says:

And they also of the tribe of Judah, after their pain shall be sanctified in holiness before the Lord, to dwell in his presence day and night, forever and ever. (Ibid., 133:35.)

And it seems to me that the only way that the tribe of Judah can be sanctified to dwell in his presence forever and ever will be when we bring to them the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ as the Savior promised them it would be brought in the latter days.

I quote again the words of the Lord to the Prophet Joseph in 1833:

Therefore, renounce war and proclaim peace, and seek diligently to turn the hearts of the children to their fathers, and the hearts of the fathers to the children;

And again, the hearts of the Jews unto the prophets, and the prophets unto the Jews; lest I come and smite the whole earth with a curse, and all flesh be consumed before me. (Ibid., 98:16-17.)

As I understand this command, we the prophets must turn our hearts unto the Jews, and then we may hope that they will turn their hearts unto us because of the message that we shall bring unto them through the restoration of the gospel in this dispensation. The importance of this the Lord declared in these words: "... lest I come and smite the whole earth with a curse, and all flesh be consumed before me."

The Lord said again in a revelation given the day the Church was organized, in commanding and giving to

Oliver through the Prophet Joseph the responsibility to carry the gospel to the nations of the earth:

And the first preacher of this church unto the church, and before the world, yea, before the gentiles; yea, and thus saith the Lord God, lo, I to the Jews also. Amen. (Ibid., 21:12.)

It would therefore appear that we have a great responsibility to preach the gospel unto the Jews.

We read in the Book of Mormon—about which President Joseph Fielding Smith has just been speaking, and you know how marvelously it has been preserved through the centuries and has been given to us in this dispensation, also in fulfilment of the words of the prophets that there was to be a record of Joseph joined to the record of Judah—and in the preface to the Book of Mormon, we read the purpose for which the Lord preserved it:

Which is to show unto the remnant of the House of Israel what great things the Lord hath done for their fathers; and that they may know the covenants of the Lord, that they are not cast off forever—And also to the convincing of the Jew and Gentile that Jesus is the Christ, the Eternal God, manifesting himself unto all nations—...

If this book is to be a witness unto the Jew that Jesus is the Christ, manifesting himself unto all nations, it will be because we, the members of his Church, take this book unto them, and I am very happy to say to you today, those who may not know it, that the missionary committee has approval of the First Presidency to start preaching the gospel unto the Jewish people in some of the stakes of Zion where there are many of them residing, on somewhat of a trial basis to see if their hearts are inclined enough to be willing to accept the message that the Lord has for them.

I read a few words from Second Nephi:

And it shall come to pass that the Jews shall have the words of the Nephites, and the Nephites shall have the words of the Jews; and the Nephites and the Jews shall have the words of the lost tribes of Israel; and the lost tribes of Israel shall have the words of the Nephites and the Jews.

And it shall come to pass that my people, which are of the house of Israel, shall be gathered home unto the lands of their possessions; and my word also shall be gathered in one. And I will show unto them that fight against my word and against my people, who are of the house of Israel, that I am God, and that I covenanted with Abraham that I would remember his seed forever. (2 Nephi 29:13-14.)

If the Jews are to have the records of the Nephites, it will be because we take these records to them.

When the Savior visited the Nephites, he promised them that the time would come when the Jews would have the fulness of the gospel preached unto them. I read:

And it shall come to pass that the time cometh when the fulness of my gospel shall be preached unto them. (3 Nephi 20:30.)

And then the Prophet Jacob in the Book of Mormon made this statement:

That he has spoken unto the Jews, by the mouth of his holy prophets, even from the beginning down, from generation to generation, until the time comes that they shall be restored to the true church and fold of God; when they shall be gathered home to the lands of their inheritance, and shall be established in all their lands of promise. (2 Nephi 9:2.)

It seems to me that now that the Jews are being "gathered home to the lands of their inheritance" and are being "established in all their lands of promise," that this is the time when "they shall be restored to the true Church and fold of God"; and this can only be done through our preaching the gospel unto them.

I do not know how familiar you are with the history of the Jewish people, but they have suffered, it seems to me, as few if any people who have ever lived upon the face of this earth; they have been driven from country to country; their people have been ravaged and put to death; parents have been separated from each other; their children have been put to death because they have been accused of things that they were never responsible for. That is all in fulfillment also of the words of the prophets.

I read you the words of First Nephi:

And because they turn their hearts aside, saith the prophet, and have despised the Holy One of Israel, they shall wander in the flesh, and perish, and become a hiss and a byword, and be hated among all nations. (1 Nephi 19:14.)

Now you know how literally that has been fulfilled. Not only have they been driven from nation to nation and been persecuted in a most terrible manner, but during World War II, in one nation alone, over six million of these Jewish people were put to death for no other reason than that they were Jews.

The Savior has spoken in a most positive manner against such persecutions and actions. I read his words to the Nephites:

Yea, and ye need not any longer hiss, nor spurn, nor make game of the Jews, nor any of the remnant of the house of Israel; for behold, the Lord remembereth his covenant unto them, and he will do unto them according to that which he hath sworn. (3 Nephi 29:8.)

The Prophet Nephi saw our day and the coming forth of the Book of Mormon, and through him the Lord made this statement:

And because my words shall hiss forth—many of the Gentiles shall say: A Bible! A Bible! We have got a Bible, and there cannot be any more Bible.

But thus saith the Lord God: O fools, they shall have a Bible; and it shall proceed forth from the Jews, mine ancient covenant people. And what thank they the Jews for the Bible which they receive from them? Yea, what do the Gentiles mean? Do they remember the travels, and the labors, and the pains of the Jews, and their diligence unto me, in bringing forth salvation unto the Gentiles?

O ye Gentiles, have ye remembered the Jews, mine ancient covenant people? Nay; but ye have cursed them, and have hated them, and have not sought to recover them. But behold, I will return all these things upon your own heads; for I the Lord have not forgotten my people.

Thou fool, that shall say: A Bible, we have got a Bible, and we need no more Bible. Have ye obtained a Bible save it were by the Jews? (2 Nephi 29:3-6.)

It would therefore appear that the Lord has indicated that the curses and hatred that we pronounce upon the Jews he will return upon our own heads, and he indicates his displeasure that we "have not sought to recover them."

In closing, I would like to leave this thought with you (there is not sufficient time further to develop this subject), that we need the co-operation of the Latter-day Saints; we need to be careful what we say. The Lord has said that we should no "longer hiss, nor spurn, nor make game of the Jews." Some of them who have been investigating our message have come into our meetings and have heard such statements as "a Jewish trick" and "we Jewed them down." If we are to win these people unto the restored Church of Christ according to the promise of the Lord, it will be because we show forth kindness unto them and reach out our hands to try to share with them the glorious truths of the gospel.

It is my privilege to be personally acquainted with quite a few converted Jews of prominence, and I find in their hearts the same love of God, the same love of the truth, the same testimony of the divinity of the work, that you and I have, and I would like to have read to you some of their testimonies, but time will not permit. I have burning in my soul a testimony that if we will be kind to them, the Lord will richly reward us for every kindness we show unto these, our brethren of the house of Israel.

There is a question with some as to when the times of the gentiles shall be fulfilled. The gospel came first to the Jews in the Meridian of Time, and then to the gentiles, and the promise was that in the latter days it would come first to the gentiles and then unto the Jews. But you will recall that the Lord did not wait until all the Jews were converted before he sent the gospel to the gentiles, through that marvelous vision and experience Peter had. It seems to me that if we wait until all the gentiles are converted before we take the gospel to the Jews, we shall never convert the Jews; and yet the Lord promised them that the fulness of his gospel would be preached unto them.

We have a few faithful missionaries working with the Jewish people and we are getting some encouragement and I extend to all of you Latter-day Saints an invitation to help these missionaries and to help in this great movement, according to the promises of the Lord, through showing kindness to them; and I bear you my witness that if you will do this the Lord will bless you for it, as he will for all that you do for the building of his kingdom in the earth, and I leave you my love and blessing in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

Of the First Council of the Seventy

I PRAY FOR the blessings of the spirit of the Lord. It has been my high privilege through the years to address myself largely to the young people of this Church. Today, with fathers and mothers and grandfathers and grandmothers—I want to take the liberty of speaking to them all. Through the years one commandment has been intensified because of my travel in many lands, and my association with many people, to make it really part of my life. I recite briefly the fourth commandment: Keep the Sabbath day holy.

In the Old Testament we read that keeping the Sabbath was made a sign between Jehovah and the Israelites:

Six days may work be done; but in the seventh is the sabbath of rest, holy to the Lord: . . .

(May I inject, for I sense deeply to whom I am talking. Yes, I appeal to you to keep the Sabbath day holy. Meetings, meetings, meetings, but never lose sight of the great commandment of God to keep the Sabbath day holy.)

Wherefore the children of Israel shall keep the sabbath, to observe the sabbath throughout their generations, for a perpetual covenant.

It is a sign between me and the children of Israel for ever: for in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, and on the seventh day he rested, and was refreshed. (Ex. 31:15-17.)

This counsel still remains with us today, and brings its many blessings to us. Elder John A. Widtsoe has said: "Keeping the Sabbath day builds a man physically, mentally, and spiritually. Physically he may rest and have a change of occupation. Mentally, because he is engaged in quorum and other meetings, private reading and studying. Spiritually, because the day is dedicated to the Lord. Spiritual communion, contemplation, these are two essentials of the Sabbath: It is a day of rest. It should be kept holy."

On the Sabbath day every person shall attend religious meetings; fast, if desired, but always fast on the day designated as fast day; partake of the Sacrament, another opportunity, with all its great teachings; bear testimony of the Lord's truth and goodness. I call your attention especially to the next: Make right any misunderstandings with your fellow men. Do all things with singleness of heart toward the divine purpose of the Sabbath day. It then becomes a day of blessing, rejoicing, and prayer. When this is done, life-giving satisfaction comes from a Sabbath well kept.

Latter-day Saints of today often face the question: "Are we expected to observe the Sabbath day in the spirit in which the original commandment was given, or have changing conditions modified and liberalized our living so that we may engage in some activities which in the past have been banned?" To every Latter-day Saint the answer is: Keep the Sabbath day holy. The command to observe the Lord's day was first given as one of the Ten Commandments to the children of Israel from Mt. Sinai. Since that time it has been reiterated in every dispensation.

The Bible is clear, but as far as that record is concerned, to its very end Sabbath observance continues to be the law of the Lord. The Book of Mormon definitely makes the same commandment a part of the gospel teaching. The Doctrine and Covenants, the most modern scripture, confirms this teaching, and enjoins strict observance of the Sabbath day. At no time has there been any pronouncement, scriptural or otherwise, to change the commandment. Therefore, regardless of what other churches may sanction, Latter-day Saints are under the obligation to give strict observance, to rest from their labors, and to pay devotion to the Most High.

Advance preparation could limit even household duties to a minimum. On Saturday in my grandmother's home the shoes were polished and placed in rows. Pies were baked, and the weekly bath was taken care of.

Pioneers observed the Sabbath day as they crossed the plains. From Rebecca Winters' diary I quote:

We camped early on a Saturday in August. We had broken our wagons, and we wished to mend our shoes. Washing and cooking to be done, for Sunday was always observed. All retired early for rest, waiting for that lovely dawn, the hour when we sang praises to God. As we sat and waited in our church in the forest for words of inspiration, the men wore their clean hickory shirts, and the women and children had clean starched bonnets. "How Firm a Foundation" was sung. Prayer was offered. Testimonies were borne. The gospel was preached, and counsel and instruction given by our Captain. All felt to renew their diligence in serving the Lord, and with fresh hope in their hearts they would soon meet with the faithful in the Valley. So was spent the Sabbath on the plains.

So important did this principle become a part of family life in a southern Utah city that a good mother, although very ill, called her boys to her bedside and said: "Never put a harness on a horse on the Sabbath day." This counsel has been kept, and this family has become one of southern Utah's most prosperous families, and all have enjoyed living the good life.

The spirit of rest, worship, and prayer should be fostered and made a part of every Latter-day Saint home. May we live and enjoy this commandment of the Lord, and especially give it to our children, our neighbors' children, and friends: "Six days may work be done;"

but on the seventh, may we keep it a day holy to the Lord, I humbly pray.

Elder ElRay L. Christiansen, Assistant to the Twelve, will now speak to us. Elder Christiansen will be followed by Elder Adam S. Bennion, who will be our concluding speaker.

ELDER ELRAY L. CHRISTIANSEN

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve Apostles

I STAND BEFORE YOU in deep humility, my brothers and sisters, and with a prayer in my heart that what I might say may be of some encouragement to all of us. I should like to base my remarks upon a divine truth that is found in the Book of Proverbs. It reads as follows:

For the commandment is a lamp; and the law is light; and reproofs of instruction are the way of life. (Prov. 6:23.)

There are good people in every segment of life who have developed an erroneous philosophy that the laws of God, even the great Ten Commandments, are intended only for certain people; for those whom they describe as being extremely religious, or for the less fortunate; that while it is essential to observe the laws of the land, it matters little or none if one observes the laws of God. Some of these people feel that the laws of God are inhibitions to one's freedom, and that they who are not religiously inclined are automatically exempt from the laws and commandments of the Lord; that if one minds his own business and lives his own life, so to speak, he has sufficient religion for his own welfare, and that salvation and joy everlasting somehow will be forthcoming.

Surely these are short-sighted views. Actually, the laws and commandments of the Lord are the foundation principles upon which lives of happiness, success, and peace are built. They are designed to bless and benefit all mankind. The love of the Lord is universal, all-inclusive. He has said:

Remember the worth of souls is great in the sight of God;

For, behold, the Lord your Redeemer suffered death in the flesh; wherefore he suffered the pain of all men, that all men might repent and come unto him. (D & C 18:10-11.)

that we might come home to him, as it were.

As a Church, we believe that through the atonement of Christ all mankind may be saved by obedience to the laws and the ordinances of the gospel, and that because of his great love for man the Lord has granted each of us an opportunity to live in the flesh, and through obedience to the laws of the gospel, find happiness and peace here, and prepare to live hereafter in a "state of never-ending happiness," as the Book of Mormon expressed it.

But the Lord does his work according to eternal principles and eternal laws. While he is a God of love, he is also a God of order. He does not deviate from the established principles and laws. He and they are the same yesterday, today, and forever. The laws and conditions prescribed for the welfare of mankind cannot be changed nor circumvented, because they are divine, and were declared before the foundation of the world was laid. They are, in fact, the only means by which we can have that peace of mind here, and gain eternal life hereafter. This is expressed in a great revelation given to the Prophet Joseph Smith:

For all who will have a blessing at my hands shall abide the law which was appointed for that blessing, and the conditions thereof, as were instituted from before the foundation of the world. (Ibid., 132:5.)

So, brothers and sisters, we need simply to remember that which is expected of us. The Lord will remember that which is expected of him.

Now, his commandments are not grievous. They are not oppressive. We sing in one of our hymns: "How gentle God's commands! How kind his precepts are!" The laws of God are not given to us to burden us nor to handicap us. They are not impositions! They are the statutes which must be observed if the purpose of life and existence is to be realized. Even those who are called to go through trial, sorrow, tribulation, and adversity are promised that, if they are faithful, the reward to them for such obedience may be even greater. It is comforting to read the word of the Lord in regard to that:

For verily I say unto you, blessed is he that keepeth my commandments, whether in life or in death; and he that is faithful in tribulation, the reward of the same is greater in the kingdom of heaven.

Ye cannot behold with your natural eyes, for the present time, the design of your God concerning those things which shall come hereafter, and the glory which shall follow after much tribulation.

For after much tribulation come the blessings. Wherefore the day cometh that ye shall be crowned with much glory; the hour is not yet, but is nigh at hand. (Ibid., 58:2-4.)

If one is inclined to question the advocacy of observing the law, whether it be the laws of man, the laws of nature, or the laws of God, he should consider these words of the Lord:

And again, verily I say unto you, that which is governed by law is also preserved by law and perfected and sanctified by the same. (Ibid., 88:34.)

There is a reciprocal blessing from observing the law.

That which breaketh a law, and abideth not by law, but seeketh to become a law unto itself, and willeth to abide in sin, and altogether abideth in sin, cannot be sanctified by law, neither by mercy, justice, nor judgment. (Ibid., 88:35.)

Observance of law brings harmony, peace, and order. Without observance of law there is found confusion, sorrow, remorse, failure, whether it be the laws of man or the laws of God, whether it be nations, or whether it be individuals. There are those who ask, (they have asked me and really that is the reason I am speaking along this line), "If the Lord loves us why does he then give so many commandments, many of them restrictive in their nature?" The answer is because he loves us. He wishes to save us from sorrow, remorse, failure, and from losing our blessings.

While I was attending a conference in California not so long ago, I was told of one of our members living there, whose business it is to assist those who are in difficulty, that he had been given permission to interview a fine young man who was in serious trouble with the law. The interviewer asked this question: "Would you mind giving me the dominant reason for your being here in this condition?" This young man, after a moment's thought, replied: "I am here because no one loved me enough to correct me."

Now, the Lord loves us enough to say "Thou shalt not." The gospel of Jesus Christ is the perfect law of liberty, according to the Apostle James. God is its author. He sets forth the conditions. He is its fountainhead. The gospel is a great system of laws—which laws are eternal principles by which our Father in heaven designs to save mankind, his sons and his daughters, and not only to save them, but also to share with them all that the Father has—associations with those we love, honor, powers, glory, dominions, and even exaltations.

But while he gives us commandments, he also gives us the freedom, the liberty to reject them if we so choose. As he spoke to Adam and Eve in the garden, he told them they could eat of every tree of the garden. This they were free to do. However, he gave commandment that they should not eat of the Tree of the Knowledge of Good and Evil, or the penalty of death would follow. They could eat of it if they wished, but they must remember that he forbade it. They were at liberty to break the commandment. Their liberty was not restricted, but if they did eat of the tree, they would have to pay the penalty.

As it was with our first parents, so it is with us. We have the divine right and also the individual responsibility to determine whether we will accept or whether we will reject the laws and principles and commandments of God. But my, how grateful we ought to be that these laws are given us to direct us, that we may not lose our way in darkness and misunderstanding, and with the vain philosophies of the world.

How thankful we ought to be for such truths as these:

Men are, that they might have joy. (2 Nephi 2:25.)

I, the Lord, am bound when ye do what I say; but when ye do not what I say, ye have no promise. (D & C 82:10.)

There is a law, irrevocably decreed in heaven before the foundations of this world, upon which all blessings are predicated—

And when we obtain any blessing from God, it is by obedience to that law upon which it [that blessing] is predicated. (Ibid., 130:20-21.)

And, finally, this most beautiful statement of King Benjamin in his address:

And moreover, I would desire that ye should consider on the blessed and happy state of those that keep the commandments of God. For behold, they are blessed in all things, both temporal and spiritual; and if they hold out faithful to the end they are received into heaven, that thereby they may dwell with God in a state of never-ending happiness. O remember, remember that these things are true; for the Lord hath spoken it. (Mosiah 2:41.)

May we also be grateful for these laws, and use them for the purpose for which they are designed, to sanctify and perfect our lives, that we too may dwell with him in a never-ending state of happiness, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Elder ElRay L. Christiansen, Assistant to the Twelve, has just concluded speaking. We shall now hear from Elder Adam S. Bennion of the Council of the Twelve. Brother Bennion has just recently returned from an assignment to the European Missions.

ELDER ADAM S. BENNION

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

PRESIDENT MCKAY, and my beloved brethren and sisters, there are fathers and mothers sitting in this audience, and I feel sure listening in at their radios, whose sons and daughters I have seen and fellowshipped with in the last five months. I trust that I may enjoy the blessing of our Father in heaven to bring you in some little measure the spirit under which those grand young people are working. You can be proud of them. I have never been so proud of the young people of the Church as I have in these last five months.

Since April we have traveled 31,000 miles. We have addressed 32,000 people and have sat in and discussed with, and taken a little note on 1,056 missionaries, all of whom we have heard in testimony, and all of whom would like to send to you the new love they have developed since they left home. Home never seems so sweet as when you are away from it, and they know it.

I give you my witness that they have realized the promise that the Lord gave his missionaries of an earlier generation. The occasion for the blessing was in the case of James Covill, who was to go upon a mission, and who had this wonderful promise given by way of revelation through the Prophet Joseph:

Thou shalt preach the fulness of my gospel, which I have sent forth in these last days, the covenant which I have sent forth to recover my people, which are of the house of Israel.

Now, notice this promise:

And it shall come to pass that power shall rest upon thee; thou shalt have great faith, and I will be with thee and go before thy face. (D & C 39:11-12.)

Over and over again those boys in European missions have said, "We never call on a house alone," and then they add, "and we are not talking about our companions."

This has been the most tremendous experience of our lives. So many things could be said. I have to be impersonal. There are ten wonderful mission presidents laboring in the field, all of them doing excellent work. Let me say to you parents by way of assurance, the mission presidents and their wives treat these young men and women as if they were their own children. They could not be more thoughtful and more careful. I just regret that I cannot pay them the tribute they so richly deserve. They, their wives, their staffs, all connected with the missions, are working wonderfully. I give you this little evidence:

By the end of June the European missions had done as much in the matter of conversions, eighty percent as much, as they did in all of 1955; three missions by the end of June had already equaled or surpassed the totals reached in the preceding year. I give you, because you may have a particular interest, the names of the three missions: the Swiss-Austrian—it is evident that the temple is registering its great influence; the Norwegian—which now has doubled last year's record; and the Finnish—and I wish I could bring you the full beauties of Finland; somehow I seemed to think it was going to be the end of the earth, but they are wonderful people. I think patriotism has never been more strongly asserted than in that land of freedom which prays never to be subject to Russia on the east and never to be conquered by Sweden on the west. You who love liberty, I wish you could have listened while they sang Finlandia under the inspiration of the leader of the symphony orchestra in Finland. I refer to it only as typical of the wonderful things we found in Europe.

I have to confess the urge to give a travelog is very great, but I won't do it. I have been asked over and over again which is the most wonderful of all the countries, and I say, "All of them." Every country has its own charm. To me they are all wonderful. They are lovely. It just seemed to me as if we were driving through a perpetual park, and the people are correspondingly wonderful. They opened their hearts to us—kindliness and consideration at every turn.

I have said this a number of times. I think if you could take two hundred people out of each city that we visited and put them down in some faraway corner—if you could not hear them speak—I am sure you would not know where to return them. God's children are his children wherever they live, and when they belong to this Church, after you have been with them ten minutes you feel quite as much at home as if you were in your own land.

While I do not want to indulge in a travelog, I hope you will give me the liberty of saying three things about our impressions. I have mentioned the beauty of Europe. It is lovely country.

The second thing I want to say about Europe is that they are making such an heroic recovery. The cities that once were bombed and blasted—I know there are a few stark and empty buildings standing like scarecrows on the horizon of civilization—but city after city is now being built in a newness, a modernity, a richness that bespeaks the sacrifice of those people.

The third thing I want to say about Europe—I had fun in the British Isles because I said if there's anything the matter with us Americans you have to take part of the responsibility—because we are your grandchildren. It is a wonderful thing to walk where your grandfather once walked, and I had the gracious privilege, thanks to the courtesy of these same wonderful people, to be where my people have been and from which lands they came, Wales on my father's side, and Scotland on my mother's. I turn to President McKay because all the time we were in Scotland they honored him with the name of McKay, and they love you. I bring the greetings of all the people we met to these grand folk among whom it is my privilege to labor.

You know, I could not escape the thought all the time I was in Wales and Scotland of what my grandfolks thought when they crossed the plains. I am sure they must have cast one lingering look behind to the green they left in both lands. As a matter of fact, I became aware of another great truth in my life. If they had not listened to some wonderful missionary, and some missionary had not been good enough to go to them, I might never have been born in the Church. As a matter of fact, as I stood in Hawarden, Wales, it just dawned upon me that maybe if they had not so listened, I would not even have been. That is a sobering thought for one who loves life.

I want to add one other note. My first experience was to talk to the servicemen—our servicemen—at Berchtesgaden, under the Eagle's Nest of Hitler, his great hideout. If you have boys who are in the service—I have been stirred a lot of times, but I think I was never stirred more than as I joined with 740 boys of the armed services who took time out to come to a testimony meeting, and to do honor to the Church they represent so beautifully in their lives.

I closed the tour by flying from Glasgow back to Heidelberg to dedicate a chapel, and the reason they wanted to dedicate it while one of us was still in Europe was that we might say thanks to those boys who were to be released from the service in October and November. Do you know that those boys over there in the service of our country, out of their earnings, toward a chapel which they would never remain to enjoy, contributed $5,000 that it might be dedicated? It has been dedicated, and may I quote the chaplain of the armed forces of the United States in Europe, who at that dedicatory program said: "I just wish, Mr. Bennion, that all of us could live the ideals of your Mormon boys." I say that, out of appreciation to these fine young men who bear our colors with honor and distinction.

Now just briefly—if I have a theme today—I would pick it out of that one line quoted by our beloved President this morning, "... he that loseth his life for my sake shall find it." (Matt. 10:39.) If there is one group of devoted folk in this Church—of course you fine men and women are all devoted—it's these boys who have taken two or two and a half years out of their lives to proclaim the truths of the gospel. They breathe it; they think it; they eat and drink it; they work day and night in the interest of this great Church.

For five months it has been my privilege to be close to them. I think I caught the pulse of their feeling, and all the time I have been impressed with this thought: "What the gospel does for people!" To me it is tremendous. You can argue against a passage, but you cannot argue against a life. There is an argument against a theory, but there is no argument against kindness and goodness.

Now for a brief moment, I wish I could take you with me to those testimony meetings. What the gospel does for these missionaries! Young men just out of their teens, taking on the responsibility of manhood, are the representatives of our great institution throughout the world. They are carrying on with all the glory that attaches to mankind at its best. Over and over again brethren have said two things in their meetings: "We suppose we always had a testimony of the gospel, but we somehow took it for granted. We did not know just why we believed, or how much it meant. We looked upon the gospel much as we did upon our parents—a part of the heritage we are born to, but necessarily just part of it. Not any longer!"

Do you want to catch the spirit of them? We have both our own young men and women and those who have been called from Europe. Look in just for a minute as a young German girl stands up to bear her testimony and prefaces what she says with the remark: "You will understand, Brother Bennion, that when I joined the Church I had to give up my family. I get along fine except on mail day. When the letters come, and the missionaries are so thrilled to get a word from home, it is awfully hard when you never get a letter from home."

I am going to say it before I sit down. We have a phrase in English, but they have a better one in Scandinavian. We say, when we get emotionally disturbed, we get a lump in our throats, and I have one right now. I cannot think of that girl, I cannot see her and know what she is doing for two years in the absence of all parental consideration or even interest. Well, I do get a lump in my throat, but I like the Scandinavian phrase better. They say they get a clump i halsen. I love that word "clump." I told them I was going to bring it home.

I wish you could sit down with a boy and have him take out the last letter he got from home and Dad, and have him say, "You know, the thing that thrills me most about my mission is that I think I am having a little to do with converting my own folks." Then they will tell you that their father had been disinterested or unconcerned, but now he writes of the thrill he gets out of being a stake missionary. I wish you could see the boys' faces light up as they say, "It's wonderful to know that the mission is converting both of us."

I do not think I remember anything more vividly than I do the story of one boy who broke completely in his testimony. He said, "You know, I did not know what was going on at home, and when I got ready to leave, Mom said she was going to get me a fine suitcase. So we went down and looked over the luggage. I picked the piece that I wanted, and when I picked it out she went into her pocketbook and pulled out six and a half books of S & H stamps that she had been saving through the years for the day when her son would go on a mission." And then as he broke completely, he said, "The thing that troubles me today is that I don't believe I said thanks." But he said thanks in our meeting. That boy will never be the same again, and I just hope that some of his gratitude rubs off through what I say so briefly today upon the heart of that good woman.

Well, it's a wonderful thing to sit in with a thousand boys and let them bare their souls, open their hearts, and tell you just how they feel, and give the evidence that they are born anew, that the great, new, glorious gospel is in their souls. You can be proud of them. They are willing; they are happy; they are working hard.

If I had the time, I would love to tell you what they are doing in their street meetings. They have developed an ingenuity that is almost unbelievable. Not only are they doing a work of which you can be proud, but I assure you they love you!

I want you to visit just for a few minutes with me with the Saints over there. How I wish you could see what the gospel does for them. They are wonderful. As we held our meetings, I developed the practice of calling a few people up from the audience to come and stand by me. I think maybe it was a defense mechanism. I could not speak their language, and I felt a little more comfortable if I had three or four of them around me.

Through the interpreter I asked a man who had been in the Church fifty-eight years what the gospel meant to him, and he said, "Sir, it's my life. It's everything I cherish."

I asked a young woman who had been married twenty-five years, but still looked wonderfully young, "How can you look so young?" and she said, "It's the gospel that does it—it's the peace and the happiness we have in our home."

A young man of ten years' membership said, "I bless the day when a lovely young woman told me she would not marry me until I joined the Church," and he added, "I bless her for a new life."

I asked a young man of five years' membership what the gospel meant to him, and he said, "Brother Bennion, I think I can say it all if I tell you I am only five years old. I never lived until I got to know this gospel."

And a lad of only three months' membership said, "Nobody ever could have told me that anything could do for me what this gospel has already done."

I wish you could have sat in Berlin the Sunday we had 840 people gathered together. You would have thrilled, too,

Friday, October 5

First Day

when the Saints from the West sector said to the people of the East, who came from out yonder, "You have been hiding in basements long enough. You go upstairs with the brethren, where you can see and hear them, and this morning we will go downstairs."

Then, before the meeting was over, the Saints from the East had the graciousness to say, "Brother Bennion, we do not feel good about this. Are you too tired to meet with the people who went into the basement if they would come back tonight?"

In the morning session I asked how many of those people had lost loved ones, and half the hands went up. Did you ever talk to an audience when half the hands went up to tell you that part of the family isn't along? You make inquiry of them and discover from fine young people that they do not know where their parents are, then have them come up and shake your hand and tell you, "It's the gospel that took us through." That's what this gospel can do for people!

I must take you into one program in England that stirred me no end. I saw a woman sitting down in the audience, and being impressed that she had something to say, I asked her if she would say a word. She said, "I would love to say a word, if you will let me say it from down here. You may not know it, Brother Bennion, but I am blind, and except for the kindness of two Mormon missionaries I would have nothing to do. They wrote home and got a Book of Mormon in Braille which I am reading." Then she said this wonderful thing: "When I was a little girl, my mother used to tell me I must not be naughty because if I was naughty the Mormons would get me. Now I am past middle age. I am blind. I am not naughty, but I want to tell you and this audience the Mormons have got me, and I am going to be baptized this next week."

Well, it has been wonderful. I have hinted all too briefly what the gospel is doing for the missionaries. I have tried to indicate what it is doing for the Saints, and you can just make up your mind they are wonderful. They are devoted. There is not anything they would not do for this Church.

I want to close with my own witness to you of what this gospel does for me. I have watched it in the lives of those people in Europe, and if I had a little summary to make, I would say these things:

The gospel humbles a man; it mellows him; it gladdens him; it motivates him; it sustains him; it redeems him; and it exalts him.

You cannot go for five months with a clump i halsen and center your heart on the work of the Lord, and get the evidences which I do not have the time to give you, without being stirred in your soul. I have been blessed in my ministry, and I would be ungrateful if I did not say so. I have seen the power of the priesthood manifested in behalf of people who needed a blessing and wanted it, and I say it humbly, I know that God lives. I have been blessed in my own life, under the promise of the eighty-fourth section that those of us who give our hearts to this work have the promise of Almighty God that we shall be sanctified of the Spirit unto the renewing of our bodies. I have felt the spirit of this gospel as I never have before, and I give you my witness as I close that I know that God lives, that Jesus Christ is the Savior of the world, and that they both came back to declare through the prophet Joseph this wonderful new message for our benediction.

I must not sit down without expressing gratitude that Sister Bennion, the companion of my life through forty-five wonderful years, could go along. Her companionship blessed me, her faith not only sustained me, but with God's help healed me. In our home we shall never be the same again.

Now, don't anybody think that I am so in love with Europe that I want to go back to stay. These lines never meant so much to me:

So, it's home again, and home again
America for me.
I want a ship that's westward bound
To plow the rolling sea,
To the blessed land of room enough
Beyond the ocean bars,
Where the air is full of sunlight
And the flag is full of stars.

Van Dyke

From the bottom of our hearts we thank you Brethren for the most glorious experience of our lives. What the gospel has done for the missionaries—for the Saints—and for us—it will do for you, too, I testify in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

We have just listened to Elder Adam S. Bennion of the Council of the Twelve, who has just returned from special assignment to European Missions.

Tonight the Presiding Bishopric will conduct a special meeting in the Tabernacle at 7 p.m. Those expected to be in attendance include bishops and counselors; members of stake and ward committees for Aaronic Priesthood under 21; members of stake and ward committees for Senior members of the Aaronic Priesthood; chairmen of stake committees on ward teaching and division supervisors. Stake presidencies and high councilmen are invited to attend.

An agricultural meeting sponsored by the General Church Welfare Committee will be held tomorrow morning at 7:30 in the Assembly Hall. The following are invited to attend: stake presidents, bishops or their representatives, all ward and stake agricultural representatives, and others interested in agriculture.

A poet once wrote:

The holiest words my tongue can frame
The noblest thoughts my soul can claim
Unworthy are to praise the name

More precious than all others
An infant when her love first came
A man, I find it still the same Reverently I breathe her name
The precious name of Mother.

I believe it is because of this mother love that we are so deeply impressed with the singing of this group. That is not the only reason, however; I marvel at the ability of Sister Madsen to gather these mothers from distant parts and inspire our hearts as she does, or as they do. Sister Madsen composed a number that was sung especially for the dedication of the Relief Society Building. I am sure you would like to hear it. I have passed her a note. She may say no, but I hope she will say yes.

The Singing Mothers will sing as a closing number of this inspiring session, "Thy Blessing on This House, Dear Lord."

That will be followed by the benediction by Elder Vernon L. Holman, president of the Panguitch Stake, after which this Conference will stand adjourned until ten o'clock tomorrow morning.

KSL, and over 11 radio stations in Utah, Idaho, Colorado, and Nevada. The names of these stations have already been announced to the radio audience.

We desire to express our appreciation once again to these radio stations for their courtesy in making available their time and facilities for these broadcasts. We welcome this morning special visitors, including 39 Servicemen from Lowry Air Force Base, Denver, Colorado, and others whom we welcomed yesterday, and Servicemen from various parts who are joining us in this Conference. We appreciate the effort they have put forth to come here and partake of the spiritual influence of these gatherings.

We welcome also Brother Wallace Bennett, United States Senator; William A. Dawson, United States Congressman; Lamont Toronto, Secretary of State; Adiel F. Stewart, Mayor of Salt Lake City; John L. Clarke, president of Ricks College; William Miller, president of Weber College; and others. The president of the University is absent this morning because of illness.

We have a message from Guatemala. "Our prayers for you and Saints congregated in the Tabernacle. Central American Mission by President Wagner." We welcome all who are listening in, and who are in attendance. We just seem to be one great congregational family assembled in worship this Saturday morning.

The singing for this session is furnished by the Combined Scandinavian Choirs, with R. Hulbert Keddington conducting, and Alexander Schreiner at the organ. We shall begin these services by the Combined Scandinavian Choirs singing, "Arise, O Glorious Zion."

The opening prayer will be offered by President Levern M. Hansen of the San Bernardino Stake.

Singing: "Arise, O Glorious Zion."

The Combined Choirs sang the hymn, "Arise, O Glorious Zion."

Elder Levern M. Hansen, president of the San Bernardino Stake, offered the invocation.

President David O. McKay:

The Combined Scandinavian Choirs will now favor us with "Come, Dearest Lord." After the singing, Elder Joseph Anderson, Clerk of the Conference, will read the changes in ward, stake, and branch organizations since April Conference, 1956, and the obituaries of the Church.

Singing by the Combined Choirs, "Come, Dearest Lord."

President David O. McKay:

Elder Joseph Anderson, Clerk of the Conference, has just read the changes in ward and stake organizations, and some obituaries of the Church, since last April. The reading will give the Church a general idea of the progress of the Church during the last six months.

President Stephen L. Richards of the First Presidency of the Church will be our first speaker this morning. He will be followed by Elder George Q. Morris.

PRESIDENT STEPHEN L. RICHARDSFirst Counselor in the First Presidency*

I SHALL BE deeply grateful, my brethren and sisters, if I may have your faith and prayers and the assistance of the Holy Spirit in an effort to continue the lofty themes, the vital advice and counsel which have been given by my brethren during the preceding sessions of this conference. I greet my brethren and sisters with love and fellowship, and I extend also to our friends who listen in to the proceedings my appreciation of their interest, and my concern for their good in the consideration of the great principles of life and salvation.

As we meet in successive general conferences of the Church, our thoughts are repeatedly directed to the fundamental principles and purposes of the mighty cause which we have the honor to represent. It is well that it is so, and it is fervently hoped that we shall never become so absorbed and enmeshed in the mass of detail relating to organization and procedure as to obscure even for a moment the true purpose of our establishment in the earth.

Within the past few weeks, in order to meet the requirements of a distant foreign country for the Church to hold property and otherwise carry forward its activities within that country, the First Presidency has caused to be prepared and submitted to the governing authority of the foreign country a statement of beliefs and objectives of the Church. To cover the principal beliefs of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, we submitted the Articles of Faith issued by the Prophet Joseph Smith, which for a period of more than a hundred years have been distributed throughout the world. I would not impose on the patience of an audience entirely composed of members of the Church to repeat these articles so well known to my brethren and sisters, but being convinced that many thousands of our friends not of the Church listen to these proceedings, I am going to ask you to indulge me as I present them:

1. We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in His Son, Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost.

2. We believe that men will be punished for their own sins, and not for Adam's transgression.

3. We believe that through the Atonement of Christ, all mankind may be saved, by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the Gospel.

4. We believe that the first principles and ordinances of the Gospel are: first, Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; second, Repentance; third, Baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; fourth, Laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost.

5. We believe that a man must be called of God, by prophecy, and by the laying on of hands, by those who are in authority to preach the Gospel and administer in the ordinances thereof.

6. We believe in the same organization that existed in the Primitive Church, viz., apostles, prophets, pastors, teachers, evangelists, etc.

7. We believe in the gift of tongues, prophecy, revelation, visions, healing, interpretation of tongues, etc.

8. We believe the Bible to be the word of God as far as it is translated correctly; we also believe the Book of Mormon to be the word of God.

9. We believe all that God has revealed, all that He does now reveal, and we believe that He will yet reveal many great and important things pertaining to the Kingdom of God.

10. We believe in the literal gathering of Israel and in the restoration of the Ten Tribes; that Zion will be built upon this [the American] continent; that Christ will reign personally upon the earth; and, that the earth will be renewed and receive its paradisiacal glory.

11. We claim the privilege of worshipping Almighty God according to the dictates of our own conscience, and allow all men the same privilege, let them worship how, where, or what they may.

12. We believe in being subject to kings, presidents, rulers, and magistrates, in obeying, honoring, and sustaining the law.

13. We believe in being honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous, and in doing good to all men; indeed, we may say that we follow the admonition of Paul—We believe all things, we hope all things, we have endured many things, and hope to be able to endure all things. If there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report or praiseworthy, we seek after these things.—Joseph Smith.

I shall not comment generally on the Articles of Faith. They speak for themselves, and we trust they may prove acceptable to the government to which we submitted them as a statement of our principal beliefs.

In addition to the requirement of a statement of beliefs and doctrines, we were asked to set forth our purposes and objectives as a Church. The following is a brief statement of objectives which was sent. I quote:

"The objectives of the Church are to bear witness to the divinity of the Lord Jesus Christ; to teach all men the principles of his Gospel; and to convert and persuade them to follow in his ways and keep the commandments of God, that they may thus advance the Kingdom of God in the earth to bring brotherhood and peace to men and nations, and earn exaltation for themselves.

"To achieve this objective the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints builds and maintains churches, temples, educational institutions for all ages, recreational buildings and facilities, and projects designed to teach and encourage vocational and industrial preparation for self-reliant living. It teaches loyalty to country and fosters good citizenship in all communities where it is established."

The statement submitted was necessarily brief. May I amplify some portions of it?

How and to what extent are we bearing witness to the divinity of the Lord Jesus Christ? From the latest figures available I give you the following: We are at present maintaining about five thousand missionaries in the mission fields of the Church, which are established in nearly all countries of the world where the laws and practices of the people will permit their establishment. The average cost for each missionary a month is $58.96, to cover his living and maintenance in the mission field. The total monthly cost for our missionary force exceeds $290,000.00, borne chiefly by parents of the missionaries, the missionaries themselves, quorums, and other generous persons who contribute to the missionary fund. This vast sum of money, amounting to more than $3,400,000.00 a year, is spent in the countries where the missionaries labor, and thus contributes, substantially in some instances, to the national economy of these countries.

Our missionaries do not live "off" the peoples in the countries where they are sent. They bring in rather than take from the communities where they serve. In addition to the five thousand missionaries who serve in these missions which we call foreign, there are 6,429 stake missionaries, who do not leave their homes, but perform missionary service among neighbors and friends not of the Church in the communities where they live. They give their service without compensation, as do all missionaries of the Church.

It will be interesting to members of the Church to know that for the first eight months of the year 1956 there were 9,910 convert baptisms in the foreign missions, and 5,549 in the stake missions, making a total of 15,459, a sufficient number, if concentrated, to make three or four new stakes in the Church.

The principal duty and the first obligation resting upon all of these 11,500 missionaries is to bear witness of the divinity of the Lord, Jesus Christ. They are sent out into the world as ambassadors of Jesus Christ, and they are taught from the beginning that they cannot effectively represent and serve him without a firm personal testimony as to his divinity. If they live the principles of the gospel, they never lose their testimonies, and they are always able, under the influence of the Holy Spirit, to bear testimony with such conviction as to arrest the attention of God-fearing people. This bearing of sincere testimony serves as a persuading and convincing influence to touch the lives of many long before the immature missionary has been able fully to absorb and master the principles of the gospel in the teaching process.

How essential is this bearing of testimony to the divinity of the Lord Jesus Christ? Why, it is the first essential credential of a Christian. Jesus himself set the example, when, in justifying himself before the Jews, he said: "I am one that bear witness of myself, and the Father that sent me beareth witness of me." (John 8:18.) And from all we can learn from scripture, we must conclude that there is but one indispensable fact which lies at the basis of the whole Christian doctrine to which witness must be borne, and that is that Jesus Christ was the Son of God and sent by him to perform his mission in the world. How can anyone professing Christianity satisfy a Christian conscience without that testimony and that witness? Why are men reluctant so to commit themselves? Some may entertain conscientious doubts as to the divine nature of the Christ. I am sure they would do well humbly and open-mindedly to seek more knowledge about him. Many more, I fear, are in the category suggested by Paul who are "ashamed" openly to bear witness of him. They seem to think that in some way it is belittling to their intelligence, and I fear too that some regard an open confession of faith as a commitment to a course of life they do not have the strength and the will to follow.

I regret this reluctance, particularly of prominent and influential men, openly to declare their faith, because I am sure that their influence is very considerable, particularly in the lives of the young people who admire their successes, their standing in the community, and who could be made to see richer and nobler purposes in life through the example and open statements of those they so much esteem.

I think I know the underlying reason for this reticence. It is self-sufficiency resulting from a lack of humility. Men of success are so prone to forget their dependence on a beneficent providence. It seems often necessary to bring into the lives of the haughty and proud calamity and great deprivation. A rich man sometimes loses his possessions, his cherished wife and children, even his good name, before he begins to pray and acknowledge the supreme dispenser of all good things that endure. I appeal for more testimony, for more courage to bear witness, for more humility to acknowledge the goodness of the Lord to his children.

The second item in the statement of objectives which I mentioned is "to teach all men the principles of his gospel; and to convert and persuade them to follow in his ways and keep the commandments of God." Many of the principles of the gospel which our missionaries and our people teach are set forth in the Articles of Faith which I have read. Time will not permit any extensive comment on them. I wish, however, to mention a few items.

I mention the eleventh and twelfth articles: "We claim the privilege of worshipping Almighty God according to the dictates of our own conscience, and allow all men the same privilege, let them worship how, where, or what they may."

"We believe in being subject to kings, presidents, rulers, and magistrates, in obeying, honoring, and sustaining the law."

I am able to understand from the history of the times how much importance the Prophet Joseph Smith attached to these articles in his day. The violation of the principles by bigoted and unscrupulous persons entailed infinite suffering and persecution to him and his people. I question if, however, except with divine insight, he could have envisioned what the violation of these principles would mean to the whole world a century or more after he lived. I am not sufficiently informed to know whether other churches have any comparable statements in their constitutions or declarations of faith, but the history of our times justifies the assertion that few, if any, things have contributed more to the chaotic condition of the world than the violation of the cardinal principles set forth in this statement of belief. They contain the very essence of freedom and liberty, and they support the majesty of the law. They are inspired statements, and within them is comprehended the only true basis on which permanent peace may be established. We preach and we practice these principles all over the world wherever we are given opportunity. We proclaim and we urge them in defense of liberty wherever we go. They are part of the gospel of Jesus Christ, and as such we teach them.

Perhaps we encounter some resistance in teaching the principles of the gospel because we have important aspects of it given by revelation that are explanatory and go beyond the conventional teaching of Christianity as our eighth article of faith proclaims: "We believe the Bible to be the word of God as far as it is translated correctly." We teach the Bible as the history of God's dealings with man, and as the basis of the Christian gospel, but we have additional explanatory revelation which does not contravene the Bible, but which serves to interpret and make plain many of its statements which are obscure or incomplete.

I shall give to you one illustration which is typical of others. The Savior comforted his disciples at the time of his departure with that supreme statement of comfort: "In my Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you." (John 14:2.)

For many centuries the world was without an explanation of the "many mansions" in our Father's house. In February 1832, the Prophet Joseph wrote: "From sundry revelations which had been received, it was apparent that many important points touching the salvation of man had been taken from the Bible, or lost before it was compiled. It appeared self-evident from what truths were left, that if God rewarded every one according to the deeds done in the body, the term Heaven, as intended for the Saints' eternal home, must include more kingdoms than one." (See Introduction to D & C 76.)

It was in answer to this query in the mind of the Prophet that the revelation which is sometimes characterized as "The Vision" came to him. It is the explanation of the words of the Savior in that it defines the mansions, kingdoms, and glories which prevail in heaven, "my Father's house." These kingdoms are designated as the celestial, the terrestrial, and the telestial. These designations conform with the declarations of the Apostle Paul in his first epistle to the Corinthians, wherein he sets forth,

I wish I had the time to read to all our friends the description and attributes of these kingdoms and glories of the hereafter. Here is a revelation which makes plain to all men the transcendent and enduring benefits derived from striving for the best. To those who have the ambition, the courage, and devotion to attain the highest station, there are in store blessings that transcend the comprehension of the finite mind.

The Lord loves all his children, and in the orderly provision he has made for salvation every good deed is rewarded, and all who have not utterly destroyed their prospects for recognition will find place in the gradations of glory to which they are severally entitled. Here is universal justice in law and order, tempered with great mercy for the frail and the weak. The revelation gives us assurance that the highest station or glory is possible of attainment. In all our teaching and persuasion, our one all-pervading predominant motive and purpose is to prepare ourselves and our fellow men for entrance and exaltation in the highest glory he has revealed—the celestial kingdom. We want the best for ourselves, and we want it for others, but we know we cannot acquire this glorious blessing for others. Everyone must obtain it for himself.

Saturday, October 6

Now, how is entrance into the celestial glory obtained? It is obtained only through compliance with the ordinances of the gospel, and keeping the commandments of God. Our missionaries are not infrequently asked: "Do you claim that you are the only ones who will go to heaven?" The answer to this question may well be given by the missionary asking of the inquirer, "What do you mean by heaven? If you mean by heaven, a resurrection from the grave to immortality, the answer is no. Through the atonement of Christ everyone will be resurrected. Do you mean by heaven one of the lesser glories and kingdoms therein? Then generally the answer is no. We believe that many, if not most, of the good men and women of the world will obtain places and recognition in the lesser kingdoms of heaven. But if you mean by going to heaven, gaining exaltation in the celestial kingdom of our Father, where God and Christ dwell, then the answer must be yes. No man can attain the highest station without compliance with the higher laws and ordinances, which may be administered only in the restored Church of our Lord Jesus Christ under his authority and delegated power lodged in the priesthood of his Church."

If there be any disposed to criticize this view as being narrow and intolerant, we must bring to their attention the fact that we did not formulate the rules, regulations, and requirements for entrance into the celestial kingdom of our Father. The Lord did that, both in ancient and modern revelation. We seek to teach men that these rules of eligibility, though seemingly strict and rigid, are in fact generous provisions for the happiness of the Father's children here and hereafter. If any of the requirements seem to circumscribe the personal liberty of individuals, it is because these so-called personal liberties in wisdom are not in the end good for the individual or communities. Every commandment the Lord has given is for the blessing and good of mankind.

I appeal, my fellow members of the Church, and to all men, so to regard them. While many are in the form of injunctions of restraint, there is in the keeping of every commandment a positive element of improvement of life through self-mastery and the subordination of the material to the spiritual.

So our mission is to bear witness of the divinity of the Lord Jesus Christ, and teach his restored gospel in all its completeness. The Lord has been good to us. He has caused that provision be made so that there are available to us all the facilities essential to realize our great purposes. He has blessed the Church with the devotion of faithful members scarcely to be equaled in any movement of which we have record. They are generous in giving, they are responsive to calls to duty, and their lives exemplify the loving principles by which they should live.

True, not all are faithful. Some fall by the wayside in weakness, to whom we always hold out the hopeful doctrine of repentance. It is a glorious feeling, my brethren and sisters, to have place with the faithful, to feel the warm, generous support of true brethren and sisters in the Church of Christ. I have long been the recipient of his blessings, and I humbly make this acknowledgment and give thanks for membership in his Church and the privilege of serving him, for health to carry on, for the confidence and love of my associates, and for the privilege of living in the society of the Saints of God.

I bear my humble witness that God lives; that Jesus Christ was his Only Begotten Son in the flesh; that the biblical account of his birth and life is true and not fictitious; that however much we may proclaim our admiration of his attributes and his teachings, that above all his mission was divine; that we cannot truly worship him without recognition of his sovereignty and his lordship. I am happy to kneel at the throne of his power and give to him my allegiance and feeble effort for the establishment of his kingdom in the earth.

I bear witness that Joseph Smith was his prophet, chosen to bring the complete gospel to the earth in the Dispensation of the Fulness of Times; that he accomplished his mission; and that all men today are the beneficiaries of his inestimable contributions.

I bear witness that the holy priesthood has been restored to and continues in the Church of Christ; that that holy priesthood and power is here in the earth today in the year 1956, reposed in thousands of good men, servants of the Lord, with President David O. McKay appointed, sustained, and approved of the Lord, standing at the head, all to the end that the kingdom of our Father may be established and advanced in the earth. Christ will come again. Our mission is to prepare the kingdom for his coming.

The Lord help us all to be devoted to that exalted undertaking I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

President Stephen L. Richards of the First Presidency is the one who delivered that fine sermon just now. We shall now hear from Elder George Q. Morris of the Council of the Twelve. He will be followed by the Congregation singing, "High on the Mountain Top."

ELDER GEORGE Q. MORRIS

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

MY DEAR brethren and sisters, I am entirely dependent upon the Spirit of the Lord to direct me, and pray that the same sweet spirit that has prevailed will continue with us to lead me to say that which I should say. I am very thankful to the Lord that this his Church is built on the rock of revelation, so that we are not turned about in all directions by all kinds of opinions and doctrines. But as this is our blessing, we have also an obligation to know the truth, and live the truth, and speak the truth. What a supreme blessing is truth in this distraught world.

At a meeting I recently attended where reference was made to a revelation concerning the origin and nature of man and the creation of the world, a young man came to me—a fine young faithful Latter-day Saint—and said he was so discouraged and depressed by the teachings he was receiving in college that he worried about it, and about how he could pass his examinations because he could not accept these teachings. Of course I could only tell him that he would have to hold to the truth no matter what the situation was. That is an obligation that we do have as a people. Who else has the revelations of God? What other church in the world is based upon these revelations? Having them, we must be true to them.

As the Lord built his Church upon the rock of revelation so that it would endure, I think we ourselves as individuals must stand on this same rock of revelation in our conduct, our thinking, and our lives, that we can endure; otherwise we will fall.

I hope this young man can hold to that principle, and I am concerned for all of our young people as they go into the field of higher education and meet all the ideas that are so prevalent, which are in sharp conflict with the revelations of God that we know to be true. I suppose he had been taught something about the origin of man according to the theory of organic evolution. I presume he might have been told what I remember reading in some man's writings, that we would have to look for our origin in some minute life in the ocean, perhaps, or in some amoebalike organism—the simplest form of life. That, he said, was man's beginning.

But we know better than that. The Lord says we were in the beginning with him.

Ye were also in the beginning with the Father; that which is Spirit, even the Spirit of truth;

Man was also in the beginning with God. Intelligence, or the light of truth, was not created or made, neither indeed can be. (D & C 93:23, 29.)

We know beyond all doubt that we existed with God in the eternities and

Saturday, October 6

Second Day

that we existed with him in the heavens as his sons and daughters.

And he called upon our father Adam by his own voice, saying: I am God: I made the world, and men before they were in the flesh. (Moses 6:51.)

Now, no matter what men may think, no matter what their theories may be, we need not be disturbed in the least because we know the truth; I hope our children can be assured by their parents that they need not be disturbed because these revelations are true. Man did not come from the bottom of the ocean, but from heaven, and God is his Father. The Savior said that so beautifully to Mary:

... go to my brethren, and say unto them, I ascend unto my Father, and your Father; and to my God, and your God. (John 20:17.)

The Son came to the world to redeem it, to reveal unto us our Father, and to give his truth to the world; also demonstrating his origin and his coming into the world to be the same as ours. He said,

I came forth from the Father, and am come into the world: again, I leave the world, and go to the Father. (Ibid., 16:28.)

This is true of us all.

In the spirit world he was perfect, the Firstborn of the Father. Our Father elevated him to the Godhead. He became the Son and was given power to create man and the earth. As declared in the Book of Mormon, he was "... the God of Israel, and the God of the whole earth. ..." (3 Nephi 11:14.)

What was his bodily condition before his birth into the world, while he was the Son in the Godhead, and Jehovah to the Jews, and the God of the whole world? He was a spirit dwelling in a spiritual body of refined matter in the same form as our earthly bodies. The Prophet Joseph Smith has told us that all spirit is matter. He said:

There is no such thing as immaterial matter. All spirit is matter, but it is more fine or pure, and can only be discerned by purer eyes. (D & C 131:7.)

The Lord Jesus Christ then, as a spirit, had a spiritual body of this pure material. When he revealed himself to the brother of Jared, he said,

Behold, this body, which ye now behold, is the body of my spirit; and man have I created after the body of my spirit; and even as I appear unto thee to be in the spirit will I appear unto my people in the flesh. (Ether 3:16.)

We were all men and women in heaven, just as we are men and women here. We were not hazy shadows. Though spirits, we had form; we had substance. The Lord said he had created man after the image of his spirit body, which was the same form in which he was to appear on earth.

... that which is spiritual being in the likeness of that which is temporal; and that which is temporal in the likeness of that which is spiritual; the spirit of man in the likeness of his person, as also the spirit of the beast, and every other creature which God has created. (D & C 77:2.)

The prophets said the Savior would come and take upon himself a tabernacle of flesh, and so he came in his spirit body and took from the earth the elements needed to obtain a tabernacle of flesh and blood. We know how he did that. We have done the same thing; and we came here in the same form as did he. As his spiritual body clothed itself in a tabernacle of flesh and blood, so has ours.

As he stood before Pilate to be judged, Pilate said, "Behold the man." When he calmed the wind and the waves, the people said, "What manner of man is this, that the sea and the wind obey him?" So he was a man, as we are men. He was also Deity, because of his perfection, and because his Father had by divine investiture raised him to that position. While he was in the earth, he was still he who had created the earth, as he was also when he submitted to apostate priests and a pagan Roman governor to be judged and to be crucified.

So what manner of creatures are we? His Father was our Father. The offspring is like the parent. You cannot change that law. In the book of Moses, speaking of the Father, it says:

... in the language of Adam, Man of Holiness is his name, and the name of his Only Begotten is the Son of Man, even Jesus Christ, a righteous Judge, who shall come in the meridian of time. (Moses 6:57.)

Now these are the truths concerning ourselves. Let us realize who we are and what we are and how we should live. And when we meet these teachings opposed to God's word that come to us and our children, let us know what they are. They are nothing but the opinions of men. Think how fantastic that a man, who is a son of God, should deny God and insist that he came from a low form of life up through the shapes of lower animals to the image of God. How preposterous that is! But our concept is based on the principle that the Apostle Paul laid down. The first verse in the Bible says that the earth was created by God, and the first chapter, that God created man in his own image. All through the scriptures it is proclaimed that man is a son of God.

When men do not believe the truth, what is left for them to believe? Nothing but delusion and fallacy and error! So Paul said:

And for this cause God shall send them strong delusion, that they should believe a lie." (II Thess. 2:10-11.)

When our children are told about the "missing link" or the "prehistoric man" what can we say? In the light of the revealed word of God, what are we to conclude? The Lord Jesus Christ who created man and the earth has, from the creation, declared that we all originated in heaven. His teachings are that we were perfectly organized beings with spiritual bodies similar in form to our mortal bodies, but of finer material; that we were sons and daughters of God and came to the earth in these spirit bodies patterned after the spirit body of the Lord Jesus Christ; that we each took from the earth a body of flesh and blood to tabernacle our spirit body, as did he; that we were men and women with spirit (material) bodies, in the same form as these we now have, long before this earth was ever formed; that in the eternities past men like us with bodies of flesh and blood have lived in worlds like ours, many of which have passed away, and that others have been created for men like us to inhabit—

And worlds without number have I created, . . .

And as one earth shall pass away, and the heavens thereof, even so shall another come. . . .

For behold, this is my work and my glory—to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man. (Moses 1:33, 38, 39.)

This being true, man did not originate here in spirit or body. Man in a body of flesh and blood has lived through the eternities. How foolish to look for the origin of the human body in this world at this late time. The theory that man came into his present form through a process of evolutions is untrue—a mere delusion. This being the case and so declared by the divine Creator of all these worlds, our own included, it must follow that there never was a "missing link" on the earth. There never was a "prehistoric man," in the sense that he was part man and part something else. No such creature ever existed in this or any other world. He or it exists only in the minds of men who refuse the truth and have a theory of their own that is utterly false—contrary to the revealed word of God. Such an idea could come only after rejecting God's word. That creature which men visualize in their minds because of their false theory, they draw in pictures and they model in clay and say that such a thing once existed upon the earth. There never did exist such a creature in the earth, or out of the earth. God sent man as a perfect being, his offspring in his image, with a material (spiritual) body in the same form as we are now, to be born on the earth, to obtain a tabernacle of flesh and have an earth existence. We are all pre-earth men, but not one a "prehistoric man." The earth did not originate man. "The Man"—"the Son of Man"—created the earth and all that is in it.

And it came to pass that the Lord spake unto Moses, saying: Behold, I reveal unto you concerning this heaven, and this earth; write the words which I speak. I am the Beginning and the End, the Almighty God; by mine Only Begotten I created these things; yea, in the beginning I created the heaven, and the earth upon which thou standest. (Ibid., 2:1.)

Second Day

God help us to live consistent with this great truth. I bear my humble witness that this is true; that this is the living Church of God restored to the earth, based upon revelation, and that revelation is operative now and will continue so; that Joseph Smith was a prophet of the Living God, who associated with God and heavenly beings and was taught by them during many years; and I bear witness that the keys of the Holy Priesthood, the power for the salvation of the human family, abides in the President of this Church today, and that no man can bypass this Church and find salvation. No man can bypass Joseph Smith and receive salvation. God honors his servants. I bear this humble witness in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER ANTOINE R. IVINS

Of the First Council of the Seventy

MY BELOVED brethren and sisters, it is not an idle hope that I express when I ask you to join your faith and prayers with mine. It is the only way, I believe, that I can say a word to you today that may be helpful and inspire an effort to approach more nearly the life that our Heavenly Father would like us to live.

Before I talk about what I had in mind, I would like to say to the singers today that I appreciate very much the music which they have rendered, and I have great interest in their group for two reasons: One is that my grandfather was chosen by the President of the Church to carry the gospel to Scandinavia; another is that I discovered in reading the genealogical history of one line of my heritage, that it was carried back to the Norsemen who came into England such a long, long time ago.

Now I admit that this student in carrying it back had to use ten-league boots over some of the stretches, but I hope it is true nevertheless.

I had thought that I would begin today by bearing my testimony to the restoration of the priesthood, the organization of the Church, and to a return of a true interpretation of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

President Richards has done that so beautifully that all I will ask is that you let me incorporate his testimony in mine, because I believe from the bottom of my heart that what he has said is true.

Many of us who are here today are bearers of the priesthood. We are all, or nearly all of us, members of the Church in which that priesthood functions for the development and well-being of people. I presume we are all here to try and gain a little better understanding of the gospel plan and a greater enthusiasm for it, a greater determination to carry its teachings into our daily lives.

We have been told that we are the children of God, our Heavenly Father, that we had a conscious spiritual existence before we came here. The gospel plan is one which God and his Son Jesus Christ developed, which if properly followed by the spirits who come into the earth, would lead them back not only to the presence of God but also to an exaltation in his presence, all of which has been explained to us today. The gospel includes many things that we should do. Some phases of its expression are in the form of "thou shalt not" do this or that. Others are in the positive form of "thou shalt" do this and that. Of course, it is our purpose to learn what they are and properly interpret them and integrate them into our daily living.

The first great commandment that was given to Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden, according to recorded history, the revealed words which we have, was to multiply and replenish the earth. In my recent visits to the stakes over the last two or three years, I have tried to keep a record of the percentages of the people who were married as members of the Church, who were married in the temple. I discovered that about fifty-five percent of the marriages were celebrated in the temple. Forty-five percent of them were of people who had not the inclination to go to the temple for that purpose.

I feel in my heart that it was the intent of God that when marriage should be celebrated, it should be done with the vow and promise that it would never be broken, so that the great privileges of exaltation which are promised us could be realized throughout eternity. It is an unfortunate thing that many of these marriages are hastily contracted and not sealed by the powers of the priesthood. Consequently, many of them break up and result in disaster.

Now how are we going to find out the things that we should do to make a marriage like this perpetual? We have to return to the gospel of Jesus Christ and put its teachings into practice. Could we make a perfect effort at that, of course, we would eventually attain to the powers of God, for that is the promise which he has given us.

Our purpose in coming here today is to learn something about it and how, perhaps better, we can do those great things.

I would like to read to you a scripture found in the Doctrine and Covenants which I think expresses the purpose of the gospel:

Therefore, sanctify yourselves that your minds become single to God, and the days will come that you shall see him; for he will unveil his face unto you, and it shall be in his own time, and in his own way, and according to his own will. (D & C 88:68.)

Then, in another section we read:

For you shall live by every word that proceedeth forth from the mouth of God. (Ibid., 84:44.)

The recorded revelations that we have—the modern ones—we find in the the Doctrine and Covenants and the Pearl of Great Price, but there are many revealed expressions of the doctrine and will of God, our Heavenly Father, in the Bible, so we have the three sources. John says in his writings,

Search the scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life: and they are they which testify of me. (John 5:39.)

It is my firm conviction that when we come to understand really the scriptures, we discover that every single purpose therein is to testify that Jesus Christ was to come, is the Son of God, and was to work out a redemption for us. He prepared the plan that we should follow. It is our purpose to learn it and then to try to live by every word that has proceeded from the mouth of God.

You will remember the first scripture says,

Therefore sanctify yourselves. . . .

I met a member of the Church one time who said that salvation does not depend upon men's acts at all, and he quoted the scripture, ". . . by grace are ye saved. . . ."

"Not of works, lest any man should boast." (Eph. 2:8-9.) This does not seem quite like that, does it? We are saved from death and given the privilege of a resurrection and through the grace and gift of God we have the privilege of sanctifying ourselves, thus earning an exaltation.

So that is our problem, brethren and sisters. Let us read the scriptures; let us discover in them the way of life that will lead us back to the kingdom of God. Let us put forth every effort and sanctify and purify our lives. And, brethren and sisters, let us be more interested in the effect upon ourselves than that which we think we observe sometimes in our neighbors.

There are many of the provisions I have said which say, "thou shalt not" do this and that, and many of us are prone to judge our neighbors, thinking only of the things that they should not do which we think they do; but there is a positive side to this which far outweighs that, it seems to me, as far as we individually are concerned. We should be not interested in the failures of our neighbors but in their successes and in our own successes in coming nearer to God our Heavenly Father.

Saturday, October 6

Second Day

The first great principle is love. We are to love God our Heavenly Father.

Then the next principle to it is we should love our neighbor as ourselves. If we could just do that, we would glory in the successes of our neighbors; and while we would feel bad if they made mistakes, we would not judge them, entirely, on the mistakes they made, but would balance against them the efforts towards righteousness that they demonstrate. Then if their righteous conduct should outweigh the other side, we would be happy, would we not? That is the way we would like people to think of us. That is the way we would think of them. We would extend mercy to them. That does not mean feeding them and clothing them; it means helping them to adjust their lives to the will of God, our Heavenly Father, and to give aid and succor. Spiritual aid and succor is more important than temporal aid at times. We should extend both, of course, but most certainly, if we love our neighbor, we are going to extend to him our spiritual aid and comfort in the spirit of mercy.

God said to Adam that he should cultivate the soil and live by the sweat of his brow and that still is the responsibility of every one of us. How can we feel that we have completely done the will of God if we are not diligent in providing for ourselves and for those who are dependent upon us? Is there ever a time in the life of a man, who is able to do so, when he should not provide for himself? Diligence, then, is another phase of this great program that God gave us, a practical, everyday program for everyday living, which when properly carried into effect has its spiritual reaction just as definitely as anything else, and the man who meets his obligations to his fellows is likewise sanctifying his soul.

The positive side of this has so many different headings that it is impossible for me to try to deal with all of them, but there is still another side that I try never to forget, and that is that to sanctify one's soul one should gain control over the God-given urges and propensities of one's body, and there are so many of us who fail in that. That is so often the cause of disruption in marriage relationships; people fail to live true to the covenants which they make in marriage simply because the urges of the body are too strong for them, and they do not, apparently, seek the spirit of God in an effort to gain control.

I have said so many times, and I repeat it, that I believe self-control, perfect self-control, would be the greatest victory that any person born into this earth could gain; and with perfect self-control and a knowledge of the plan which God prepared for us, which we can only find by searching the scriptures and listening to the authorized priesthood of God, we would be able to sanctify our souls, would we not?

To sanctify means to make holy, and only holy things can come back to the presence of God, our Heavenly Father. So, sooner or later, if we enjoy the privilege of association under the influence of Jesus Christ and the Father, it will be because we sanctify ourselves, that our minds may be single to God. If we had that single purpose, to please God, we would strive to learn how, and then to do just exactly what would be required.

For you shall live "by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." (Matt. 4:4.) That is the key, brethren and sisters. Let us learn what it is; and when we learn it, let us not try to find loopholes in the recorded statements that will justify our failure, but let us determine through prayer and humility to reach a proper understanding of the plan and then live it as nearly perfectly as we can.

May God bless us, I pray in Jesus' name. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Elder Antoine R. Ivins of the First Council of Seventy has just spoken to us. We shall now hear Elder John Longden, Assistant to the Twelve. He will be followed by Elder Spencer W. Kimball.

ELDER JOHN LONGDEN

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve Apostles

IN THE OPENING remarks of President David O. McKay yesterday morning, he offered a prayer that we might be inspired and encouraged. Truly his prayer has been answered, for we have been inspired. Our testimonies have been strengthened. We have received encouragement to live the words of the Lord.

President McKay also quoted from the Master wherein he said we should deny ourselves, take up our cross daily, and follow him, that we might be able to enjoy life in this mortal existence regardless of its trials or its obstacles.

In the limited time afforded me this morning, I should like to suggest one important principle of the gospel—that of temple marriage. If we would follow the Master, we must understand this principle and take advantage of the blessings it offers.

I would encourage young people to prepare for this glorious experience in the temples of the Lord by living clean, good lives, by studying and praying, that Satan may have no power to keep them out of the temple. Just as we are dedicated to getting our young folk into the temple, so is Satan dedicated to keeping them out.

I should like to relate three experiences which I trust will stimulate your thinking and motivate some to action.

We never know when Satan is at work. It was my privilege a few years ago to witness a marriage ceremony in the temple performed by President McKay. The young people who were being married came from good Latter-day Saint homes where they participated in family and individual prayer. To an outsider, it would seem that all was well. Yet, following the ceremony I overheard the young bride say as she embraced her mother "Why did I ever think of marrying any other way?" This indicated to me that there was a question in her mind at one time.

Too many members of our Church do not understand the principles of temple marriage and succumb to the wiles of Satan in being satisfied with a civil marriage; or worse still, they do not cherish virtue and are not worthy to go into the temple. This brings me to my second story:

A lovely Latter-day Saint mother told me of her son who had been taught the principles of the gospel, to respect his body and keep it clean. He was to be married on the morrow in the temple. The evening before the ceremony his friends gave him a party and when he arrived home he tiptoed into his mother's bedroom as had been the custom, regardless of the hour. Awakening his mother and sitting upon her bed, he said, "Mother, I have a confession to make to you tonight." For a moment her heart sank. "I am just as clean tonight as the day you gave me birth." My, what a dividend to a parent. My child is worthy of temple marriage!

The third story is a review of an experience from the life of Brother Matthew Cowley and his dear wife Elva. I trust she will forgive me. Matthew and she were working in Washington, D.C. They decided to be married there by civil law and then later on to come out to the temple and be sealed for time and eternity. Their invitations were printed and were about to be mailed when a letter came from Matthew's father pleading that they forsake such a plan and be married by that authority which God has restored to earth. He even forwarded the money for their transportation back to Salt Lake City. Their response was favorable. The gospel teachings from early youth, almost put aside for a time, finally registered upon the minds of these young people. They obeyed, and have always rejoiced that they followed the counsel of their parents. It is not good to substitute a civil ceremony even for a time when it is at all possible to accept the blessings of a temple marriage.

Young people, this is my testimony in all humility and sincerity to you this day: regardless of the promptings you may have to the contrary, stop, deliberate, and pray, study, and let the truth and light of the gospel come through.

Saturday, October 6

In conclusion, the words of Robert Burns come to me: "An atheist's laughs are a poor exchange for Deity offended." There may be those who would scoff at temple marriage. Never offend our Eternal Father and Jesus Christ by not accepting one of their greatest and most important blessings.

May God bless us as parents to teach more earnestly this vital truth of temple marriage and may our children respond to these teachings, I humbly pray in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, our Savior. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

You have just listened to Elder John Longden, Assistant to the Twelve. Elder Spencer W. Kimball of the Council of the Twelve will be our concluding speaker.

ELDER SPENCER W. KIMBALL

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

MY BELOVED brothers and sisters, I should like to speak to you today about our Lamanite brothers. I quote from Nephite prophets:

... thus saith our God: I will afflict thy seed by the hand of the Gentiles; nevertheless, I will soften the hearts of the Gentiles, that they shall be like unto a father to them; ... (2 Nephi 10:18.)

And again:

... the Lord God will raise up a mighty nation among the Gentiles, yea, even upon the face of this land; and by them shall our seed be scattered.

And after our seed is scattered the Lord God will proceed to do a marvelous work among the Gentiles, which shall be of great worth unto our seed; wherefore, it is likened unto their being nourished by the Gentiles and being carried in their arms and on their shoulders. (1 Nephi 22:7-8.)

Relatively little progress had been made since Columbus discovered America, until recent years. Hundreds of thousands of Indians were killed by the invading gentiles from Europe, 128,000 in New England alone, according to historians. The rest were pushed back, scattered, and finally placed on reservations. The battle of America continued for hundreds of years, the red people fighting for their families, their homes, their hunting grounds, and their very existence.

Finally the scriptures are being fulfilled. "Nursing fathers and mothers" are being raised up to bring the blessings of freedom and education and health to the sons of Lehi. We can remember when the majority of Navajo children were without schools, and other tribes were considerably limited. It is said that "The darkest hour is just before the dawn." But their day is dawning. There has perhaps been more constructive consideration given to the Indian people in the last decade than in the entire century before.

In 1947 the cry was raised: "The Navajos are freezing and starving." You remember, I am sure. Truckloads of clothing and food were gathered here in Utah and taken from our Church welfare storehouses for these distressed Indians. Simultaneously, the press took up the cry and the warmhearted people of the nation, and particularly of the West, answered the call with bedding, food, clothing, and money. The echoes resounded from ocean to ocean and a sleeping nation roused itself.

Pictures and stories of want and starvation were printed in newspapers and magazines; pressures were brought to bear upon officials; and the important prophecies began to be fulfilled and the arms of the gentile nation which had scattered the Lamanites now opened to enfold them, and the shoulders which once were used to push them into reservations, now squared away to carry these deprived ones to their destiny. Even within the past two or three years, great strides have been made. Education, the common denominator and leveler, is coming to the red man. The clinic and hospital are available to him. Indian children are being born in hospitals; sanitation is being taught; and the sun is rising on the Indian world with the government, churches, and many agencies becoming "nursing parents" to them.

Yesterday tribal people resisted education; today they grasp it eagerly. Not long ago nearly all Indians were illiterate and unschooled; today in 1956 nearly every Indian child in America may have some training. Yesterday Indian children were kidnapped from their parents and forced to school. Today parents beg for schools, and children eagerly attend.

Indian life is swiftly changing.
Like the sand in wind-swept dunes,
Ever changing 'stablished patterns,
New strong forces, healing wounds.

(Spencer W. Kimball.)

Mr. Paul Jones, chairman of the Navajo Council, recalls his childhood in his inaugural speech of April 4, 1955:

The salvation and hope of our Navajo people lies in education . . . at one time we made our living on livestock and a little cornpatch. When we returned from Fort Sumner there were 9,000 of us. There are now 76,000. . . . We must be educated in order to be absorbed with the rest of the people of these United States . . . those of you who have been educated must tell your people of the benefits of education. . . . It is the greatest hope that we have for our Navajo people. . . . When they returned (from Ft. Sumner) they were reluctant to send their children to school. The Federal Government had to send police out to gather the children for school. . . . I remember myself distinctly. I was of school age at that time. My father and mother used to hide me under sheepskins and blankets when they saw a person coming who represented the schools. I was the only boy in the family. They used to hide me when they saw the school people or policemen coming. However, one bright day, they made a mistake. My parents were not on the lookout, and someone saw me, even though I was hiding behind the hogan. That person said: "That boy must go to school." So away I went to school. But our eyes are now open to the advantages that school has for us. . . .

The Treaty of 1868 with the Navajos stated that the government would provide a school and a teacher for every thirty children between the ages of six and sixteen,—"who can be induced or compelled to attend school." Compulsion has now been replaced with an obsession for school in many families. It is a far cry from today back to 1744 when the Virginia commissioners made an offer to the chiefs of the Six Nations to educate six of their Indian boys.

It is of interest to note that in a feeble way the government has been trying for two hundred years to educate the Indians, and from a few at the inception of the nation, today we approach universal education for them.

The Virginia Commissioners received this reply from the Indian chiefs:

Several of our young people were formerly brought up at the colleges of the Northern Provinces; they were instructed in all your sciences; but when they came back to us, they were bad runners; ignorant of every means of living in the woods; unable to bear either cold or hunger; knew neither how to build a cabin, take a deer, or kill an enemy; spoke our language imperfectly; were therefore neither fit for hunters, warriors, or counselors; they were totally good for nothing. We are however not the less obliged by your kind offer, though we decline accepting it. And to show our grateful sense of it, if the Gentlemen of Virginia will send us a dozen of their sons, we will take great care of their education, instruct them in all we know, and make men of them.

That comes from the old records, and Dr. Ernest Wilkinson quoted it in the Indian Congress here last week.

Now may I tell you of our most perfect program and unselfish adventure in human relationships. The "outing" program had been attempted by others at times, but I think never on this basis. As we began to bring into the Church many faithful Indians, almost their first desire was that their children should have the schooling and church training which the non-Indian children enjoyed. Indian families working among us here in our beet, cotton, or potato fields saw the luxury enjoyed by white children who were well-fed and well-dressed, in comfortable homes, going to excellent schools daily. They saw their own little deprived fellows who must follow the family to the faraway fields so parents could earn money to feed them. Their dreams and yearnings finally forced the affectionate parents to become bold enough to approach a white employer: "Would you let our little girl stay with you and go to school after we have gone back to the reservation? She will be a good girl and cause you no trouble."

With the earnestness in their eyes and the pleading in their voices, who could resist? The experiment began. A few children were left in homes. They were happy and grateful. The foster parents were pleased, and neighbors wished also to participate. On the reservation, natural parents told their neighbors, who also wrote pleading letters for their own children. The number increased to twenty, sixty, eighty, and then last year to 253. It grew like Topsy. Arrangements at first were between natural parents on the reservation and willing foster parents in Utah; but when the Church determined to give it support, the plan was given legal status and brought under the Utah State Department of Public Welfare, children's service, through the state license of the Relief Society. Inasmuch as it is illegal for anyone without a state license to engage in any way in the placing or receiving of children, it is urged that neither missionaries nor members engage in the independent placement of children.

Here is how the plan works:

In August more than 250 Indian children move northward. The Begay family is typical. The Begays have a team and spring wagon and ride slowly across the hills and valleys and barren stretches to the gathering place. In the miles and miles of travel, Father and Mother Begay have time to discuss with Ruth and Billie the great adventure ahead: "Here is your opportunity," Father Begay is saying. "Our Church is taking you to a good Mormon home in Utah where you will be kindly treated and may go to school. You must be grateful and study hard and learn."

And now Mother Begay, in colorful velveteen, and her hair in a bob, is adding: "These Church members are doing this in the goodness of their hearts. They are not paid for the food and clothes and shelter and training that they are giving you. They will treat you like one of their own. You must do your part like the children of the family."

At last they reach the Gap in northern Arizona. Other Indian families are arriving also in wagons and pickups. The kindly driver loads their belongings into the chartered busses. Our friendly Church chaperon meets the family and the children. Farewells are said, and tears are shed as affectionate parents and children part for the school term. Though already homesick and lonely at heart, neither parents nor children would change their minds, so grateful are they for the opportunities just opening. The Begays and the Chees and the Biligodys hitch up their horses, and with a tearful happiness, drive to their homes on the reservation, while the busses, filled with eager, excited children, drive northward.

There were a few tears—tears of premature homesickness from youngsters leaving the reservation for the first time and suddenly reluctant and fearful of the future. Tears from little brothers and sisters, too young or otherwise unqualified for the great adventure. And there were a few furtive tears from parents, realizing at this moment of parting how long and lonely the months stretched out before spring vacation.

Just a few hours and the busses are in Richfield, Utah. The kindly chaperon has kept the children happy and looked after their every need. It is very early in the morning at the reception center, but it is already a hive of industry, and keen expectancy is in the air. Sevier Stake becomes the host, and the stake presidency, members of the priesthood, and the Relief Society sisters are waiting. There is the smell of bacon in the air, and the young redskins, some of whom have been here before, file out of the busses and into the Church dining room for bacon, eggs, milk, fruit, and cereal, prepared by the Relief Society sisters.

Soon breakfast is over. The processing is begun. Kind sisters take the girls in one building and understanding priesthood brethren the boys in another.

where they are bathed and shampooed and made ready for the clinic. The food, soap, shampoo, and other things are furnished free by the Church. All who assist are volunteer workers, doing this like all other of their Church work, without remuneration. Six hundred towels are furnished free by a generous linen company, typical of many other favors. The children line up for the clinic where several physicians, furnished by the United States Health Service, senior medical students, technicians, and several nurses, on loan from the Utah State Health Department, all go to work. The little folk's chests are x-rayed; their hearts, eyes, skin, ears, teeth, and temperatures are checked, and a complete record made. Their fears are quieted by sweet, sympathetic women when tears of unhappiness follow the needle-jabbing of immunization and the blood test. They know this is for their good. Lunchtime comes, and another appetizing meal is enjoyed from welfare supplies. There is some rest, and there is supervised play and a movie.

Then come the foster families, hundreds of them, from all over Utah: unpaid families whose only desire is to provide unselfishly for the child and to "mother" and "father" him and train and guide him. They are driving in from Kanab and Salt Lake City; from Moroni and Escalante; from St. George and the Uintah Basin—unselfish families anticipating the new arrival to their family. There are stake presidents, bishops, mayors, editors, doctors, farmers—the finest people in the communities of Utah and of the world—each family to receive for the school term an Indian child, accepted by them to become a real part of the family. The white children present excitedly speculate as to which of the Indian youngsters, so hungrily eating luncheon, is to be their new brother or sister. In the stake tabernacle films are shown on Indian culture, and a talk is given on the part each is to play in this glorious human drama. Four days of this processing follow.

Now, for the school term, the Indian child is on a par with his new brothers and sisters. He rides horses, feasts at picnics, does chores, goes swimming, takes music lessons. He goes to school and enters into every Church, civic, and community activity on an equal basis. Before the meal, the new family member takes his turn in family prayers and blessing the food. He goes to Sunday School and priesthood meeting. The little ones go to Primary and the larger ones to MIA, and all the family go together to Sacrament meeting. The child attends seminary and is advanced in priesthood and auxiliary activities. Many do baptism work in the temples. In school he fits into the regular classes, and if his language is faulty, likely the teacher will gladly give up her noon hour to tutor him. Foster parents write to natural parents, sending pictures. Case workers visit every child and family monthly and visit schoolteachers and principals often and assure themselves that harmony and understanding prevail.

The Indian children have proved themselves to be alert, brilliant, and responsive. They often take the lead in their classes, being elected to school offices, and they graduate from many high schools in Utah. They are going out into employment and are making good. The employer of one of our Indian girls in office work said:

"She is one of our best workers. I wish we had many more like her."

Four months and Christmas comes. The children remain in Utah where they share the Christmas gifts, parties, and other kindnesses equal to and the same as the white children. Latter-day Saints have a keen interest in the Indians and are willing to share with and sacrifice for them.

Five more eventful months pass and 250 Indian children are on their way back to the reservation. Though some might like to remain in Utah, all are sent home to keep welded the natural family ties. Again farewells are said, and tears are shed, and they reluctantly leave their Utah homes and the tearful family whose home and hearts they have been sharing, and they fill the chartered busses again. The selected bus driver is exceptionally kind; the chaperon is most solicitous. No baggage is mixed; no children are lost; and a happy group turns homeward. Home! Family! Hours of pleasant travel, and the distribution center is reached. The missionaries are here to greet them, and the Indian families to enfold them gratefully to their hearts. For three happy months they will cement family ties on the reservation, and then, off for another year of school.

Much planning and prayer and fasting have gone into our program. In the summer the social workers travel through the reservation. They visit each home or hogan and get acquainted with the children and the parents, catching the spirit of the family, its background, the training of the children, and their individual needs. With our missionaries, who nurture them constantly, these special workers urge the parents to have the children examined and treated for dental and medical needs. Proper legal contracts are secured, and arrangements are made whereby missionaries will pilot them the coming August to the proper place for embarkation. Careful studies are made for efficient and understanding placement for the coming year.

Now the workers return to the Utah communities and visit the white families who have previously signified their willingness to co-operate. The home and its facilities are studied to be sure the child and family will be comfortable and happy. The family is interviewed and, through a visit to the bishop of the ward, is evaluated and their worthiness determined. No child of trusting Indian Church members is placed in a broken home or one which is not an exemplary one. No child goes into a home where liquor is used or where there is friction or delinquent children. He goes into a well-ordered home where there is the rare combination of kindness and discipline, firmness and affection; into a praying family, a religious, devoted family of character, faith, and love. Here is opportunity at its best for the Indian to get away from his worst enemies: idleness, liquor, and immorality.

It is heartwarming to see the friendly co-operation of government, state, and local and school officials and teachers. Our Church classes have absorbed the little fellows into their groups, and timid, shrinking children have become happy, normal playmates and workmates and family members. One young Indian, after five consecutive years with a delightful, co-operative family, graduated from a Utah high school where he was student-body president, and with a $350.00 Standard Oil scholarship, attended Brigham Young University; he is now in the Northern States Mission on a full, regular mission. Two other Indian boys are filling regular missions in the Southwest Indian Mission, where Oneida Indian girls have also filled missions. This is the beginning. The future is most promising.

We expect our graduating youth will continue from these high schools into Brigham Young University. At first there were a few, and some of them discontinued, but last year with thirty-four representing eighteen tribes from east to west, and this year with even more, they are already taking hold and stabilizing themselves. From now on we expect that Indians in ever-increasing numbers will be numbered in the graduating classes of Brigham Young University.

The Church has generously provided for an intermediate program whereby Indian students who have come a little short of collegiate requirements may have special tutorial service from skilled teachers. Scholarships are provided to assist worthy students in the university, but many of our Indian children are already paying their entire way.

Hundreds of our Indian youth are receiving character-building and religious training wherever they go in government schools in Kansas, Oklahoma, Oregon, California, Nevada, Arizona, New Mexico, and in the great Intermountain Indian School at Brigham City, Utah, where we have a branch of the Church comprised of Indians. Here, President David O. McKay last winter dedicated the commodious chapel near the school wherein our youth are taught correct principles, all the virtues and the doctrines of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

Our program is appreciated by the Indian people. When some opposition threatened the program last summer in one area, a petition was sent to us signed by many Indian parents pleading for the continuance of the program, and reservation officials were also approached. The petition read:

We parents feel that your organization has done wonders for our children, and we wish you would try every effort to place our children this year.

One prominent non-member observer wrote us:

You have the most perfect program for Navajo children that has ever been initiated to this time. We are all grateful for its outstanding success.

Another said:

I have never enjoyed a more wonderful experience in wholehearted co-operation and complete harmony of effort than I enjoyed at Richfield.

A tribal leader wrote us:

. . . This is very gratifying to our Navajo people in that your organization has taken such interest in our Navajo children. . . . We deeply appreciate your service to our Navajo people. . . . There have been several notifications reporting the foster homes for educational purposes by your child placing agency as a very important and noteworthy help. . . .

Two missionaries wrote, when the children had returned home for the summer:

Yesterday in our testimony meeting, a mother of one of the girls who went to Utah this year got up and told how grateful she was to our Father in heaven that her girl had been able to go up to Utah where she could learn to pray, speak English better, cook, sew, and gain the schooling that she wanted her child to have that she herself didn't get.

One sister wrote of the first Sacrament meeting after the return of the children from Utah, how without embarrassment they had taken part in the services, giving talks, songs, and how some had borne testimony with such poise and impressiveness that the parents were amazed, as were Indian children who had been away to other schools.

In our great country times are changing. Schools are provided for practically every Indian child, and tribal funds are made available for determined but impecunious students. True religion and faith in the Eternal God are replacing superstition; the physician is taking the place of the medicine man; and administration by the priesthood is replacing the sand patterns and the signs for the Latter-day Saint members. Young couples are obtaining licenses from court clerks and being married by ministers and bishops. Bodies are being buried much the same as the white dead. The Indians who still place on the grave meats and fruits and other foods cannot understand why the dead of the white man can smell the flowers any more than the Indian dead can enjoy the food. The destructive custom of burning the home and its contents when death occurs therein is giving way. One of our sweet Apache sisters wrote this at the death of her husband:

I live in my house. I do not burn it like other Indians. I believe what the missionaries tell me. I think they are my brother.

This is our adventure in good citizenship and righteous living, our experiment in human relationships carried on by this, the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Knowing the origin and destiny of the red men and believing the promises of God as recorded in the Book of Mormon, our people are willing to sacrifice for the progress and development of these whose deprivations pyramided mountain high but whose curse is now being lifted. Hundreds more sacrificing Latter-day Saints may yet have the opportunity of providing temporary homes for Lehi's children to get an education and to learn the gospel and to become Church leaders.

This is not a proselyting program, for we bring from the reservations those Indian children who are already members of the Church and whose families generally are members. The program will make good young people, stalwart adults. It will fortify them against the evils of the world; it will train them to become self-sufficient; it will develop them into leaders prepared to return to their own people and bring to them the benefits which can come from education.

This program has many advantages: It has at once the multiple advantages of the boarding school, the day school, the home, the refining and cultural influences of an improved community.

The children are taught in superior schools, fully accredited, and among the best in the nation. They have sufficient companionship of their own race to retain their pride in and love for their own people, for in the same community and school are other Indian young people. They have the environment of the best communities where are found the least in the world's vices and the most of its culture and refinement. They retain their family ties with natural parents by correspondence, pictures, relayed reports, and also letters through the case workers, and they return to their homes for the summer months to keep bound their home and family loves and loyalties. They grow naturally into the culture of America at its best, attending with a minority of their own group and a majority of the non-Indian children, activities in school, community, church, and family. They are not institutionalized but individualized and become recognized members of the family where they are integrated and "counted in" for every family pleasure, adventure, or sacred experience.

Our program is unique. Here is no family of marginal income who must take in a boarder to supplement the family living. Here is no mercenary care. But here non-Indian families in a very real and lovable way absorb the Indian children as new members of the family. These families, give, give, and give as only dedicated people will give. There is no remuneration for them; but their total compensation for the food, clothes, shelter, care, and love they give is the satisfaction which comes in giving opportunity for an enriched life to one who could not otherwise have it.

We rejoice in the greatly accelerated schooling of Indian children by the government, the states, and other churches and agencies, but we present this program of training in home and school and community as the finest program conceived of man for the rapid and permanent advancement and progress of the Indian child so long deprived. Let them have one generation of this sustained program, and see a new Indian world of prosperity, culture, and happiness.

In conclusion we say: God bless these selfless hundreds of families who have become and are yet to become "nursing fathers and mothers" who will continue to carry the chosen children of the ancient prophet Lehi "in their arms and upon their shoulders," I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

SECOND DAY AFTERNOON MEETING

Conference reconvened in the Tabernacle Saturday afternoon, October 6, at 2:00 p.m.

The Combined Scandinavian Choirs furnished the music for this session. R. Hulbert Keddington was the conductor, Roy M. Darley, organist.

President David O. McKay:

The great Tabernacle on Temple Square in Salt Lake City is filled to capacity. Every seat, so far as we can observe, is taken, and people are standing in the doorways at this, the Fourth Session of the One Hundred Twenty-seventh Semi-Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

For the benefit of those standing in the doorways we are pleased to announce that overflow meetings are being held in the Assembly Hall, and in Barratt Hall, where a public address system and television are operating. These services, for those who are listening, are also being televised over KSL-TV, Channel 5, of Salt Lake City, and broadcast over Radio Station KSL, and also over 11 radio stations in Utah, Nevada, and Idaho, and by special arrangement over two television stations in Utah and Idaho.

We are pleased to note the attendance this afternoon of prominent national and state officials, leaders in educational circles. We extend a hearty welcome to these, especially to the wives of the mission presidents who have been in attendance here by special invitation to the dedicatory services of the Relief Society building, and we welcome our boys who are here who are enlisted in the Military Service, and all who are listening in.

The singing for the afternoon session will be by the Combined Scandinavian Choirs, with Elder R. Hulbert Keddington conducting, and Elder Roy M. Darley at the organ. We shall begin these services by the Combined Choirs singing, "How Lovely Are the Messengers." The opening prayer will be offered by Elder Heber J. Heiner, Jr., president of the Ben Lomond Stake.

ELDER HAROLD B. LEE

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

THIS AFTERNOON I am encouraged by the impressive discourse of President McKay at the opening of this conference to give humble expression to some thoughts that I have had on what I consider to be one of the most important matters which concern the Latter-day Saints today.

In the Documentary History of the Church, Volume IV, there is recorded an incident, and there is copied a letter which was prepared by the Prophet Joseph Smith at the request of the editor and publisher of a newspaper, who had asked the Prophet to write an article telling of the rise, the progress, the persecutions, and the faith of the Latter-day Saints. The Prophet agreed to do so on one condition, and that condition was that they would take his article in its entirety, with no deletions or no changes. There appears then, in this letter, or this article which was written for the paper, one of the most important historical documents which we have in Church history.

In that letter the Prophet Joseph Smith told about an experience that he had on the evening of September 21, 1823. While he was engaging in humble prayer unto God, suddenly he discovered that the room in which he was praying was being filled with light, a light brighter than the brightness of the sun, and as he marveled at this brightness, he was aware that a personage had entered the room with a consuming brightness even greater than that which he had beheld in the room.

As he recovered from the shock of the appearance of this personage, who introduced himself to the Prophet as a messenger sent from God, the messenger announced four things, which are declared in this document to which I have made reference and which are of great significance to the work today and as it was to be established under the instrumentality of the boy prophet, Joseph Smith. I shall only make brief reference to three of these announcements of the heavenly messenger:

The first thing that the messenger said was that the covenant which God had made with ancient Israel was at hand and about to be fulfilled. This undoubtedly made reference to that covenant which was announced to Abraham, who because of his faithfulness, was promised that through him and his seed all the nations of the earth would be blessed: and God would make of Abraham's seed a great nation. We need only to be reminded that the Savior of the world came through that lineage; and while his personal ministry was only to the house of Israel, before he left his disciples he declared to them that they were "to preach repentance and remission of sins unto all the earth, beginning at Jerusalem." From this lineage a chosen people was to be prepared to set up the kingdom of God in these last days, and it was over this kingdom which the Christ was to reign when he came on earth for the second time.

The second announcement that was made by this heavenly messenger was that a preparatory work for the second coming of the Messiah was speedily to commence. You will recall that just before the Master's crucifixion he told his disciples that he would come again, and they said to him, as they sat upon the mount with him, perhaps for one of the last times, "Master, tell us when these things shall be." And then there came from his lips a train of happenings which he said would be the sure foretelling that the time was nigh at hand when his second coming was drawing near, when he should appear in the clouds of heaven with great power and great glory.

After he administered forty days among them after his crucifixion and resurrection, he was caught away from them in the clouds of heaven, and two angelic personages dressed in white said to those who were witnesses of the Master's ascension,

Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? this same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven. (Acts 1:11.)

The third thing that the messenger announced to the Prophet was that the time was at hand for the gospel in all its fulness to be preached in power unto all the nations. This was in fulfilment of that which had been promised to John when the angel would fly in the midst of heaven, "having the [fulness of the] everlasting gospel to preach to them that dwell on the earth." (Rev. 14:6.) The restoration of that fulness of the gospel was accomplished when the Book of Mormon, which was declared to be a record in which the fulness of the gospel was contained, was restored to the world through the Prophet Joseph Smith.

That the gospel might be "preached in power" required something else. Preceding the organization of the Church it was necessary that the keys of the priesthood be committed again unto men so that the gospel could be preached with power, and its ordinances administered unto men.

But the final and fourth thing which was announced is the thing about which I wish to address the few remarks that I make this afternoon. That was that a people might be prepared for the millennial reign. The meaning of that term was understood, apparently, from the prophets down from Enoch's time to the Prophet Joseph Smith's time, when the Lord spoke of a thousand year period in the world's history which would be called a millennial reign, which would commence with the second coming of the Savior. John saw in vision the resurrection of the just who would reign with Christ for a thousand years. He saw that during this period Satan would be bound, that there would be peace upon the whole earth. Heaven and earth would be closely associated, and all unfinished work pertaining to this world would be completed. Injustices would be righted, and at the end of that reign would come a final judgment.

Now, I have asked myself, this being the time to prepare for the millennial reign, how shall we set about to prepare a people to receive the coming of the Lord? As I have thought seriously about that matter, I have reached two or three sure conclusions in my own thinking. This preparation demands first that a people, to receive the coming of the Lord, must be taught the personality and the nature of God and his Son, Jesus Christ.

Someone has said this: the demand of our modern age is not "for a God who once was, but for a God who now is." As I read that, I thought, how can one meet a person whose identity is unknown? How can one be prepared to meet a person about whom he has no knowledge? How can one be prepared to meet a being whose personality he cannot comprehend?

Great thinkers have long since recognized this need in religion if it is to become a vital force. George Harris, in his book A Century of Change in Religion, said this: "The thought of God as a personality is a necessary condition of everything that is contained within the field of religious experience."

Professor Hacking of Harvard in his "Meaning of God in Human Experience," made even a more significant statement when he wrote: "The alternative to the thought of God as a person is the thought of Him as a substance, as mere energy, and chiefly as law. Just stop and consider for a moment what it would mean for us to try to obey the will of substance, of love, of energy, or worship law, and you will have some idea at least of how near this question of the personality of God comes to the heart of true religion."

When the Apostle Paul spoke of the organization of the Church, he said that one of the prime purposes of its organization was

... for the edifying of the body of Christ:

Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man. (Eph. 4:12-13.)

And you will remember in that last memorable prayer, the Master said, "And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent." (John 17:3.)

Eternal life is God's life, or life with God. In other words, it seems to me, they are trying to tell us that the worthiness to abide in his holy presence can be obtained only by knowing God and by knowing Jesus Christ whom he has sent.

To my thinking, another requisite of that preparation to receive the Lord at the beginning of his millennial reign demands that the people be taught to accept the divinity of the mission of Jesus as the Savior of the world. Why was the Savior sent into the world? The Master himself answered that question during his ministry when he said: "For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through him might be saved." (Ibid., 3:17.)

In a revelation in our day he said it again:

For, behold, the Lord your Redeemer suffered death in the flesh; wherefore he suffered the pain of all men, that all men might repent and come unto him.

And he hath risen again from the dead, that he might bring all men unto him, on conditions of repentance. (D & C 18:11-12.)

Saved from what? Redeemed from what? Well, first, saved from mortal death through the resurrection of the dead. But in another sense we are saved likewise by his atoning sacrifice. We are saved from sin. Here is what the Prophet Alma explained to his people concerning this matter:

Saturday, October 6

Second Day

And he shall come into the world to redeem his people; and he shall take upon him the transgressions of those who believe on his name; and these are they that shall have eternal life, and salvation cometh to none else. (Alma 11:40.)

... he cannot save them in their sins; for I cannot deny his word, and he hath said that no unclean thing can inherit the kingdom of heaven; therefore, how can ye be saved, except ye inherit the kingdom of heaven? Therefore, ye cannot be saved in your sins. (Ibid., 11:37.)

That last declaration of the Prophet Alma points to still another requirement, as I see it, for a people to be prepared to receive the Savior's coming. We must be cleansed and purified and sanctified to be made worthy to receive and abide that holy presence. The Prophet Mormon put it this way:

Behold, I say unto you that ye would be more miserable to dwell with a holy and just God, under a consciousness of your filthiness before him, than ye would to dwell with the damned souls in hell. (Mormon 9:4.)

How can this cleansing take place? The answer is: through holy ordinances which the Lord has established for that purpose. We are saved by grace, yes, through the atonement of the Master, but Nephi taught this other principle: "... for we know that it is by grace that we are saved, after all we can do." (2 Nephi 25:23.)

Now the nature of that ordinance by which salvation can be obtained is explained clearly also by the Prophet Nephi:

Wherefore, my beloved brethren, I know that if ye shall follow the Son, with full purpose of heart, acting no hypocrisy and no deception before God, but with real intent, repenting of your sins, witnessing unto the Father that ye are willing to take upon you the name of Christ, by baptism—yea, by following your Lord and your Savior down into the water, according to his word, behold, then shall ye receive the Holy Ghost; yea, then cometh the baptism of fire and of the Holy Ghost; and then can ye speak with the tongue of angels, and shout praises unto the Holy One of Israel.

And I heard a voice from the Father, saying: Yea, the words of my Beloved are true and faithful. He that endureth to the end, the same shall be saved. (Ibid., 31:13, 15.)

And now, finally, there is still one more thing that is necessary, to my thinking, before that preparation is made for the millennial reign. We must accept the divine mission of the Prophet Joseph Smith as the instrumentality through which the restoration of the gospel and the organization of the Church of Jesus Christ was accomplished. Each member of the Church, to be prepared for the millennial reign, must receive a testimony, each for himself, of the divinity of the work established by Joseph Smith. It was this that was taught plainly by the Saints after the advent of the Savior upon the earth, and one of the leaders in our day has said it again, when he declared, I suppose with reference to the parable of the five foolish and five wise virgins in the Master's parable, "The time will come when no man nor woman will be able to endure on borrowed light. Each will have to be guided by the light within himself." (Life of Heber C. Kimball, pp. 449-450.)

These things being true, then it must become our object and our whole desire to teach these fundamental things to prepare our people for his coming. As Brother Romney delivered his very excellent address on the subject of the perfecting of the Saints, I remembered what a prominent commentator said about the quotation from the writings of Paul to the Ephesians. He said there should be no comma after the word saints. He said it should read "for the perfecting of the saints in the work of the ministry," stressing the importance of perfecting all who are called to positions of leadership in preparing the people to receive a knowledge of the Son of God. Whether or not this is the correct interpretation, it is certain that in our homes, in our seminaries and institutes, in the auxiliary organizations, in the priesthood quorums, we must teach the knowledge and nature of the Godhead. We must teach the mission of the Savior of the world. We need to teach the purifying principles and ordinances of the gospel. We need to teach the need of and the restoration of the gospel through the instrumentality of the Prophet Joseph Smith.

I suppose some might think it presumptuous if I were to plead with the teachers of youth in secular as well as in religious education not to tear down the foundation stones upon which a human soul can build faith necessary to prepare to meet their Redeemer. I would from my humble station invite those who would fight against the truth as taught in the restored Church to think seriously of what a wise counselor said to the enemies of Christ in the day of Peter and his associates. This counselor admonished:

Refrain from these men, and let them alone: for if this counsel or this work be of men, it will come to nought:

But if it be of God, ye cannot overthrow it; lest haply ye be found to fight against God. (Acts 5:38-39.)

Perhaps today is the time for us to hear again the rallying call that was put into words by W. W. Phelps:

Awake! O ye people, the Savior is coming;
He'll suddenly come to his temple, we hear;
Repentance is needed of all that are living,
To gain them a lot of inheritance near.
Today will soon pass and that unknown tomorrow

May leave many souls in a more dreadful state

Than came by the flood, or that fell on Gomorrah—

Yea, weeping and wailing when grief is too late.

Be ready, O island, the Savior is coming;
He'll bring again Zion, the prophets declare;
Repent of your sins, and have faith in redemption,

To gain you a lot of inheritance there.

A voice to the nations in season is given, Prepare, oh, prepare for the kingdom's new birth,

To call the elect from the four winds of heaven;

For Jesus is coming to reign upon earth."

May the Lord bless us as his children to recognize that call, and may we say and be able to say it with power, "Choose you this day whom ye will serve, . . . but as for me and my house, we will serve the Lord, (the God of this land,)" (Josh. 24:15) and prepare for the coming of the Savior, which may not be too long delayed, to cut short for the reign of righteousness the wickedness that well nigh seems to engulf a wicked world; when those who are righteous at his coming will be caught up in the clouds of heaven to meet him, and those who are asleep in their graves, who are righteous likewise, will be caught up in the clouds of heaven to meet him.

I bear you my solemn witness that I believe these things to be true with all my soul. This is the day for us to prepare that people ready to receive the coming of the Lord, and I bear that testimony in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER STERLING W. SILL

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve Apostles

A GREAT AMERICAN PHILOSOPHER ONCE said that we should thank God every day of our lives for the privilege of having been born. And then he went on to speculate on the unique question of how unfortunate it would have been if we had not been born, and he pointed out some of the wonderful things that we would have missed.

Really to understand the tremendous value of life as revealed by the gospel multiplies by many times the importance of this thought. Life is our most valuable possession. Just to live is a marvelous blessing, especially to live in these days of wonder and enlightenment known as the Dispensation of the Fullness of Times.

In the days of Job it was said, "All that a man hath will he give for his life." (Job 2:4.) For a very wise purpose, God has implanted in every human heart a great natural desire for continued existence. We cling to life with every ounce of our strength. Even in severe sickness or oppressive trouble, we will still go to almost any length to prolong life even for a week or a month, though the period gained may be one of pain or hopelessness. But we will suffer almost any inconvenience or endure almost any hardship just to live.

Now if mortal life is worth so much, how much is eternal life worth? And what would it mean to us if it were lost? God himself placed a value on eternal life when he said it was his greatest gift to man. It therefore automatically becomes our most important opportunity to give every co-operation to help bring it about. And a good place to start is the place suggested by the philosopher—that is, to live our appreciation every day. What a wonderful way to begin this quest for eternal life, if we could always live the sentiment of the song that says—

I love life, and I want to live,
To drink of life's fulness, take all it can give;
I love life, every moment must count,
To glory in its sunshine and revel in its fount.

Even if we gave "everything" to secure eternal life, we still have made the most wonderful bargain in the world. William James said, "The greatest use of life is to spend it for something that outlasts it." Eternal exaltation lasts forever and is the greatest possible good.

But the benefits of eternal life are not limited to its dimension of length. It has been pointed out that life has four dimensions:

First, there is the length of life—or how long we live.

Second, there is the breadth of life—or how interestingly we live.

Third, there is the depth of life—or how much we live, represented by those great qualities of love, worship, devotion, service, etc.

Then there is a fourth dimension of life, which might be compared to that more or less mysterious fourth dimension of space, the purpose of life—or why we live.

In the ordinary situations we multiply the dimensions to get the total volume. Suppose therefore that we could multiply the dimensions of life.

First there is the length of life.

We have made some progress in the last few centuries in increasing life's length. You may be interested to know that if you had lived two thousand years ago in Jerusalem, your life expectancy at birth would have been approximately nineteen years. In George Washington's day in America it was thirty-five years. In the America of our day, it is seventy years. We have not only tripled life's length, but it is also now possible for us to have clearer minds and stronger bodies and live in a world from which physical pain has largely been eliminated.

But no one is satisfied with this accomplishment. The only life we seek is eternal life. It has been wisely said that—"If the death of the body should forever end human life and personality, then the universe would be throwing away with utter heedlessness its most precious possession. A reasonable person does not build a violin with infinite care, gathering the materials and shaping the body of it, so that it can play the composition of the masters, and then by some whim of chance caprice, smash it to bits. Neither does God create in his own image the great masterpiece of a human life, and then when it has just begun to live, throw it utterly away."

God holds firmly in his hands the keys of eternal life.

Now suppose that we could multiply the length by the breadth of life.

Life at its best, even in mortality, is filled with interest and wonders. After the creation, God looked upon the earth and called it good. It is an earth of boundless beauty and endless fascination, where we may continually grow in knowledge and appreciation. When in our pre-mortal existence we beheld the foundations of the earth being laid and knew that we were going to have the privilege of living upon it, we are told that "all the sons of God shouted for joy." (Job 38:7.) And I am sure that if we fully remembered now what we knew for sure then, we would be willing to crawl on our hands and knees through life for the privilege of being born and having the opportunity of proving ourselves faithful during the experiences of mortality.

Then our first parents were placed upon the earth and were asked to decide whether or not they would eat the fruit from the tree of knowledge, and after they had eaten, God said, "the man is become as one of us, to know good and evil." (Gen. 3:22.) And I would like to point out in passing, that the right kind of knowledge still tends to have that effect upon people. It still tends to make them become as gods. And the most important classification of that knowledge is to know God and his plans for our betterment. When at the beginning of that long, awful night of betrayal and trial Jesus offered the great prayer to his Father, he said, "And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent." (John 17:3.)

We live in a day when the gospel has been restored to the earth in a fulness never known before. In addition to the things that other dispensations have had, we now have the three great volumes of new scripture, outlining in every detail the simple principles of the gospel. The pathway to eternal life has now been perfectly marked and brilliantly lighted, and no one now needs to get off the straight and narrow way, except by his own choice. We live in a day when we may eat the fruit from the tree of knowledge of good and evil to our heart's content. There is no flaming sword guarding the tree of knowledge, and some of the greatest joys of life are the joys of understanding, born in our own minds. Edward Dyer said—

My mind to me a kingdom is;
Such pleasant joys therein I find
That it excels all other bliss
That earth affords or grows by kind.

The gift of eternal exaltation includes not only a celestial body, but also a celestial mind. We will have quickened senses, amplified powers of perception, and vastly increased capacity for happiness and understanding.

We know from firsthand experience some of the traits and characteristics of glorified, immortal beings, from those who have visited the earth. In describing the Angel Moroni, the Prophet Joseph Smith said, "His whole person was glorious beyond description, and his countenance truly like lightning. . . ." Not only was his person glorious, but also the Prophet said his clothing was brilliant "beyond any earthly thing I had ever seen; nor do I believe that any earthly thing could be made to appear so exceedingly white and brilliant." (P of G P, Joseph Smith 2:32, 31.)

We are all familiar with the wonderful lift it gives us to be appropriately dressed in beautiful clothing. We adorn our bodies and keep them clean and attractive and in other ways go to great lengths to make them pleasant places to live. If attractive clothing gives us pleasure, what must be the joy of living forever, dressed in a glorified, celestialized body—to live with a celestial family and friends on a celestial earth—but with the great added fascination of having a celestial mind, one that thinks like God!

Then suppose we multiply the total of the length and breadth by the depth of life.

The objective of life is not only to live long, but also to live well. It is not only to acquire but also to become; it is not only to receive benefits but also to render service. Wealth consists not so much in what we have as in what we are and do. I suppose that the eight most important words ever spoken are these: "So God created man in his own image. . . ." (Gen 1:27.) But not only has each of you been created in the image of God, but each has also been endowed with a set of attributes of divinity, the development of which is one of the purposes for which we live. As Jesus admonished us, "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect." (Matt. 5:48.) The plan of eternal progression contemplates that the offspring may ultimately become like the parent, and therefore fulfils the scripture which says that "men are that they might have joy," (2 Nephi 2:25) as the greatest joys of life are the joys of being.

Then there is the purpose of life, that which gives life its significance.

For a wise and glorious purpose

Thou [God] hast placed us here on earth
And withheld the recollection
Of our former friends and birth.

(Eliza R. Snow.)

Some day that recollection and those friendships will be given back to us, but in the meantime, what a wonderful stimulation to know that life is not an accident or an afterthought or a result of blind chance! The great plan of salvation was designed by God our Father for our benefit. We have been working toward the goal of eternal exaltation through a long period of pre-mortal existence. Then we walked by sight. We knew God. He is our Father. We lived with him. We saw his glorious, resurrected celestial body. We felt the wonder of his celestial mind and the delight of his wonderful personality. We wanted to be like him. We knew we must follow his example. We must learn obedience. We must learn to walk a little way by faith. We must pass the final test of mortality where we are free to choose for ourselves. We must be educated and proven and sanctified and redeemed.

And when we have finally proved ourselves worthy of exaltation, then eternity will be the measure of life's length; celestial glory will be the measure of its breadth; to be like God will be the measure of its depth.

Our salvation is made up of so many individual thoughts and acts and hours of effort, certainly it would be the height of foolishness so much to dread to throw mortal life away all at once, but then deliberately to throw away eternal life a little at a time. It has been said that few, if any, will ever lose their salvation by a blowout. Mostly salvation is lost by a series of slow leaks—a little indecision, a little indifference, a little procrastination, a little slothfulness.

Disobedience may cut down life's length by producing spiritual death. Lethargy may reduce its breadth and intensity. Sin may destroy its depth, its godliness, its joy. Ignorance may thwart its purpose.

Brothers and sisters, the gospel has been given to help us increase the dimensions of our lives. That was also the mission of the Savior of the world who said, "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly." (John 10:10.) "... all that a man hath he will give for eternal life," (See Job 2:4) is still the greatest bargain in the world. May God help us to spend our lives effectively to that end, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Elder Sterling W. Sill, Assistant to the Twelve, has just been speaking to us. We shall now hear from Elder S. Dilworth Young of the First Council of Seventy.

ELDER S. DILWORTH YOUNG

Of the First Council of the Seventy

YESTERDAY THERE was a story read to you by Elder Clifford E. Young concerning Peter and John in the court of the temple healing a lame man who asked for alms. May I finish the story for you:

Now when they saw the boldness of Peter and John, and perceived that they were unlearned and ignorant men, they marvelled; and they took knowledge of them, that they had been with Jesus.

And beholding the man which was healed standing with them, they could say nothing against it.

But when they had commanded them to go aside out of the council, they conferred among themselves,

Saying, What shall we do to these men? for that indeed a notable miracle hath been done by them is manifest to all them that dwell in Jerusalem; and we cannot deny it.

But that it spread no further among the people, let us straitly threaten them, that they speak henceforth to no man in this name.

And they called them, and commanded them not to speak at all nor teach in the name of Jesus.

But Peter and John answered and said unto them, Whether it be right in the sight of God to hearken unto you more than unto God, judge ye.

For we cannot but speak the things which we have seen and heard. (Acts 4:13-20.)

It is that last phrase about which I wish to speak. I should like to apply it to children. It is the burden of the Church, if any such thing can be a burden, to testify of things "seen and heard." How are we to teach children? They do not know all that an adult should know, but they should have no doubt as to where adults stand.

Every boy has a right to get the feeling that his father and his mother and his priesthood teacher, his Sunday School teacher and his scoutmaster, or anyone with whom he comes into association in the Church, knows of a surety of things "seen and heard." Every girl has a right to the same assurance that her parents and leaders know of things "seen and heard." Young folks themselves do not know yet, but confidence which they must develop comes because those closely in touch with them constantly bear witness to them in act, in deed, in word, that they know of things "seen and heard," the things seen and heard mentioned by Peter and John; the things mentioned by Nephi in the first chapter of the Book of Mormon in talking about his father Lehi, of the things he saw and heard; the glories of the gospel and of Jesus Christ and of all the things "seen and heard" of him and of the things Joseph Smith "saw and heard."

Children are not well taught by just being told. When I was a young man, at one time I worked on a ranch in Idaho for a large cattle outfit. Fences were more of a curiosity than now. The first morning I went to work for them (and I was green at it) the boss sent the man who took care of the "remuda," the horses, out to get them before daylight. I was curious to know how those cowboys were going to rope and saddle their horses because I could see no corral. I assumed the "punchers" were going to have a rare time chasing them down. But as day broke, in they came, fifty or sixty head of horses at a dead run, and they came to a corral I had not noticed. Stakes had been driven in a large circle on the prairie, each stake protruding about eighteen inches above the ground. In the top of each stake was an eyelet, and threaded through the eyelet was a rope; wings went out from a twenty-foot entrance, perhaps one hundred feet on both sides. These horses came into the enclosure at a full gallop. The rope did not reach to their knees, and yet not a horse stepped over it. The punchers went into that little makeshift corral and roped their animals, saddled and bridled them, mounted and rode the buck out of them, and not a horse jumped over that rope out of the corral.

I asked the foreman why that was, and he said, "They know better." I did not learn until later what "better" meant, but the horses through fear first and habit second had long since learned where they could go and where they could not, and what they could do and what they should not do about stepping over that rope.

Well, children are not horses, or even like horses, and we cannot teach them by fear because that has a bad effect upon them, but teach them we can and teach them we must.

May I give you half a dozen homely and homey suggestions which to me seem simple, in relation to teaching children? Before I give them to you, may I say that teaching is an attitude. One does not learn by the words spoken, but rather by the attitude and spirit in what they are spoken. One does not always learn by action, but by the happiness with which the action is performed. And the lesson must be repeated over and over again all the time the child is growing up. Surely the Lord knew what he was doing when he said, in effect, "I am going to give you these children for twenty years or so, before they mature, and in that twenty years repeat with them what they must know well." Twenty years is a long time to a child. You have plenty of time to give them the habit of not stepping over the rope without having them fear it.

First, let us revive that happy custom of taking our meals together. Let us abolish the snack bars in our kitchens and establish a table around which all may sit, and let Father have breakfast with his children as well as supper and let them sit there for a few moments after each meal and have conversation about things about which Father and Mother would like to talk. That custom is going out of our existence rapidly. It is a powerful thing; it will work wonders on children.

Second, when Father comes home at night, I suggest to him that he really resist this temptation and put the paper in a hidden place until the children have gone to bed. The newspaper has no place in the home where children are until the father has spent the evening with them. And it is like reading for fifteen minutes a day—if you spend fifteen minutes or twenty minutes with each child according to his years in doing things which are interesting to him and being a companion to him, you have come nearer to fulfilling your obligations as a father. If you leave it up to the mother, and get behind the newspaper, I think you have committed a sin, because the child is neglected, and you have not done your duty. So be firm; put the newspaper under the mat until after the children have gone to bed.

Third, be sure to spend time with each child, according to that child's age and interests. With a three-year-old girl, if you have to, get down and play paper dolls. With a seventeen-year-old son, who wants to go to the Brigham Young-University of Utah game, that is where you should be (unless you have to be in this priesthood meeting).

The point is, by the time the child is twenty, he should be so companionable with his father that he can talk to him about anything he wants to. The way to do it is to be companionable at every age of his life, from the beginning. That is why it is important to learn how to handle a baby, fathers, and do all the things that a baby requires.

Fourth, it is a poor parent who is not up or awake when the children come home from late parties or late dates. Then is the time to invite them to talk over what happened; to enjoy the things which were good and to be counseled on avoiding the things which were sorrowful; to counsel wisely about the things which they might have done which were wrong. This practice, kept up all the days of his childhood, will be a great deterrent for a child who is anxious to stay out longer than he should. My mother sat up for me, and I did not have the nerve ever to keep her waiting too long. I knew she was there. It helped me. It will help all the children.

Fifth, no parent in this Church is doing his duty unless he makes the Sabbath what it should be. It should be a happy day together, with the whole family participating. The first thing in the morning, Father and Johnny go to priesthood meeting, and Father should take Johnny there, not Johnny take Father. They should discuss things on the way there and coming home, too. Each one should feel that the other is equal to him, and the father should take particular care that Johnny understands his priesthood. The Aaronic Priesthood is vital. This is successful not so much because of what is said but because of the unsaid emotions and feelings engendered.

And then, parents encourage the children, and themselves as much as they can, to go to Sunday School and to the auxiliaries. But above all things, the whole family, if it is going to do what it ought to do, must go to Sacrament meeting. Father and Mother should lead the way, the children following close after and staying there until it is dismissed. If one child is too small, one can go out with him, walk him up and down until he gets the kinks out of his legs, or if a small child is crying, one may have to take it home; but the family understands that at the proper hour, all are in Sacrament meeting together.

Now those suggestions followed carefully with assiduousness will bring others. I have not talked about many things that should happen in the home, but they will happen: prayer, love, all of the things which go with it.

May I conclude by reminding you of the first thing that I said, things "seen and heard." How necessary it is for a parent to bear that witness! I have an aged great-grandmother, long since dead, who in her ninety-seventh year was approached by one who had lost faith, and thinking perhaps that the grandmother, too, had lost some, said to her, "You knew the Prophet. What did you think of him?" This aged woman had endured the vicissitudes of the seventies' trek from Kirtland to Missouri, had suffered through Haun's Mill with her infant child in her arms, had counted the long miles across the plains, and then had lived through years of poverty in Utah. She smiled as she looked at this person, and I think disappointed the person, too, because this is what she said: "We all knew that he was a Prophet."

So we all do know that he was a Prophet, but do our children know it? Do our children know that we know it? That, I think, is our greatest obligation as we face life with these little ones who are given to us to rear to adulthood.

My testimony is like my great-grandmother's: I know that Joseph Smith was a Prophet and that he saw and heard glorious things. I know that he held the keys, and I know that he passed them on to his successors, even down to President McKay and those who assist him. That is my witness to you, in the name of Christ. Amen.

BISHOP JOSEPH L. WIRTHLIN

Presiding Bishop of the Church

MY BELOVED brethren and sisters, I want to bear you my testimony that I know Joseph Smith was a prophet selected by God for the purpose of establishing the Church and preparing the people for the second coming of Jesus the Christ.

The following revelation was given to the Prophet Joseph Smith, wherein the Lord said:

The weak things of the world shall come forth and break down the mighty and strong ones. . . . (D & C 1:19.)

The Church was established with a membership of six people, and in that day it was thought by many it would be only a short time until the Church would be destroyed, particularly after the life of the Prophet had been taken. Today, the membership of the Church is approximately 1,375,000, indicating to the world that it may have been weak in the beginning of its establishment, but out of it the Church has become strong and powerful because of the people who accepted the gospel.

In connection therewith, the Book of Mormon and the Pearl of Great Price were given to the world through revelation, and in every case, there still may be found in the thoughts of many the weakness of things, but these weak things are becoming strong and going forth and breaking down the mighty and strong ones in the world.

The Prophet Joseph never had the opportunity of attending great schools or universities. He was one of the common ones that the Lord selected because the Lord knew it would be possible to give him the assignments of establishing the Church and teaching the world the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ as it was about to be given to mankind.

I think of the great missions of the Church in the world, some forty-five of them, where the gospel is being preached to every nation, kindred, tongue, and people. It is a great source of encouragement to everyone of us to know that the gospel is being taught to the people of the world, even in far-off Korea where ten years ago we very seldom thought or dreamed that the gospel would be taken to the Korean people. Yet, the people in Korea are accepting it, and the Church is being established. Some of the weak things are there, but they are being accepted, and the mighty and great things among that people are being broken down to the end that the people will come to an understanding of the gospel.

The same is true with reference to the Japanese and Chinese people. We know that Brother Henry D. Moyle, who has spent much time these past few months among the great people in South America, has done a great work among the missionaries and has taught the people the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. The strong and mighty things in South America are being broken down, and the people there are anxious to accept the restored gospel and enjoy all the blessings therein.

In the revelations from the Lord to the Prophet, indicating to him the work that should be done for the dead, we are reminded of a statement of Paul, an apostle of the Savior, when he said,

Else what shall they do which are baptized for the dead, if the dead rise not at all? why are they then baptized for the dead? (1 Cor. 15:29.)

This has been a question in the minds of many individuals—something they cannot understand. Paul understood it; that is the reason he asked that question. So, again,

The weak things of the world shall come forth and break down the mighty and strong ones. (Ibid., 1:19.)

One of the mighty and strong ones in the world has been the idea that the dead will not have an opportunity of accepting the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, or all of the opportunities that, no doubt, existed in the days of Christ himself, when he visited those people who had died and were held in prison because they were wicked during the days of Noah. So, there was established, through the Prophet Joseph, the temples. At the present time we have ten of them. The Prophet Joseph, you will recall, established a temple in Nauvoo wherein work was done for the dead.

The Statement of Ordinances Performed in all the Temples, as compiled in the Salt Lake Temple, indicates that from the time when temple ordinances for the living and the dead were revealed to the Prophet Joseph Smith until December 31, 1955, 18,607,876 baptisms have been done for the dead; 15,848,297 endowments for the dead; 4,138,706 sealings of dead couples; 8,198,061 sealings of dead children to parents; or a total of 46,792,940 ordinances done for the dead. This indicates to us again the truth of the words of the Lord when he said,

The weak things of the world shall come forth and break down the mighty and strong ones. (Ibid., 1:9.)

We must come to the understanding that through the Prophet Joseph, the temples have been established wherein the dead may have all of the blessings and opportunities which may be enjoyed by those who are now living. You and I have the same opportunities of going into the temples.

Also, according to the same Statement of Ordinances Performed in all the Temples, as previously mentioned, 56,649 baptisms have been done for the living; 478,711 endowments for the living; 231,139 sealings of living couples; 208,209 sealings of living children to parents, or a total of 974,708 ordinances.

Through the work for the dead and the opportunities for the living, my brethren and sisters, we all come to the knowledge that this is the Church of the Lord Jesus Christ which has been given to us through the Prophet Joseph and all of the prophets who have followed him.

Let us consider what we are teaching our sons and our daughters in connection with their schoolwork. We now have twenty-seven institutes and 387 seminaries. In connection with these, we have our Church schools—Ricks College, Brigham Young University, LDS Business College, McCune School of Music, and for the people down in the Islands, we have the Church school in Hawaii, the Church school in Samoa, the Church school in New Zealand, and then the Church schools in Colonia Juarez, Mexico. These give the young people the opportunity to receive an education in connection with the Church and to become acquainted with the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Brigham Young University came through the direction of Brigham Young, an apostle and a prophet. This past year, 1955-56, there were 9,502 young people attending this great Church school. Their testimonies have been strengthened. They know Joseph Smith was a Prophet of God, that God lives, and that there stands at the head of this great organization a prophet of this day, an apostle of the Lord Jesus Christ, and other apostles who are interested in carrying on this great work in this great institution.

The Prophet received many revelations for the blessing and help of the people, particularly with reference to the Word of Wisdom. The great men of the time knew little of the detrimental affect of the use of tobacco, liquor, and foods that are harmful, but the Prophet Joseph knew and taught it to the people. The great scientists of today advocate that to partake of tobacco and liquor is not good. All of these teachings came through the Prophet Joseph Smith first. This brings us again to the thought that, "The weak things of the world shall come forth and break down the mighty and strong ones."

The Prophet Joseph declared: "I saw the Father and the Son, and I knew that God knew it, and I could not deny it, neither dared I do it: at least I knew that by so doing I would offend God and come under condemnation." (See P of G P, JS 2:25.) He was willing to give up his life for the truth when he said to the world, "I saw the Father and the Son." They knew it, and he dared not say anything else other than that because to do so would bring him under condemnation. The Prophet

Joseph has given to us the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ and has so told us that while in the eyes of the world to-day there may be weak things in the gospel, yet as you and I and the world become acquainted with them, live them, and understand them, the time will come whereby these "weak things" will come forth and break down the mighty and strong ones.

As a people living in Zion where we are close to the prophet, close to the apostles, and all of those who guide and direct our affairs, we should realize that we must live the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ in its fulness that we may be among those who might be called "the weak things of the world," and through the kind of lives we live make it possible to break down that which is contrary to the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ.

We are all grateful that from the Prophet Joseph came also the establishment of the Book of Mormon, and with it the priesthood—the Melchizedek Priesthood and the Aaronic Priesthood—whereby every man has the opportunity to serve God as his servant and the opportunity to show to the world by the way we live here that we have the priesthood, we have all of the powers whereby there will come blessings to all the people in every land.

I have a prayer in my heart that sometime the day will come when our missionaries will have the opportunity to go into Russia and preach the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ to that people and say to them, "The weak things of the world shall come forth and break break down the mighty and strong ones." We well know that in Russia there are mighty and strong things, but before that people can enjoy the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, some of that mightiness and some of those strong things must be broken down, that the Russian people can accept the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ and enjoy all of the blessings. There are literally millions there who desire to know more about the Christ and be taught something about him. That opportunity will come to this people. The Church of the Lord Jesus Christ has the priesthood, the authority, and the direction from on high to preach the gospel to every nation, kindred, tongue, and people.

May God bless every one of us that we will so live that the world will say as an individual said who had the privilege of going through the beautiful temple at Los Angeles: "This temple is beautiful; it is marvelous; there is something about it that is different." And then she said, "The Mormon people have something." This individual acknowledges that the Mormon people have something different, and we do have something different. We have the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ; we have a prophet; we have the same organization that existed in the days of Peter, James, and John. These are our blessings; these are our opportunities; and I humbly pray that the Lord will bless us, that the world will accept us and will say that we do indeed have the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. I pray this will be the blessing and the inspiration of each and every one of us, in his holy name. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

We have just listened to Bishop Joseph L. Wirthlin of the Presiding Bishopric. We shall now hear from Elder Mark E. Petersen of the Council of the Twelve. He will be followed by Elder Eldred G. Smith.

ELDER MARK E. PETERSEN

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

ALTHOUGH I am American by birth and Scotch by marriage, I am Scandinavian by ancestry, and because of that I have a very keen appreciation of the beautiful music we have heard today from this Scandinavian choir. I would like to thank them as one of their countrymen, once removed, for the beautiful music they have rendered. I could not say thank you to them in Danish nor in Swedish nor Norwegian, but I can express some appreciation in four foreign words I have learned, two in Spanish, "mucho gusto," and two in German, "genz gut."

I was recently touring one of the large paper mills in the Pacific Northwest, and as I stood by one of the tremendous paper making machines, watching those whirling wheels and the fast-moving belts and feeling the tremendous heat that comes from those baking ovens, I marveled at the remarkable safety record of that great mill. Then I was told, and my eyes afterwards confirmed, that a wonderful safety program was carried on in that big mill, so that very, very few personal injuries were sustained there.

As I stood by that giant paper making machine, my eyes went up to the wall and there in a sign about six feet square, I read four words. The first word was in great block letters and occupied about half the sign, and underneath appeared the other three words. The sign said, "Think, then act safely." I learned that that was the theme of the safety program in that tremendous mill and that it represented the whole idea behind the fact that few men get hurt there.

But as I stood there watching that machine go, and then glanced up at that sign, "Think, then act safely," my mind immediately went to a problem which Brother Spencer W. Kimball and I face together, and which was coming to a focal point at that very time, because school was letting out. It was the latter part of May, and I knew that it would not be long until hundreds and hundreds of young people would be coming to Salt Lake City and Ogden and other centers, looking for jobs, looking for places to stay, and some of them getting into trouble. I thought first of all of the parents of those young people and wondered exactly what they were thinking about. Very, very few of the parents of those hundreds of young people ever thought of coming to Salt Lake City or to Ogden or to Los Angeles or to San Francisco with their boys and girls, some of whom were fifteen and sixteen and seventeen years of age, to help them find a good family with whom to live, or stay with them until they found a decent job in decent circumstances with decent people.

And I began to wonder what some of those parents would think if they knew what the police department knows about some young people who come from smaller communities to these larger centers, unaccompanied, unchaperoned, unprotected, entirely on their own.

Yes, my mind did go back to that big sign in the paper mill, and I wished that every parent of every boy and girl who expects to leave home and go to a larger city would only "Think, then act safely."

I thought, too, of these young people. Many of them had no idea what they were getting into when they left home and came to the larger centers. They had absolutely no idea. Some of them came with only three or four dollars in their pockets and thought of course the minute they landed here they would get a job and the three or four dollars—in one case a girl had six—the three or four to six dollars would last until they got their first pay-day, and then they would be on easy street, and everything would go fine.

They would come to the larger city and look for a cheap place in which to live. Some of them were really cheap, on Twenty-fifth Street or on West Second South, or down on Canal Street in another city. They could not afford much, so they would get into a rooming house of some kind and think they were on their own and then discover that they had walked into tragedy. Some of the young people, unfortunately, could not wait to leave their homes. They wanted to break away and get on their own, and they did not realize what it meant to cut loose from home, to get away from the protection of Mother and Dad, and get into a strange city. Although there are many good people in all these cities, there are others who are cold and grasping and predatory, seeking innocent boys and girls to get them in their trap.

My mind went to the bishops, to the stake presidents. I still wondered why we have not responded more readily to the appeal of the First Presidency of the Church that you bishops, you counselors in bishoprics, you members of stake presidencies, and you parents co-operate with the program instituted by the Presidency and headed by Elder Kimball in an effort to protect your young people as they come to these larger cities. Will you not co-operate, will you not help? If you parents cannot control your children and they must go away, if instead of their being obedient to you, you are more obedient to them, at least will you not go to your bishop and talk about it, and then let the machinery of the Church help you? Will you "think, and then act safely"?

One of the big fears I have in connection with these young people coming to the larger centers is that so many of them actually want to break away from home, cut the apron strings, so to speak. They feel that they are self-sufficient; they know it all; Mother and Dad are old-fashioned. This is a modern world, and they want to be modern; they want to live in a modern way.

I ask the youth of the Church, do you really want that? Do you really want to cut loose from the protection of home? Think of all that home means. Think of all the word mother means. Think of the strong protecting power of Dad. Think of all that home stands for. And then think of the opposite. Think of the powers that are destructive of the home. And think of the powers that work contrary to the advice of Mother and Dad and ask if that is what you want.

O youth of the Church, "think, then act safely."

One of the big difficulties about the young people who come on their own and have cut loose, escaped the apron strings, is that they then feel so free and in such a new life, they want also to cut loose from the Church. They do not go to the meetings any more. They go to other places and meet other people, and instead of Church friends, clean, fine Latter-day Saint friends, they pick up friends of the other side, of the lower element.

Saturday, October 6

Second Day

A question was asked in a full page newspaper advertisement to which I have referred many times, and this question was: "How would you like to live in a town where there were no churches?"

Young people, will you think of the kind of folk there are in the non-church-going crowd? Think about them for a moment. Think of those who oppose the Church and refuse to go to church. Think of the kind of people they are and the kind of wives and husbands they have and the kind of homes they develop, and think also of the kind of children, if any, they have. Is that the kind of life you want? Is that to be desired above the beautiful cleanliness of fine Latter-day Saint homes? Is that to be desired over the marvelous influence of the faithful youth of the Church?

What kind of crowd are you going with? What kind of person will you marry? You will marry from the crowd you go with; and if you choose the non-churchgoing crowd, remember that is what you will get, and all it includes. Think, consider it carefully, and then act safely.

And if you go with that other crowd, it is not long until you get the invitation to take a smoke. Before you take that cigaret, will you weigh the consequences, and ask yourself if it is the smoking crowd you want to go with, if it is the smoking crowd you want to marry from? And will you remember that the cigaret is the first step to breaking down the standards and the barriers to sin. Do you want to let down the bulwark, do you want to break down the dam and let the flood in? Weigh all these things before you take the smoke. "Think, then act safely."

And inevitably there will come the invitation to take a drink. Before you take the drink, think what alcohol does to you. I am not just talking about the possibility of alcoholism. I am talking about the manner in which alcohol will rob you of your self-control, destroy your ability to think wisely, and put you in the hands of unscrupulous men or women who will rob you of that which is more precious than life itself. Do you want that? Then before you take the drink, really think it over, and then act safely.

If you travel with that kind of crowd, there is going to be the invitation to neck and pet. Do you want that? What will be your response? Will you realize, oh, youth of the Church, that anyone who attempts to pet with you attempts to make an indecent approach? Petting is indecent and sinful, and the person who attempts to pet with you is himself both indecent and sinful and is likewise lustful. The invitation to pet, remember, so often ends up in the invitation to something worse. The young people themselves call it, "going all the way." Is that what you want?

Will you not remember that in the category of crime, God says sex sin is next to murder? Do you want it? It will bring broken hearts and remorse and misery all the days of your life and only the most sincere repentance can ever wipe it out. But oh, how you will suffer as many have suffered the remorse that accompanies such a terrible sin as that.

Oh, youth of the Church, oh, parents, oh, bishops, who have charge of the youth, and you MIA workers and Sunday School and Primary, you Relief Society mothers, will you all use the intelligence God has given you, will you think, act safely, and live your religion?

That is my humble prayer for us all, in Jesus' name. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Elder Mark E. Petersen of the Council of the Twelve has just spoken to us. Elder Eldred G. Smith, Patriarch of the Church, will be our concluding speaker.

ELDER ELDRED G. SMITH

Patriarch to the Church

I come before you, brothers and sisters, with a sincere desire that I may have an interest in your faith and prayers while I take this time, for I am sure that I need it.

I wish to add my testimony of the divinity of the gospel to those others of this conference, for I know of a surety of the divinity of the gospel of Jesus Christ and that it has been restored in this, the latter day.

I enjoyed Brother [Adam S.] Bennion's discussion of the converts in Europe, which brought to my mind many similar experiences I have through contacts with converts to the Church. One of the prominent things that he told us was the thrill and the joy of these young people, missionaries and servicemen, who are growing in their testimony, that the testimony of the gospel is one of their choicest possessions and one of the things that brings so much joy to them. Those who come to my office, so often converts to the Church, have repeated to me the same stories that Brother Bennion repeated—that life has just begun for them.

A husband and wife said that they felt that they had wasted fifteen years of their married life, for now, since they had joined the Church, they were just beginning to live again.

It is not so much the words that they express, but it is the thrill and the joy that lights up their faces when they say it, in all sincerity—a joy that can come from no other source.

So, as this knowledge of the gospel is one of the most important things for us to gain, I have heard many times members of the Church, as well as investigators or non-members, ask the question, "How does one know? How does one get a testimony of the gospel?" The Lord has told us, and it has been repeated here before in this conference:

There is a law, irrevocably decreed in heaven before the foundations of this world, upon which all blessings are predicated—

And when we obtain any blessings from God, it is by obedience to that law upon which it is predicated. (D & C 130:20.)

If we want the blessing of a testimony of the gospel of Jesus Christ and want to know, even if we are just investigators and want to know which is the gospel of Jesus Christ, then we have to find out what that law is and fulfill it.

Moroni gives us the key to that law. As he was preparing the records which were given into his keeping, and he was finishing his part of them before putting them away for some future date—he knew not when it would come—he wrote in his record:

Behold, I would exhort you that when ye shall read these things, if it be wisdom in God ye should read them, that ye would remember how merciful the Lord hath been unto the children of men, from the creation of Adam even down unto the time that ye shall receive these things, and ponder it in your hearts.

And when ye shall receive these things, I would exhort you that ye would ask God, the Eternal Father, in the name of Christ, if these things are not true; and if ye shall ask with a sincere heart, with real intent, having faith in Christ, he will manifest the truth of it unto you, by the power of the Holy Ghost.

And by the power of the Holy Ghost ye may know the truth of all things.

And whatsoever thing is good is just and true; wherefore, nothing that is good denieth the Christ, but acknowledgeth that he is.

And ye may know that he is, by the power of the Holy Ghost; wherefore I would exhort you that ye deny not the power of God; for he worketh by power, according to the faith of the children of men, the same today and tomorrow, and forever. (Moroni 10:3-7.)

Now he has given us two thoughts, primarily, in this record: first, "ask God, the Eternal Father, in the name of Christ." And second he said, "... he will manifest the truth of it unto you, by the power of the Holy Ghost. And by the power of the Holy Ghost ye may know the truth of all things." So if we are going to find the law by which we may gain a knowledge, we have the key to it here; first, we must do something ourselves, we must ask for it, and,

Saturday, October 6

Second Day

second, then we will be given that through the Spirit.

In section eighty-nine there is another key. The promise that is given there is:

"And all saints who remember to keep and do these sayings, walking in obedience to the commandments," and then the Lord gives us a promise of health and adds, "... shall find wisdom and great treasures of knowledge, even hidden treasures." (D & C 89:18-19.)

If we will learn the law of obedience and take that first step ourselves, the Lord will prompt us and give us that knowledge through the Spirit.

The Lord has said: "Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you." (Matt. 7:7.) If we do not seek, if we do not ask, if we do not knock, then we cannot receive that knowledge.

In cottage meetings and other gatherings where the gospel is proclaimed, all do not receive it the same; yet the same thing is taught to all. There are some in the group who will apply that law by which that blessing may be received, that of putting themselves in tune with the Spirit, just like a large radio transmitting station. The Lord's spirit is with us all. The gospel of Jesus Christ is being proclaimed, but if we do not put ourselves in tune, we do not get the reception. If we do not get the reception, it is not the fault of the broadcasting station, it is the fault of the receiver, and we are the receiver; we must put our spirit in tune.

The soul is made up of body and spirit, and as we get in tune with the Spirit, then we receive that testimony by the Spirit.

We were reminded last Thursday in our meeting in the temple prior to this conference that the greatest testimony is that which comes and testifies of the Spirit. We cannot always trust what we see and what we hear, but we can always trust that prompting of the Spirit that comes to us, which declares to us that which is truth; and by that power we get our strength and testimony of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

The Prophet Joseph Smith had to take that first step and ask for knowledge.

He read in James that if ye lack wisdom and shall ask, ye shall receive. He took the words of James to heart and went into the grove of trees and knelt and asked for that knowledge which he received. There the Prophet saw and heard, and surely it was testified to him of the Spirit that this was true and that these things which he experienced were true, by which he received a true knowledge of God the Father and of the Son, so that he knew that Jesus Christ lived, and that the Father lived, and knew that he had truly seen a vision, as we have heard testified here today.

So I say, let us put ourselves in tune. If there are members in the Church who are uncertain, who are lacking in that strength of a testimony, ask, and ye shall receive, knock, and it shall be opened unto you. If you will put yourself in tune that your spirit shall be in tune with the Spirit of the Holy Ghost, then you shall receive a knowledge of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

May the blessings of the Lord be with us all, that we may all enjoy that prompting of the Spirit and be able to assist others as a result of that knowledge given to us, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Elder Eldred G. Smith, Patriarch to the Church, has just concluded speaking.

After the singing and the benediction, this Conference will be adjourned until 7:00 o'clock this evening, when the General Priesthood Meeting of the Church will be held in the Salt Lake Tabernacle. Only those holding the Priesthood are invited to be present. Persons not holding the priesthood will kindly refrain from attempting to enter the building. This Priesthood Session will not be broadcast, excepting in the overflow meetings that have already been appointed, in the Assembly Hall and Barratt Hall, and by direct wire over a public address system to members of the Priesthood assembled, in addition to the Barratt Hall and Assembly Hall, in 81 other Church buildings in Utah, Idaho, Colorado, New York, Washington, Oregon, Arizona, Wyoming, Nevada, Illinois, New Mexico, Canada, and California.

The regular session at ten o'clock Sunday Morning will be televised over KSL-TV, Channel 5, and broadcast over Radio Station KSL, and by arrangement through KSL over 11 radio stations in Utah, Idaho, Colorado, and Nevada, and by special arrangement over 13 television stations in Utah, Colorado, Nevada, California, Oregon, Washington, and Arizona.

The Church-of-the-Air Broadcast will be over the Columbia Broadcasting System tomorrow morning from 7:30 to 8 o'clock. Elder Alma Sonne, Assistant to the Twelve, will be the speaker.

The Tabernacle Choir broadcast will be from 9:30 to 10 a.m. tomorrow. Those desiring to attend the Tabernacle Choir Broadcast must be in their seats at 9:15 a.m. It is requested that the audience during the broadcast refrain from making any disturbance, or whispering. Large crowds will undoubtedly be waiting outside the closed doors and when opened there is usually a rush by those outside to get good seats. We plead with those thus standing to be courteous and considerate one of another. Avoid pushing, crowding, if you please. Courtesy is a great virtue. Let us show it one to another and especially to our visitors who are within the city's gates.

The singing for this session has been furnished by the Combined Scandinavian Choirs under the direction of Brother R. Hulbert Keddington, with Elder Roy M. Darley at the organ.

I feel with Elder Mark Petersen—I wish I could thank them in the native language of their parents. I can say, "Tak for sist." But best of all, thank you for this excellent service and inspiring singing and God bless you.

The Choir will now sing "Almighty God of Our Fathers," and after the benediction by Elder Alan B. Blood, president of the Davis Stake, this Conference will be adjourned until tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock for the general public.

The Combined Scandinavian Choirs sang the number, "Almighty God of Our Fathers," after which the closing prayer was offered by Elder Alan B. Blood, president of the Davis Stake.

Conference adjourned until 7:00 p.m.

GENERAL PRIESTHOOD MEETING

The General Priesthood meeting of the Church was held in the Tabernacle Saturday evening, October 6 at 7:00 p.m.

President David O. McKay presided and conducted the meeting.

The Tabernacle Choir Men's Chorus, with J. Spencer Cornwall conducting and Alexander Schreiner at the organ, furnished the choral music for this meeting.

President David O. McKay:

This is the fifth session of the 127th Semi-Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

You will be interested to know that these services are being broadcast in the Assembly Hall, in Barratt Hall, over a public address system, and in addition are being broadcast by direct wire over a public address system to members of the Priesthood assembled in 81 other Church buildings in Utah, Idaho, Colorado, New York, Washington, Oregon, Arizona, Wyoming, Nevada, Illinois, New Mexico, Canada, and California.

The singing during this session will be furnished by the Tabernacle Choir Men's Chorus, with Elder J. Spencer Cornwall as director, and Elder Alexander Schreiner at the organ. We shall begin these services by the Tabernacle Choir Men's Chorus singing, "I Know That My Redeemer Lives."

After the singing, Elder Leonard E. Graham, president of the East Rigby Stake, will offer the invocation.

The Tabernacle Choir Men's Chorus sang the hymn, "I Know That My Redeemer Lives."

Elder Leonard E. Graham, president of the East Rigby Stake, offered the opening prayer.

Saturday, October 6

Second Day

President David O. McKay:

Elder Leonard E. Graham, president of the East Rigby Stake, offered the invocation.

We have received word that hundreds are on the grounds who cannot get in any of the buildings here, and they have requested that the speakers be turned on out there so that they may hear. We think that if you do not turn them on to blare the proceedings over the city, that you may let the members out on the grounds gather around the loud speakers and participate in the meeting.

The Tabernacle Choir Men's Chorus will now sing, "My Blessing Fall On This Fair World," directed by Elder J. Spencer Cornwall.

Singing by the Chorus, "My Blessing Fall on This Fair World."

President David O. McKay:

Our first speaker this evening will be Elder Mark E. Petersen of the Council of the Twelve. By request and appointment he will follow up instructions given six months ago and continue the plan which was then presented for the help and guidance, particularly of the young people of the Church.

ELDER MARK E. PETERSENOf the Council of the Twelve Apostles*

BRETHREN, TWO OR three weeks ago the Deseret News ran an editorial, the caption of which asked the question, "Too much Word of Wisdom?" It was a great surprise to me to see some of the letters that came in response to that little editorial. Obviously the editorial defended the position that we could not say too much about the Word of Wisdom. It is all important. We cannot be too clean in the work of the Lord. But it was amazing that some apparently good Latter-day Saints, writing in would insist that we did say too much about the Word of Wisdom, that it did not really matter if people smoked a little—after all it was the popular thing these days and if young people are going to get along well with their crowds at school, they ought to do like the other fellow does. It was a great surprise to me that Latter-day Saints, raised in the Church, would take this position.

We have had other reactions, occasionally, which have rather frightened me. I was talking with one of our brethren right recently and he said, "My little five year old girl was watching television and was watching the Lucky Strike program. When the program was over, she turned to Dad, and said, 'Daddy, when I grow up I am going to smoke Lucky Strikes.' " It turned this man pale as he thought about the effect of the advertising upon his little girl.

The world today is dramatizing immodesty, dramatizing the use of cigarettes, dramatizing the use of liquor to a point where they are making it seem that it is the popular thing, that if you are going to get along well in the world, then you must indulge in these things.

How are we going to counteract this sort of thing, I ask you? The only way is to have a positive approach and move forward and maintain our standards and use every legitimate device we can to promote wholesome thinking in regard to the vicious things that are being held out to our young people today. It was with this thought in mind that the First Presidency endorsed a suggestion from the General Priesthood Committee of which Brother Lee is chairman, suggesting that we use the devices of advertising to teach the positive side of clean living as a means of counteracting the same type of approach used on the other side.

We were very grateful for the wonderful encouragement we received from the First Presidency on this matter. They have given it their whole hearted support and they are hoping that the entire Church will likewise support it. We have been getting wonderful support from many sources. We have had hundreds of letters come in from bishops and others telling us of their reaction to the use of the posters and the small cards which have been distributed now for several months, and which we first announced to you here six months ago.

One bishop writing under date of day before yesterday, October 4th, says this:

"Those posters for youth along with the smaller individual corresponding cards, are masterpieces. There is so much psychology leading youth away from correct principles that my heart leaps for joy that our Church is using powerful ways and means to strengthen youth. May the Lord continue to bless you with power."

Another bishop writing under date of September 30th, sent us a letter which is duplicated by scores and scores of others which have come during the last couple of months. He writes:

"We feel favorably impressed with the posters which we have received. They are dignified and attractive. I notice that our ward members both the youth and their parents, stop and take time to read the message given on them, and twice I have had young persons who were absent at the time the cards were given out, come to me before I had the opportunity to go to them and ask if I had a card for them. I hear the young folks talking among themselves about the message on the card and I feel that they appreciate the deep significance of the thought given. In behalf of my own sons and the young people of this ward, I wish to thank you brethren for this program. I feel convinced that it will prove to be very worthwhile and of great value as an aid to the parents and teachers of the youth of the Church."

In the middle of September we received the first mailing piece from one of the young people themselves. We have been hearing since, but this was the first. It was a little postcard I was so proud of it I sent it down to the Presidency's office because I wanted them to see it:

"To Whom It May Concern"—by the way, it was addressed merely to the L.D.S. Church Headquarters, and gives the address—"To Whom It May Concern: (and as I say this comes from a young lady)—What a refreshing experience to pick up a card, 'healthy, happy, lucky you.' Through such a positive approach youth will react positively because it shows you really do have faith in us. It is really good to see things like these posters rising away from 'thou shalt not.' Thanks for your faith in us. Sincerely"—and then the name is given.

Brethren, the program as we have it under way, is doing a great deal of good. The program becomes a device in your hands for making your work easier. It is a program likewise which may touch the hearts of young people who may not be touched in other ways as you would like to have them. We believe that this program will strengthen faith and give to our young people an appreciation of the worthwhileness of living a clean life.

Many, many of the wards and the stakes have given us 100% cooperation in this matter, such as is reflected in the letters of these bishops, and their efforts are surely appreciated as is suggested in this letter. But, unfortunately, brethren, six months after we have announced the program, we still have some wards in some stakes where nothing has been done. It makes us sad to think that young people are going astray who might be saved if only this device, among other things, were handed to them. But instead of being distributed the cards and the posters are safely tucked away in the bishop's office.

Bishops, you cannot afford to be without this program. Your young people need it. We hold you responsible for putting it into effect in your wards. We ask that your Aaronic Priesthood organization take care of the distribution of the little cards for the boys. The bishopric is in charge of the Aaronic Priesthood, therefore, it is their personal responsibility to see that each boy from twelve to twenty receives one of these little cards.

I think most of you are familiar with them.

We ask that the L.D.S. girls committee in each ward, made up of Y.W.M.I.A. workers, distribute the cards to the girls of the ward between the ages of twelve and twenty-five. Yet you, the bishopric, are advisers to these M.I.A. sisters, so it is in your hands again to see that there is a full distribution of the cards to the girls, also.

Saturday, October 6

Now, there is the large poster. You are familiar with that. It comes in two pieces. One is the principal picture bearing the main caption, with our theme which is "Be Honest With Yourself." And then we have the side piece, you remember, which gives a message. It is hoped that that poster and the side piece will be properly shown in a display case in a prominent place in your foyer or other part of your building, if you do not have a foyer, which will be prominent enough so that people will see it.

Many there are who stop and look at the picture and admire the artistry and catch the message, whether it be "Virtue is its own reward," or "Happy, Healthy, Lucky You," or "Be Honest With Yourself." And many having seen the picture and the caption have paused to read the entire message on the side. But we have found that there are some of these display cases which have been placed in such a manner that they are really hidden away. I have been in some buildings where I actually have had to search for them. In one dark corner, behind the door, I found one of these display cases, and because the people come in and out when the door is opened, the door effectively hid the display case. Nobody ever got to see the poster except the janitor who looked at it when he locked the door after everyone had gone out.

Do you suppose that Lucky Strike cigarettes would ever put an advertisement in a place like that? Ask yourself now. You are opposing them in trying to obtain the interest of that boy or girl, are you not? You are in competition with them in a very real sense. The boy or the girl is going to look at the attractive ads of the cigarette or will look at the attractive ad of the Church. Lucky Strike, Camel, Old Gold, will never hide their ads away where you cannot see them. They are on the most prominent billboards and they use the best radio programs you can find anywhere. Why should we hide our light under a bushel?

Brethren, bring out these posters where people can see them and read them. Frame them in an attractive way because the display is part of it, I would say almost half of it.

If you do not have these posters displayed in your foyers by this time, will you in the spirit of our campaign be honest with yourself, be honest with your young people, and adequately and beautifully display these posters where everyone who passes by will see them and enjoy them?

Stake presidents, you preside over the stake, and in that respect you preside over all of the wards and branches in your stake. Will each stake president take it upon himself as a special assignment to go to every ward in his stake within the next week and look for the posters and see how they are displayed, and if they are not will you, as a stake president use your influence to have the posters well displayed? It is your responsibility, stake presidents, to see that your stake functions. Every ward is a part of your stake. Without them you have no stake. This is part of the Church program. As presidents of stakes and as bishops of wards, when we receive our appointments, we agree to accept the responsibility accompanying those appointments and now part of that responsibility is the proper display of those posters and the proper distribution of these little cards.

I would like to ask every bishop, are you sure that all the young people of the proper age groups in your ward are receiving the individual cards with our specialized message. Only yesterday I talked with the father of a young man, sixteen or seventeen years of age, who lives in one of the most progressive stakes in the Church right here in Salt Lake City. I asked if his son had seen any of these cards yet, and he said, "No, he has not seen them." I know the son goes to Church regularly, but there has been no distribution of the cards. We are now in the midst of mailing out the third set of cards and this boy has not yet received the first.

That reminds me of some of the difficulty we had during the World War. The First Presidency authorized our distribution of a little pamphlet, a midget sized Church News, for all of the service men. It was disheartening indeed to find these packages, sometimes with dust on them, piled up one above the other on top of the bishop's desk.

Brethren, souls are too precious to allow our successful devices to be unused.

Do you have some kind of a check up system to insure full distribution of these cards? A list of names might well be kept by both M.I.A. and Aaronic Priesthood workers, including all of the young people of the ages mentioned, whether they come out to the meetings or not, whether they are on your roll books or not. If they are members of the Church they should receive the cards, no matter how inactive these boys or girls might be. If a list of these young people's names is maintained, the names could easily be checked off as a card is delivered to each boy or girl personally.

We hope that you will not merely distribute the cards to the young people who come to the meetings and believe that the job is done. If necessary, have your committee deliver the cards to the young people in their very homes. Those who do not attend our meetings may well be in the greatest need of the message we have for them.

We would like to suggest to you, Bishops, that you popularize this program in your wards. In your Sacrament meetings, you, yourselves, may well call attention of the Ward membership to the posters in the foyer, inviting all to pause and read. You may also do well to encourage parents to mention the cards and the posters in their family hour gatherings in the home. Boys and girls might well be invited by their parents to read and discuss the message on the cards as part of the program for the family hour in the home, or these cards may be read and discussed over the dinner table in the evening.

Young people should be encouraged to save the cards and place them upon the dresser or the walls or on the desks in their bedrooms. When these young people are assigned two and a half minute talks in Sunday School, or short talks in other meetings, the cards may well provide inspirational subject matter which will be of great assistance to them.

Since the cards are distributed only once in two months, is there any good reason why a boy or girl may not be invited to give a brief talk on the subject treated on the current card during some Sacrament meeting in the Ward? Brethren, popularize this program.

The cigarette companies popularize their cigarettes, and the immodest styles emanating from Hollywood and Paris are certainly popularized by the best advertising devices that we have in the United States. Then should we not popularize our program of modesty and cleanliness?

I would like to ask, what do you do with the big posters which have been on display when you replace them with new ones? Do you just discard them and throw them away, or do you save them for appropriate use at other times, possibly at young people's meetings or socials in the ward. It might be that some of your own young people would like to take these posters home as their own prized possessions. Some do. Or they might be awarded for some specially outstanding service, or as a mark of appreciation. Or these posters might be saved by the young people's committees of the ward and displayed to advantage in a fireside meeting on Sunday evening. Or several of them shown together would make a very impressive display at a Gold and Green Ball or a young people's banquet.

As you know, brethren, the theme of the program is "Be Honest With Yourself." We do ask you, as the leaders of the wards and the stakes, to be thoroughly honest with your own selves in the conduct of this program. And be honest with the young people of your wards and give them this added help in their fight against sin. Be honest with the parents of the youth of Zion and give to them this potent aid in teaching their children the value of clean living. Be honest with yourselves in getting the most out of the program which is designed to make your work easier, to make righteousness more attractive to the youth of your wards and stakes, and to help build faith and testimony in the hearts of all.

So, brethren, let us be honest with ourselves, let us enter into the spirit of this work, let us make this program succeed.

Saturday, October 6

Second Day

That we may do this is my earnest prayer, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

I will go where you want me to go,
I will say what you want me to say,
I will be what you want me to be.

The congregation will now join the Men's Chorus of our Tabernacle Choir in singing, "T'll Go Where You Want Me to Go." Elder J. Spencer Cornwall will lead us.

The Tabernacle Choir Men's Chorus and the congregation sang the hymn, "T'll Go Where You Want Me To Go."

President David O. McKay:

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr. of the First Presidency will now speak to us.

PRESIDENT J. REUBEN CLARK, JR.

Second Counselor in the First Presidency

MY BRETHREN: We seem to be living in an age of ideologies of various kinds. The things that used to influence men and nations and lead them into conflict,—ordinary ambition, thirst for territory, thirst for power, still remain, but there have come to supersede them certain ideologies which move nations, sometimes in rebellion against the past, sometimes to build up new concepts and new rules.

One of these ideologies which is perhaps politically not so important but which socially is most important, has been talked about tonight by Brother Mark E. Petersen,—the ideology which lowers moral standards that we have been taught in the past to regard as sacred. I endorse all that Brother Mark has said tonight and urge you bishops, presidents of stakes, and heads of households, to follow his advice.

I am going to talk tonight, or plan to, about another ideology, and I should like, in all humility on my part, to have the assistance of your faith and prayers. I shall try not to be too long; it may be I shall be a bit dull. I am going to read in part, perhaps a good part, what I say.

The ideology I have in mind is what I might call the ideology of equality. We have a sort of feeling about our own people in our own nation and the nations of the world, that everybody is equal to everybody else. You remember that the Declaration of Independence said, "We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness."

Those phrases seem to have caught the imagination of people of various kinds. I am not going to talk about them, somebody would accuse me of talking politics, but I have this kind of a feeling about them,—that they are not intended to suggest that force shall be brought to bear upon me, if I be a law-abiding man, tending my own business, to take away a part of my life to give to somebody else who thinks he would like some of it. I feel the same way about liberty. I feel the same way about pursuit of happiness. That is my right as a member of the body politic, and just because somebody else thinks he would like some of my happiness, I not imposing upon him or taking anything away from him, that I should be compelled to bestow upon him some of my happiness, is just beyond me.

Now, I want to talk tonight about what I will call spiritual relativity. I do not know anything about what scientific relativity means, but I can get some idea about what I am going to talk about. I am going to speak from the Book of Abraham, primarily, and my speaking will consist principally in reading, in the first part of what I say, with perhaps an interpolation of a remark here and there.

If you will read the third chapter of the Book of Abraham, you will find that the Lord is giving instructions to Abraham about various matters, including matters of astronomy, and then the Lord begins to apply those matters of astronomy of which he has been talking, where he has one planet and then another greater than that, and then that there shall be one greater than that, and he begins to apply that to individuals:

"19. And the Lord said unto me: These two facts do exist, that there are two spirits, one being more intelligent than the other; there shall be another more intelligent than they; I am the Lord thy God, I am more intelligent than they all."

Now, I am not going to try to tell you what that principle means, or where it leads; all I want to get out of that is that here are three intelligences, spirits, and that they are not equal, even the two are unequal. There is the one, there is the second more intelligent than the first, and there is the third more intelligent than the other two.

I like to think of that, as I have said, as spiritual relativity.

I am going on, now, and reading from the third chapter of Abraham. The Lord has been talking about the intelligences, and he says:

"21. I dwell in the midst of them all; I now, therefore, have come down unto thee to deliver unto thee the works which my hands have made, wherein my wisdom excelleth them all, for I rule in the heavens above, and in the earth beneath, in all wisdom and prudence, over all the intelligences thine eyes have seen from the beginning; I came down in the beginning in the midst of all the intelligences thou hast seen.

"22. Now the Lord had shown unto me, Abraham, the intelligences that were organized before the world was; and among all these there were many of the noble and great ones; . . ."

In that great body of intelligences there were those whom the Lord has described as "noble and great ones"; obviously others were not noble and great. Then going on, apparently in the same sentence, as it is punctuated:

"23. And God saw these souls that they were good, and he stood in the midst of them, and he said: These I will make my rulers; for he stood among those that were spirits, and he saw that they were good; and he said unto me: Abraham, thou art one of them; thou wast chosen before thou wast born."

In a minute or two I will refer to this same observation in connection with the Priesthood.

Then the scripture tells us that there were two who stood up. Each one wanted to create this new world that they had talked about. This is the Grand Council that we talk about, where all of us presumably were. Some were "noble and great ones," and some of us were not. We were not equal in that Grand Council, have no mistake about that. There it was decided:

"24. . . . We will go down, for there is space there, and we will take of these materials, and we will make an earth whereon these may dwell;

"25. And we will prove them herewith, to see if they will do all things whatsoever the Lord their God shall command them;

"26. And they who keep their first estate shall be added upon; . . ."

We understand that we kept our first estate, we who belong to this Church, that we have received the Gospel, and if we live as we should, we will be "added upon."

". . . and they who keep not their first estate shall not have glory in the same kingdom with those who keep their first estate; . . ."

The Lord has told us that we have three kingdoms, celestial, terrestrial, and telestial; he has told us who will be, in great broad classifications, in each of these kingdoms, possess each of these glories. He has told us that they differ. Paul told the Corinthians that they differed even as stars differed among themselves.

Now, then it goes on: (repeating)

". . . and they who keep not their first estate shall not have glory in the same kingdom with those who keep their first estate; . . ."

I am not undertaking to declare doctrine or Gospel, but as I read that, and as I understand it, it means that after we, so to speak, have been taken out, those who have kept their first estates, and we are not the only ones, there remains the great over-plus. They do not have the same heritage, the same kingdom, the same glory, that we shall have, and they have and can fall into the terrestrial, the telestial, and then the Doctrine and Covenants tells us there is a kingdom without any glory. (D & C 88:24.)

My point is that we were not equal at the beginning as intelligences; we were not equal in the Grand Council; we were not equal after the Grand Council. We had our agency over there, and the Lord has so told us that and that it was because of the exercise of that agency that a third of the hosts of heaven rebelled. They did not keep their first estate and apparently the punishment to be inflicted upon them for their rebellion was that they should not have bodies.

"... and they who keep their second estate shall have glory added upon their heads for ever and ever."

Then the Lord goes on and tells us about the two beings who came and offered to build this earth and implement its creation. Satan, we learn from other scriptures, declared that he would save everybody, apparently either take away their free agency or else cause that nothing that they did would be a crime. The other one said he would do the will of the Father. The Father said that he would take the one who said he would do his will. Then it says:

"28. And the second was angry, and kept not his first estate; and, at that day, many followed after him."

Then the next chapter (chapter 4) says:

"1. . . . Let us go down. And they went down at the beginning, and they, that is the Gods, organized and formed the heavens and the earth.

"2. And the earth, after it was formed, was empty and desolate, because they had not formed anything but the earth; and darkness reigned upon the face of the deep, and the Spirit of the Gods was brooding upon the face of the waters."

I like that word "brooding," breeding, bringing forth the things of the earth, or preparing it therefor, it seems to me to mean.

Now, this matter of body which, I take it, will come to those who keep their first estate; and those who do not keep their first estate, but who do not belong to the rebellious group, they all get bodies too. We have our bodies. We are not all born in the same circumstances, with the same advantages, and all the rest of it. But evidently the possession of a body was a great consideration, and I refer you, in that connection, to the incident of the Gadarene demons.

You will remember that when the Savior approached them, they said, "What have we to do with thee, Jesus, thou Son of God?" This was one case where the demons, themselves, bore testimony that Jesus was the Christ. "What have we to do with thee?"

And then they asked that the Savior, (when he cast them out of the man—they said they were "legion") that the Savior would permit them to go into the nearby herd of swine. I have always thought that there was a beautiful expression there. They asked him not to send them out into the "deep." You will recall that they went into the swine, and the swine ran down into the sea and were drowned. (Matt. 8:28-34; Mark 5:1-20; Luke 8:26-39.)

I have always thought that that indicated very, very clearly how valuable an earthly body is,—that they were willing in order to have possession, apparently even for the moment, of a body, to go into the body of a swine.

Now, I am trying to get out of all this only the one fundamental thought—we were not all equal at the beginning; we were not all equal at the Grand Council; we have never been all equal at any time since, and apparently we never shall be.

Now as to the Priesthood: Adam, the Prophet Joseph Smith tells us, received his Priesthood before the creation of the world, as I recall it. That is when he got his Priesthood. Seemingly it was not given to everybody. We do not know who else received it besides Adam, but probably some. The Prophet Joseph said, "I suppose that I was ordained to this very office in that Grand Council." And he said, "Every man who has a calling to minister to the inhabitants of the world was ordained to that very purpose in the Grand Council of heaven before this world was." (Joseph Fielding Smith, Teachings of the Prophet Joseph Smith, 2nd ed., 1940, pp. 157, 365.)

I like to think that perhaps we may have been there at that Grand Council and that we, the great body of this Church, with our divine commandment, our divine destiny, our divine responsibility, to carry the Gospel to the nations of the earth—I like to think that we were endowed somehow with a mission, perhaps with the Priesthood, to carry on the work which we have to do.

Now, the Prophet told us that from that time down, apparently until the time of Moses, the Priesthood descended in a regular line from father to son, through their succeeding generations. (D.C. Sec. 84.)

You will remember at the very beginning there was a contest in the Priesthood. At any rate, Cain offered a sacrifice that was not acceptable to the Lord. You know the result. (Gen. 4.)

From that time on down to the time of Moses, we note that the men that were named (they are named in the Doctrine and Covenants, Sections 84 and 107) carried on the Priesthood. It does not seem to have been a common endowment. Everybody was not offering sacrifice, but only those who were chosen by the Lord.

When you come down to Moses, remember Moses had the Melchizedek Priesthood, which he received from Jethro, his father-in-law, at the beginning of his work. (D.C. 84:6.) He seems to have been the only one among the Israelites who then held the Melchizedek Priesthood. He tried, you will recall we are told, to have Israel fit itself to partake of the Melchizedek Priesthood. Israel would not do it, and so there was established the Aaronic Priesthood, the Lesser Priesthood, and that was bestowed upon Aaron and his family. (D.C. 84:18 ff.)

Way along at the beginning, soon after they began the exodus, Aaron and Miriam, the sister, apparently basing their actions upon the fact that Moses had married an Egyptian, Ethiopian, nevertheless it appears in the account that they accused Moses, who held the Melchizedek Priesthood and Aaron held only the Aaronic Priesthood—accused Moses of usurping power that they had formerly possessed. You will recall that they were severely chastened, chastised. Miriam was stricken with leprosy. (Num. 12.)

I have always thought that there was in this an indication of the priesthood status of women, because of the punishment which apparently was inflicted upon Aaron, which differed from the punishment which was inflicted upon Miriam,—that here was an indication that women did not receive the Priesthood, and certainly so far as we know, women have not had the Priesthood. Miriam's punishment may have covered her seeming claim that she had a right to priesthood powers.

When that was settled, you will remember that a Levite, Korah, and Dathan and Abiram, apparently Reubenites, rebelled against Moses and said he was taking too much upon himself. They did not have the authority to officiate, they did not have the Priesthood that Moses had, and they did not have the authority that Aaron had. They rebelled. I will not take time to do more than tell you that finally a challenge was issued by Moses. They came out with their censers, and the earth opened and swallowed them up. (Num. 16.)

But they (Moses and Aaron) were not content with that demonstration. You will remember that then the question arose as to where the Priesthood authority was, and apparently Moses intended to settle it once for all, so he planned the experience of the rod that blossomed. Each of the tribes got a rod, and it was placed in a container in the tabernacle, as I recall it, and the rod that blossomed was to be the rod of the tribe that was chosen. Aaron's rod blossomed; the others did not.

I want to get from this the proposition that Israel, generally, did not have the Priesthood that Aaron had. Even the Levites, who had a secondary kind of officiating authority in taking care of the tabernacle, did not have the right to offer sacrifice, which belonged entirely to Aaron and his sons. (Num. 16.)

And you may recall that rather early in their Priesthood experience there were two sons of Aaron, Nadab and Abihu, who offered "strange fire" before the Lord, and they were smitten, killed. (Lev. 10.)

The Lord has always guarded his Priesthood with the utmost care, so that all during Israel's time, only a few held the Priesthood, and of that few only one family, seemingly, had the right to officiate. There evidently were individuals at various periods in Israel's history who held the Melchizedek Priesthood, but it was not generally possessed. Apparently the Priesthood has not ever gone to all humanity. The Lord has guarded it very, very carefully, and he guards it in the same way today.

So, my brothers, we need not be dismayed or suffer any inconvenience or embarrassment from the fact that the Priesthood is a sacred calling which is bestowed upon those whom the Lord designates, with such powers and such authority as the Lord may indicate by virtue of the office. We have deacons, teachers, priests, elders, seventies, high priests. You know how that comes about, how we get these various grades of Priesthood.

But two points:

First, there never was a time when all spirits were equal, so far as the Lord has revealed; so far as he has revealed, there never will be a time when all spirits are equal. He has provided different kingdoms and glories for the different kinds of individuals as they come to this earth, and I can imagine, having in mind the Gadarene demons, I can imagine that those who did not keep their first estate but who still may come to earth and get a body, are anxious to come and get a body no matter what the conditions are, if we are to judge by the anxiety of those demons who were cast out and who asked that they be permitted to enter the swine.

Next, the Priesthood has never been possessed by all individuals; the Lord has chosen those to whom he wishes to delegate his authority. He has carefully guarded the exercise of that authority. Some, our sisters, for instance, have never held the Priesthood.

Thank you, brethren, for your kindness.

I bear you my testimony that the Lord lives. I bear you my testimony that Jesus is the Christ, that he lived, was crucified, died, was resurrected.

I bear you my testimony that the Priesthood has been restored to us through the restoration that came through the Prophet. I bear you my testimony that all of the rights and the powers which Joseph had have descended from him till now and that they are now possessed by President David O. McKay.

May the Lord bless us and build up our testimonies, enable us to understand the principles of the Gospel and not get off on the theory of this ideology that everybody is alike, and all have equal rights,—our rights depend upon our course before we came here, and our course since we arrived.

God bless you, I pray in the name of his Son. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

President Stephen L. Richards of the First Presidency will now address us.

PRESIDENT STEPHEN L. RICHARDS

First Counselor in the First Presidency

MY DEAR BRETHREN, President McKay has accorded me the privilege of bringing to your attention some matters concerning our missionary work. We think it well that the whole Priesthood of the Church should have an understanding of the great missionary work which is carried forward, reaching such large proportions as we took the liberty of telling you this morning. I assure you it is no inconsiderable undertaking to keep a force of 5,000 men, may I call them such, in the army of the Lord scattered throughout this world, and to replenish their numbers and cause all to work in harmony and in accordance with the spirit of missionary work, which is the spirit of our Father.

So, there does arise the necessity of having some definitely defined procedures for the direction of this great undertaking, and we think it well if you knew perhaps a little more about these procedures than all may now know, although of course generally our work is well understood by this vast congregation of Priesthood.

I am going to mention several matters which relate largely to the calling of our brethren into the mission field.

Experience has taught us that it is not wise to call young men just married or just to be married. We have learned that it is better to let such a young man in justice to his wife begin his home at once so that he may have a period of time within which to establish a proper family relationship. So we would like young men and their bishops to understand that it is better that they be not recommended under the circumstances which I have mentioned.

We bring to your attention again the health of the missionaries. We feel a deep interest in conserving the health of our young people. We recognize that the mothers who let their sons go feel that they must have the best care, and we ask all to help safeguard conditions of health before missionaries go into the mission field. We are grateful to a great many doctors who render their services free of charge in physical examinations. Sometimes, however, the examinations, I suppose, seem necessarily hurried, and histories of disabling maladies sometimes do not come to light, and out of the ardor for missionary work, they are sometimes overlooked, and then sorrow comes in the mission field. Sickness requiring the missionary patient to be sent home, or hospitalized for long periods of time, of course, is embarrassing to the missionary and his family, to his companion in the mission field, and to the mission work generally. We again urge bishops to use the greatest of care in assuring us that those who go into the field, so far as is foreseeable, are in a state of health that will enable them to accomplish their work.

Our sisters help us in the mission field tremendously. We have reports from every mission that the influence of the sisters is one of the most refining and ennobling of all the good forces that we have in the mission field, and we know that there are many who would like to go into the field; but we have long since established a minimum age for sister missionaries. That age is 23, and that was not arrived at without considerable care, examination of statistical information regarding marriages, etc., and we find still that many endeavor to secure exceptions to that rule, which only make for charges of discrimination, and which do not facilitate our work. Please know that that is the age for sister missionaries, and help us in conforming to it.

Nearly all missionaries are asked by those who interview them if they will go where they are sent, and I think nearly always the missionaries reply yes, they will. I am sure that nearly all of them recognize that it is essential to respond to calls to go where they are needed. One can readily see that if preferences should be recognized generally, one mission might be—it is hard to say overstaffed—but there would be many more than in other missions, and some missions might be left with few missionaries. We have constant calls from mission presidents for the replacement of missionaries being released. Oftentimes it is necessary for missionaries to maintain branches, and therefore it is essential that our prospective missionaries go where they are called, and cheerfully respond to their calls, and that even though they may have some preferences, that they subdue those preferences for the good of the whole Cause, and the building up of our missionary work.

Six months ago, as I recall it, we called your attention to the necessity of making welcome into the wards and branches of the Church all of the new converts. We are hopeful that progress has been made. Many of those who come into the Church feel at a loss if they do not receive a welcome among the Saints with whom they gather. Our people themselves should be persuaded to extend the hand of welcome to every new convert in the Church, and wherever it is possible the bishop of a ward, or the president of a branch should provide activity for these new converts as readily as may be done.

I wish tonight to thank those who have so generously contributed to our general missionary fund. We have been more than gratified with the gifts which have been made to this fund which have enabled many poor people, young men without means in foreign lands, and young women too, to undertake missions for the Church. I note that so far as our record goes 174 missionaries have in the last few years been assisted from these contributed missionary funds. One hundred of those missions have been completed; 74 missionaries are still in the field. In nearly all instances they have written to the contributors expressing their appreciation for the opportunity afforded to them to go out and serve the Lord.

Now, another item: No young man, or young woman either, should be pressed into the missionary service. It is true that it is perfectly legitimate to point out the advantages of missionary service, its opportunities, but everyone who goes should be imbued with the remarkable opportunities that a mission affords, and he should also know that he goes to bear witness of the Living Christ to all men, and to the divinity and the vitality of this work of the latter days. It is unfortunate when some get into the mission field and say that they were so pressured into coming that they have no interest in it. There are very few in this category, but we do think that there should always be assurance that those who go into the field go with a full understanding of what their work is to be, and with willingness to perform that work.

I pay my tribute to the wonderful men and women of the Church who so gloriously respond to missionary calls. They have set an outstanding record. I think in the eyes of the world nothing commends us to the esteem of men more than our marvelous missionary system. Indeed, many are unable to comprehend how our youth will go out at the expense of their parents, and at their own expense, to disseminate the principles of the Gospel among men without any contribution whatever, and I pray the Lord to bless all the families that send these missionaries forth. May they have the satisfaction in their hearts of knowing that they are contributing tremendously to the advancement of this great work.

As we indicated this morning, baptisms are most encouraging, and they will continue to increase as you supply this great missionary movement with the young men and the young women that it needs to carry forth. Older men and older women are also welcome if they are in good health, but we have had many instances where their health would not stand the rigors of the missionary calling.

I will not take more time to dwell upon this important phase of our work, but I will solicit your cooperation—cooperation of bishops, and presidents of stakes, and of all the Priesthood—in seeing that our processes for the selection of missionaries and their placement in the field operates smoothly, without disappointment to missionaries or their families, and without regrets to anyone.

I pray the Lord's blessings upon you, my brethren of the Priesthood. I honor you in your respective callings, and I know that the holy power which you hold, and which is so potent and indispensable to the establishment of our Father's Kingdom, is genuine and divine. I thank God that we hold his divine power, that he has so generously endowed us with the right to represent him, and I thank him for all blessings in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

PRESIDENT DAVID O. MCKAY

THIS AFTERNOON at the height of a most inspirational meeting I saw two young men on my left in the gallery rise from their seats and walk out of the building. I hastily put on my long distance glasses to see more definitely who they were. They impressed me as being teachers, about the age of 15.

That little act emphasized one of the points to be mentioned at this Priesthood Meeting, and that is the attitude of our young men bearing the Aaronic Priesthood who are asked to administer the emblems of our Lord's death and life. No more sacred ordinance has been given to us by the Lord than the administration of the Sacrament. I shall not dwell long upon its significance, the principal one of which is a covenant that we make with the Lord. We give our word of honor to do certain things, which as the Brethren said today, are contributive to our spiritual growth and happiness if kept, but which weaken our characters if we violate them.

Say over in your mind briefly just what that covenant is. Those two men who are representing the audience appeal to the Lord in the name of the Redeemer, and ask him to bless and sanctify that bread or water to the souls of all those who partake of it. That is a sacred approach. "That they may do it in remembrance of the body (or blood) of thy Son, and witness unto thee, O God, the Eternal Father, that they are willing to take upon them the name of thy Son, and always remember him, and keep his commandments which he hath given them," then the result, "that they may always have his Spirit to be with them."

That is one of the prayers given to us word for word. Young men who are given the Priesthood, the importance of which we have heard tonight, are asked to give the congregation the opportunity to make that covenant, and the two priests who are to bless it, or the four who are to participate, should be instructed regarding the importance and sacredness of their calling. No whispering should be engaged in by those boys. All preparation should be carefully made before the hour of the sacrament meeting, and those young men should at least refrain from conversation, even if they do not contemplate the responsibility which is theirs.

I am not going to say much about the dress. We are not a people who look to formality, certainly we do not believe in phylacteries, in uniforms, on sacred occasions, but I do think that the Lord will be pleased with a bishopric if they will instruct the young men who are invited to administer the sacrament to dress properly. He will not be displeased if they come with a white shirt instead of a colored one, and we are not so poor that we cannot afford clean, white shirts for the boys who administer the sacrament. If they do not have them, at least they will come with clean hands, and especially with a pure heart.

I have seen deacons not all dressed alike, but they have a special tie or a special shirt as evidence that those young men have been instructed that "you have a special calling this morning. Come in your best." And when they are all in white I think it contributes to the sacredness of it. Anything that will make the young boys feel that they have been called upon to officiate in the Priesthood in one of the most sacred ordinances in the Church, and they too should remain quiet, even before the opening of the meeting.

That is just preliminary. I said I saw these two boys leave the building this afternoon, and it reminded me that in some of our wards, these young men who have been appointed to administer the sacrament, and who have officiated in the order of the Priesthood, start for the door and leave the worshiping assembly. I will not say it is sacrilege, but I will say that it is not in keeping with the order and sacredness of the service which they have rendered by virtue of the Priesthood.

Instruct them, bishops. When they accept that duty, they accept the responsibility of remaining throughout that entire meeting hour. They are part of it. A bishop would not think of leaving. His counselors would not. Neither should your representatives who administer the sacrament.

There should be more order in the administration of the sacrament. A keener sense of the promise, the covenant, we make will add much to the spirituality of the membership of the Church, and will entitle us to the guidance of the Holy Spirit. Indeed that is a principal end of our existence.

I like that parable Jesus gave when he said, "Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow; they toil not, neither do they spin:

"And yet I say unto you, That even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these." (Matthew 6:28-29.)

"Consider the lilies, how they grow," with their roots down in the ground seeking for sustenance, and all that sustenance and vitality going up through the stem for one purpose, until that flower blossoms in the sunshine in fulfillment of its life, receiving the glory of the sunshine, and the completion of pistil and stamens.

So we, with our tentacles in the earth, our hands, our brains, which God has given us physically, seek life and sustenance in subduing matter. Why? That we might realize the ideal, that our souls too may blossom in the sunshine of God's Holy Spirit, "that thy Spirit may be always with us."

Brethren, let us have the Lesser Priesthood remain and participate in that administration in sacredness, in reverence, and contribute to the order of the worshiping assembly.

There is one other principle to which I wish to call attention tonight, and that is the observance of the Sabbath Day. I was grieved, recently, and probably you were, to receive an invitation to attend the opening of a new multi-million dollar runway at the Hill Field Air Force Base. All our service boys will want to be there. Thousands of loyal citizens will want to be there, but why should it be on Sunday? We have our boys of the Air Force here tonight. They are loyal. Our boys are bringing honor to our Country. Their Captains, their officers, write to us and tell us how proud they are, and that goes for the boys particularly who are maintaining the ideals of the Church. Most of them are—God bless them.

Well, among those ideas is worshiping on the Sabbath Day, keeping it holy. I wish that they, in order to be loyal to their troops and associates, would not have to go up there on Sunday. I understand that possibly the State National Guard here in our own State may ask the members of the National Guard to go out and drill on Sunday. I hope not.

Sunday is worship day. It is holy. This is a Christian nation, and the Lord has promised that as long as we keep him in mind and worship him this Country will stand—this Government will stand. No other nation can take it or destroy it. But if we forget Him, God's promises are not binding.

Why should Sunday be observed as a day of rest? First, Sunday is essential to the true development and strength of body, and that is a principle which we should proclaim more generally abroad, and practice. I know that you men who have sedentary occupations, as we do in the Church, say it is good to go out and have exercise. That will be better for us. But there is something more than just that. Sunday is a day when we change our clothes, put on clean linen. It is truth that "cleanliness is next to godliness," and the Lord said, "Be ye clean that bear the vessels of the Lord."

Bacon, the great philosopher, said, "Cleanliness of body was ever esteemed to proceed from a due reverence to God. The consciousness of clean linen is in and of itself a source of moral strength, second only to that of a clean conscience." The farmer who makes his boys go out and haul hay, even when a storm is coming, is doing his boys an injustice. It would be much better to let that hay be destroyed than to deprive those boys of a sense of coming nearer to the Eternal Spirit, and partake of the sacrament, that they may always have his Spirit to be with them.

A second purpose for keeping holy the Sabbath Day is: "That thou mayest more fully keep thyself unspotted from the world." Contemplation during that sacred hour, self communion, and higher than that, communion in thought and feeling with the Lord—the realization that He is near enough to be aware of what you are thinking. What you think about—is really what you are.

"Nae treasures, nor pleasures,
Could make us happy lang;
The heart ay's the part ay
That makes us right or wrang."

Keep thyself unspotted from the world, and ask God to forgive you if you have in mind injuring anyone who trusts you—I mean morally—or if you have in mind wronging anybody, cleanse it from your mind. Read Doctrine and Covenants Section 59.

There is a third reason. Keeping holy the Sabbath Day is a law of God, resounding through the ages from Mt. Sinai. You cannot transgress the law of God without circumscribing your spirit. Finally, our Sabbath, the first day of the week, commemorates the greatest event in all history: Christ's resurrection and his visit as a resurrected being to his assembled Apostles. His birth, of course, was necessary, and just as great, so I say this is one of the greatest events in all history.

"The Sunday," says Emerson, "is the core of our civilization, dedicated to thought and reverence. It invites to the noblest solitude, and to the noblest society."

We have other instructions and suggestions, but I will add no more than to commend the excellent admonitions given by Brother Petersen, President Clark, and President Richards.

I will conclude with reference to an incident as a missionary in Scotland in 1898. After having been in Stirling only a few weeks, I walked around Stirling Castle with my senior companion, Elder Peter G. Johnston of Idaho. We had not yet secured our lodging in Stirling. I confess I was homesick. We had spent a halfday around the castle, and the men out in the fields ploughing, that spring day, made me all the more homesick, and took me back to my old home town.

As we returned to the town, I saw an unfinished building standing back from the sidewalk several yards. Over the front door was a stone arch, something unusual in a residence, and what was still more unusual, I could see from the sidewalk that there was an inscription chiseled in that arch.

I said to my companion: "That's unusual! I am going to see what the inscription is." When I approached near enough, this message came to me, not only in stone, but as if it came from One in whose service we were engaged: "Whate'er Thou Art, Act Well Thy Part."

I turned and walked thoughtfully away, and when I reached my companion I repeated the message to him.

God help us to follow that motto. It is just another expression of Christ's words: "He that will do the will of God shall know of the doctrine, whether the work is of God, or whether I speak of myself," and that testimony leads us all to the guidance of the Holy Spirit in life. I humbly pray that the Priesthood assembled this night (the number we will give you tomorrow—the greatest, probably, in the history of the Church) will take upon themselves the responsibilities which God has placed upon them, and do their duty wherever it may be, and I ask it in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Eighteen groups have not yet reported the number who are listening to this service by direct wire broadcast. The grand total thus far reported is 26,874. God bless you brethren and keep you true to the Restored Gospel of Jesus Christ.

The Church of the Air Broadcast over the Columbia Broadcasting System network, which will have been recorded in advance, so you need not come to the Tabernacle to hear it, will be released by transcription by KSL Radio Station tomorrow morning from 7:30 to 8:00 a.m. Elder Alma Sonne, Assistant to the Twelve, will be the speaker.

The Tabernacle Choir broadcast will be from 9:30 to 10:00 a.m. Those desiring to attend the Tabernacle Choir broadcast must be in their seats at 9:15 a.m. It is requested that the audience, during the broadcast, refrain from making any disturbance. Large crowds will undoubtedly be waiting outside the closed doors, and when opened there is usually a rush by those outside to get good seats. We plead with those thus standing to be courteous and considerate one to another. Avoid pushing and crowding, will you please. Courtesy is a great virtue. Let us show it one to another, and particularly to our visitors who are within our gates.

The Tabernacle Choir Men's Chorus furnished the singing for us tonight. We thank them and Brother Cornwall for their presence, and for their excellent singing. They will now sing, "Pilgrim's Chorus," after which Elder Frederick Lyman Schenk, president of the Twin Falls Stake, will offer the benediction, and this Conference will be adjourned until 10 o'clock tomorrow morning.

The Tabernacle Choir Men's Chorus sang "Pilgrim's Chorus," after which the benediction was pronounced by Frederick Lyman Schenk, president of the Twin Falls Stake.

THIRD DAY

MORNING MEETING

(For a full report of the Church of the Air and Tabernacle Choir and Organ Broadcast, see pages 127-131.)

Sunday morning, October 7, 1956.

Conference reconvened promptly at 10 o'clock, with President David O. McKay presiding and conducting the services.

The music for this session of the Conference was furnished by the Salt Lake Mormon Tabernacle Choir, with J. Spencer Cornwall conducting. Alexander Schreiner was at the organ.

President David O. McKay:

Ten thousand people assembled in the Tabernacle this morning have just listened to the weekly broadcast of the Tabernacle Choir. There are thousands now assembled not only in the Tabernacle and on the Temple Grounds, but in the Assembly Hall, Barratt Hall, and in other buildings throughout the West.

The fifth session of this General Conference was not broadcast. It was a General Priesthood meeting held last evening in the Tabernacle on Temple Square, with overflow meetings in the Assembly Hall and Barratt Hall, and by direct wire over a public address system to members of the Priesthood assembled in 81 other Church buildings in Utah, Idaho, Colorado, New York, Washington, Oregon, Arizona, Wyoming, Nevada, Illinois, New Mexico, Canada, and California.

For your information and interest we report that as nearly as the ushers could count there were assembled in the Priesthood meeting held last evening, over 27,000 men of the Priesthood. Eighteen of the groups had not reported so we estimate that there will be well over 29,000 or 30,000 people assembled.

The Tabernacle Choir Men's Chorus, under the direction of Elder J. Spencer Cornwall furnished the music.

The address on the Church of the Air Broadcast from 7:30 to 8:00 o'clock this morning was given by Elder Alma Sonne, Assistant to the Twelve.

I am pleased to report that Elder Milton R. Hunter, who has been absent because of sickness, and Elder Ernest L. Wilkinson, who was stricken yesterday, are both reported improved this morning.

We are now assembled in the sixth session of the 127th Semi-Annual Conference of the Church. All the General Authorities are in attendance excepting Elder Hunter. We are glad to see Elder Thomas E. McKay present this morning.

These services and the services this afternoon will be broadcast in the Assembly Hall and in Barratt Hall over a public address system, and by television. They are also broadcast over 11 radio stations in Utah, Idaho, Colorado, and Nevada, and by special arrangement over 13 television stations in the surrounding States.

Once again we express appreciation to the broadcasting stations who furnish this excellent service, thus furnishing conditions by which tens of thousands, perhaps hundreds of thousands may listen in.

To the audience—those assembled in person—and the thousands comprising the television and radio audiences, the First Presidency and other General Authorities of the Church extend a most hearty welcome, and here this morning I think it would be well to extend appreciation so that those listening in on the Coast and Hawaii may hear us,—appreciation for these lovely flowers that decorate the rostrum and other places in the Tabernacle. Elder Edward Clissold, president of the Oahu Stake, has sent us word that the beautiful anthuriums and other tropical flowers decorating the building bring to us the greetings and love of the members of the Oahu Stake and others in Hawaii. I wish to state that these flowers were flown here by the United Air Lines free of charge.

We welcome prominent officials we see sitting here. I am sure we cannot recognize you all. We bid the following welcome: Senator Arthur V. Watkins, Senator Wallace F. Bennett, Congressman William A. Dawson, Secretary of State Lamont Toronto, Adiel F. Stewart, Mayor of the City, President A. Ray Olpin of the University of Utah, President Daryl Chase, President of the Utah State Agricultural College, President William P. Miller, President of Weber College, President J. Elliot Cameron, Director of Snow College, Superintendent of Public Instruction, Prof. E. Allen Bateman; Superintendent of Salt Lake City Schools, Prof. M. Lynn Bennion, and others; Congressman H. Aldous Dixon. We cannot see you very well, but all are welcome and we are glad to have you fellowship with us.

We also welcome the wives of the presidents of the missions, who have been here attending the dedicatory services of the Relief Society Home.

Presidencies of stakes, bishoprics of wards, and all are welcome, as you know, and we pray that the spirit of fellowship and good will with the Spirit of the Lord will continue with us throughout this session as it has throughout the preceding sessions of this Conference.

The Tabernacle Choir will furnish the singing this morning, under the direction of Elder J. Spencer Cornwall. Elder Alexander Schreiner is at the organ.

We shall begin these services with the congregation singing: "O Ye Mountains High."

The opening prayer will be offered by Elder Ward C. Holbrook, president of the South Davis Stake.

PRESIDENT J. REUBEN CLARK, JR.

Second Counselor in the First Presidency

MY BROTHERS AND SISTERS, as with all of us I stand before you in humility, with a prayer in my heart that I may be able to say something that will be helpful in building up our faith, strengthening our testimonies, and I ask that you will extend to me your faith and your prayers to the same end, that all may be benefited.

I would like to begin what I have to say this morning with a quotation of

President David O. McKay:

The invocation was offered by President Ward C. Holbrook of the South Davis Stake.

All you who are listening in will be pleased to know that sitting among the audience that crowds this Tabernacle to capacity are several hundred servicemen, members of the Church, who have come from several different camps to participate in this Conference. Young men, with your officers who are accompanying you, we extend our heartfelt greeting and pray the Lord's blessings to attend you.

The Tabernacle Choir will now sing, "If, With All Your Hearts," under the direction of Elder Cornwall. Following the Choir's singing, we shall hear from President J. Reuben Clark, Jr.

The Tabernacle Choir sang the selection "If, With All Your Hearts."

President David O. McKay:

As already announced, President J. Reuben Clark, Jr. of the First Presidency will be our first speaker this morning. He will be followed by Elder Hugh B. Brown.

some scriptures. One scripture has already been frequently quoted that came from the great intercessory prayer which the Savior delivered the night before the day he was crucified:

"And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent." (John 17:3.)

Then I would like to quote the first three verses and the fourteenth of the first chapter of John:

Sunday, October 7

"In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God.

"The same was in the beginning with God.

"All things were made by him; and without him was not any thing made that was made."

And the fourteenth verse: "And the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us, (and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father,) full of grace and truth."

And finally, I will quote the passage from First Corinthians, where Paul, speaking to the backsliding Corinthians, among whom already began to appear what finally became the great apostasy, and complaining about them and their thoughts, he said,

"For I determined not to know any thing among you, save Jesus Christ, and him crucified." (I Cor. 2:2.)

There are all sorts of cults, all sorts of shadings of what we have called Christianity. There is one group of scholars that work insidiously sometimes, pretending Christianity and a belief in Christ, but nevertheless who subtly and insidiously teach us things that do not come within what we understand as Christianity. The position of these has been stated by one scholar thus:

"Christ . . . cannot have been both the same unclouded thinker of the moral sayings and the apocalyptic fanatic of the eschatological passages."

And eschatology is defined as "The doctrine of the last or final things, death, resurrection, immortality, the end of the world, final judgment, and the future state; the doctrine of last things."

These teachers who announce this difference as to the life of the Savior and his teachings, some of them, find place amongst us.

These critics say one of these two, the moral teachings or the eschatology, must be given up as historical and the one chosen to be got rid of is the eschatological. Anything beyond the moral teachings is put in the realm of myth, legend, popular exaggeration, symbolism, allegory, or transference of the miraculous from other departments of tradition into the life of Jesus.

Their standard of elimination is that any "event which lies outside the range of the known laws of Nature," must be disregarded. This destroys the divine origin of Jesus, his miracles, his resurrection, and much of his doctrine.

I want to read now just a few verses from the Olivet Discourse, the discourse which the Savior delivered on the Mount of Olives at the near conclusion, or conclusion of the third day of the Passion Week which he had spent in the temple or the temple precincts. I am going to read from all three Synoptists, because each says essentially the same thing, but in somewhat different language. I am reading from the 24th chapter of Matthew. They had gone out to the Mount of Olives, Jesus and his disciples; they asked if he would like them to tell him about the temple, and so on, and it was then that he predicted that the temple would be destroyed, and thereafter in this discourse he touched upon not only the destruction of the temple but the Second Coming. Not always can you be clear as to which he was referring, but the passages that I shall read have reference as to what should finally take place.

"Tell us, when shall these things be? and what shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world?"

"And Jesus answered and said unto them, Take heed that no man deceive you.

"For many shall come in my name, saying, I am Christ; and shall deceive many. . . .

"Then if any man shall say unto you, Lo, here is Christ, or there; believe it not.

"For there shall arise false Christs, and false prophets, and shall shew great signs and wonders; insomuch that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect.

"Behold, I have told you before.

"Wherefore if they shall say unto you, Behold, he is in the desert; go not forth: behold, he is in the secret chambers; believe it not." (Matt. 24:3-5; 23-26.)

Mark said: "And Jesus answering them began to say, Take heed lest any man deceive you:

"For many shall come in my name, saying, I am Christ; and shall deceive many. . . .

"And then if any man shall say to you, Lo, here is Christ; or, lo, he is there; believe him not:

"For false Christs and false prophets shall rise, and shall shew signs and wonders, to seduce, if it were possible, even the elect.

"But take ye heed: behold, I have foretold you all things." (Mark 13:5-6, 21-23.)

And Luke says, more shortly than is recorded by the others:

"And he said, Take heed that ye be not deceived: for many shall come in my name, saying, I am Christ; and the time draweth near: go ye not therefore after them." (Luke 21:8.)

I think perhaps when we first read these extracts we may think that the Savior is talking primarily of a person, somebody to come to impersonate the Christ and claim to be the Christ. It seems to me, however, from the way in which these records are made and what they say, that the Savior also had in mind anyone who would come and say to you, "This is Christ that I teach; that is Christ that I teach; that is the Christian doctrine." In that sense I think that these scholars about whom I have already read, who would discard everything that they could not account for by the known laws of nature, they are in effect false Christs, for they are telling us that the things that we believe in Christ are myths, tradition, symbolism, allegory; they did not exist.

Now, that kind of a religion, that kind of Christianity would require that we discard all that we know about the Great Council in heaven and what was determined there, because these things lie outside the known laws of nature, as those scholars understand them.

We would have to discard the Fall as being a myth, an allegory, symbolism.

We would have to discard the virgin birth, the divine conception, the very foundation of our religion; that would have to go.

We would have to discard the witness of the Father at the time of the baptism of the Savior; that would go as myth, symbolism, allegory.

We would have to discard practically all of the miracles as not taking place and those that might be accepted would be spoken of as signs. A sign can be a miracle, but not necessarily so. A miracle is a sign, but more than that.

We would have to discard the testimony of the Father, at the time of the transfiguration, that Jesus was his Son.

We would have to discard that great occasion, the raising of Lazarus and the incidents thereof, the reply of the Savior to Martha:

"I am the resurrection, and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live:

"And whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die." (John 11:25-26.) That would have to go into the discard as myth, allegory, symbolism, tradition.

Finally, we would have to discard all that we know about the resurrection and its effect; all of that is gone.

As to all these, and almost countless other matters: be not deceived, believe them not, follow not after the false Christs.

I would like you to appreciate that without the eschatology of the records of the Savior's life, we should have nothing left but husks, moral teachings, and ethics which, if lived, would make us a great people, a humane people, a peaceful people, but would not carry us back into the presence of our Heavenly Father.

In my view, that doctrine is not only sacrilegious, but to me it is also blasphemy, something to be utterly cast away. We have less left after they get through with their discards than the old paganism, for that paganism, the old Greek mythology, did acknowledge and have a kind of worship of divine beings which they conceived; they did believe in them and worship them.

My whole soul rebels against this emasculation of Christianity. Jesus did live. First, there was the great plan in heaven; that did actually occur. All that we know about it took place there. There was the plan; the earth was formed; Adam came; the human family followed. We came here to prove ourselves. Finally, Christ was born in the Meridian of Time. He lived. He taught. He gave instructions. He was crucified. Then on the morning of the third day, he was resurrected, thus bringing to each and every of us the blessings of the resurrection. We all shall be resurrected. All of that has gone for these people to whom I refer. It is myth, tradition, allegory. Be not deceived by them; believe them not; follow not after them.

Then we would have to discard all that transpired in the restoration of the gospel, the Vision of the Father and the Son, the coming forth of the Book of Mormon, the giving of the great commandments which compose our Doctrine and Covenants. We would have to discard the Pearl of Great Price and all that it says.

Now, brothers and sisters, let us be aware of this false Christ, false Christianity which is taking root among some of our intellectuals. Be not deceived, believe it not, follow not after it, as the Lord said in those various records.

I bear my testimony as I have already indicated to the truthfulness of the gospel, to the restoration of its great principles, to the restoration of the priesthood, to the conferring of all of these things upon the Prophet Joseph, to the passing down from the Prophet Joseph through the Presidents of the Church until the present, that our President of the Church, President David O. McKay, has all of the rights and the prerogatives and the powers and authorities that were conferred upon the Prophet Joseph.

I bear you this testimony in soberness. I repeat, my soul cries out against this heresy that is taught by this group of so-called Christians.

God be with us and help us always, I humbly pray, in the name of Jesus. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr. of the First Presidency has just concluded speaking. We shall now hear from Elder Hugh B. Brown, Assistant to the Twelve. He will be followed by Elder Richard L. Evans.

ELDER HUGH B. BROWN

MY BRETHREN AND SISTERS, although we face this challenging assignment semi-annually, we still anticipate and approach it with trepidation and deep humility. We are fearful that sometime we may depend upon ourselves alone, and we know that if we should our words would be as sounding brass and tinkling cymbals.

Now I know that I cannot say anything that will be new to members of the Church. I cannot say anything that has not been said many times before, and of course better said, but I am encouraged by the announcement of the President that we are favored this morning with the presence of many of our friends, both in the Tabernacle and in the radio and television audience, whom he has welcomed as our invited guests. May I assume that some of you, our brothers and sisters who are not in the Church, might be interested in a very brief review of some of the teachings and practices of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints which distinguish it, for it is somewhat unique.

We are not Catholic, Protestant, nor Jewish, and yet this disclaimer should not be taken to mean we are not Christian. You who heard the powerful address of President Clark this morning will know that we are Christians, for central to everything we believe and teach is our faith that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God. We are grateful for our Judeo-Christian heritage, for the Holy Bible which we accept without reservation as the word of God, except as to some errors that have crept in through translation.

But the difference between us and other churches lies in our faith in and proclamation of what we believe to be the most important message that has come to this earth since Christ lived among men. We make that statement because we believe that the restoration of the gospel was introduced by Jesus Christ personally, and therefore there could be no more important message.

Now when we say, as we do say, that there has been a divine restoration of the apostolic Church, with all of the power and authority thereof, we are aware that it presupposes, and we declare, that there was a need for a restoration; that there had been an apostasy; that during the middle and dark ages there was spiritual stagnation. If it is not true that there was an apostasy, then our declaration of a restoration is superficial and meaningless. If it is true that there has been a restoration, then all men everywhere should know of it, for the gospel of the kingdom must be preached to all the world.

The apostles and prophets predicted an apostasy, and great historians such as Mosheim and Eusebius record it as a fact. We are not alone among the churches in proclaiming a universal apostasy. The Church of England frankly sets it forth in the following words:

So that laity and clergy, learned and unlearned, all ages, sects, and degrees of men, women, and children of whole Christendom . . . have been at once drowned in abominable idolatry; . . . and that by the space of eight hundred years and more. (Homily against Peril of Idolatry.)

John Wesley, one of the founders of Methodism, comments as follows on the early decline of spiritual power and the cessation of the divine gifts and graces within the Church:

It does not appear that these extraordinary gifts of the Holy Spirit were common in the Church for more than two or three centuries. We seldom hear of them after that fatal period when the Emperor Constantine called himself a Christian. . . . From this time they almost totally ceased, very few instances of the kind being found. The cause of this was not, as has been supposed, because there was no more occasion for them, because all the world was become Christians. This is a miserable mistake; not a twentieth part of it was then nominally Christian. The real cause of it was that the love of many, almost all Christians, so-called, was waxed cold. The Christians had no more of the spirit of Christ than the other heathens. . . . This was the real cause why the extraordinary gifts of the Holy Ghost were no longer to be found in the Christian church—because the Christians were turned heathens again, and only had a dead form left. (John Wesley's Works, Vol. VII, 89; 26-27.)

Peter said the time would come when men would not endure sound doctrine, but after their own lusts they should heap unto themselves teachers having itching ears. The Apostle Paul warned against the intrusion of falsehoods and said,

That ye be not soon shaken in mind, or be troubled, neither by spirit, nor by word, nor by letter as from us, as that the day of Christ is at hand.

Let no man deceive you by any means: for that day shall not come, except there come a falling away first, and that man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition;

Who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped; so that he as God sitteth in the temple of God, shewing himself that he is God. (II Thess. 2:2-4.)

John, on the Isle of Patmos, beheld the great dragon that should overcome the Church, and that that dragon should have power in all nations, kindreds, and tongues. All of these things being predicted, and now recorded by the historians, justifies at least in a measure our statement that following that apostasy there has been a restoration.

Perhaps you, our friends, ask what was restored that we did not have before? We humbly, but without equivocation, reply that the kingdom of God has been set up upon the earth, organized under his divine guidance—the very kingdom for which you and Christians in all nations and climes have been praying since Jesus first taught the Lord's Prayer to his apostles, the central thought of which is, "Thy kingdom come." (Matt. 6:10.)

We announce the organization of the kingdom which Jesus commanded all men to make the first object of their search when he said, ". . . seek ye first the kingdom of God." (Ibid., 6:33.) We believe this is the Dispensation of the Fulness of Times of which the Apostle Paul spoke, of times he might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth; even in him: (Eph. 1:10.)

Now you, my friends, may think it presumptuous for us to claim that this is the Church and kingdom of God—and it would be presumptuous if we said men had organized it, or that men were responsible for its restoration. That certain men were chosen and had part in it is true. But it is not presumptuous to announce that the God of heaven has set up his kingdom, for he did it pursuant to divine decree, and in harmony with what the apostles and prophets of old saw in holy vision.

It has been said that history repeats itself, but someone recently observed: "We learn from history that we do not learn from history." Christians have often wondered how the Jews could have rejected Christ when they had been hoping and praying through the centuries for the coming of the promised Messiah. Let us add to our prayer "Thy kingdom come"—also centuries old—a petition that we may not reject it when it comes.

We believe that this kingdom is now set up in order that the will of God might be done in the earth as it is in heaven, and that it is preparatory to the second coming of the Son of God. We believe it is the kingdom which Daniel saw. All of you will remember reading the story of the king of Babylon, Nebuchadnezzar, who had a dream in which he saw a great image with a head of gold, shoulders and arms of silver, body of brass, legs of iron, and feet and toes of iron and clay. You will remember that the king called in his wise men but could not get the interpretation of his dream, that he sent for Daniel who, when asked if he could interpret the dream, said, "There is a God in heaven that revealeth secrets, and maketh known what shall be in the latter days."

Then he said,

Thou, O king, art a king of kings: for the God of heaven hath given thee a kingdom, power, and strength, and glory. (Daniel 2:37.)

He went on to say the king had power and control over all things, and then he said, "Thou art this head of gold." Then Daniel, with prophetic insight, and in amazing detail, foresaw the rise and fall of the nations of the earth—the great Babylonian empire, represented by the head of gold, the Medo-Persian empire, by the shoulders and arms of silver, the Greek, by the brass, the divided kingdom of Rome, by the legs of iron, and the feet and toes which represented the divided kingdoms of Europe and the world, which would not cleave together, and, said Daniel, "... in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which ... shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand for ever." (Ibid., 2:44.)

Is it presumptuous for us to say that that prophecy has been literally fulfilled? Do you not think it likely that inasmuch as Daniel saw so accurately the rise and fall of these kingdoms, each in turn, that the latter part of his great prophetic declaration must be also fulfilled? If the kingdom of God is not on the earth, then we believe firmly that that part of Daniel's vision will yet be fulfilled.

That it has been and is being fulfilled in these latter days we humbly declare. We should like to say to you, our friends, that there is a way that you may know whether what we say is true or false. Paraphrasing an ancient prophet, we exhort you who hear these things that you ask God the Eternal Father, in the name of Jesus Christ, if what we say is true, and if you will ask in faith, he will reveal the truth of it unto you by the power of the Holy Ghost. That is a promise made under the inspiration of the Spirit of God to all who will hear and put it to the test.

Hundreds of thousands of people from almost every country have put it to the test, and over a million and a quarter of them will testify, each in his own tongue, that they did ask God the Eternal Father whether these things are true, and that he did reveal the truth of it unto them. I humbly and sincerely declare to you that God has revealed to me the truth of the prophet's declaration of the restoration of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, pursuant to John's revelation when he said:

And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people,

Saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come. (Rev. 14:6-7.)

Humbly I bear witness to the truth of the declaration of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints that that angel has flown; that Christ has appeared; that other heavenly beings have visited the earth and restored the priesthood; that the kingdom of God is set up; and that the Savior will come to this earth and reign as King of kings and Lord of lords pursuant to promise, to which I testify humbly in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

He to whom you have just listened is Elder Hugh B. Brown, Assistant to the Quorum of the Twelve. We shall now hear from Elder Richard L. Evans, member of the Council of the Twelve, he to whom you have listened every Sunday morning during the Choir broadcasts.

ELDER RICHARD L. EVANS

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

PRESIDENT MCKAY and my brethren and sisters, many thoughts and themes have run through my mind during this conference, but I must admit that I am more aware this morning and at this moment of those who are not here in the Tabernacle, than of those who are. It is quite likely not only that those who are listening and looking outside outnumber us many times, but also that those who are not members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints greatly outnumber those who are, and it is with these principally in mind that I speak at this time.

(I am aware, too, somewhat, of the "World Series," unfortunately, and I feel a little, I think, as the Ancient Mariner must have felt when he tried to detain the wedding guest. After all, there are nine innings to come, and likely there can be only one of two results. We hope you will stay with us a little longer.)

I am grateful for a conviction of the many things men have in common. So much of our heritage, so much of basic belief, so much of so much that matters most in life, we have in common. And among the greatest of things we have in common is our relationship to the God and Father of us all, who made us in his image and whose children we all are. For this I am grateful. I am grateful also for the love I have in my heart for mankind.

I should like to share with you, in quick review, another thing we have in common, often overlooked, not always observed—the commandments of God—and I should like to go back first to the Ten Commandments and quickly cite them, not in full text, but in full meaning:

Thou shalt have no other gods before me.
Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image.

Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord, thy God, in vain.

Remember the sabbath day to keep it holy.

(I wish all of you present and all of you on the air could have heard last evening, President McKay's statement concerning the Sabbath day. I would not wish to particularize at this time as did they in ancient Israel, as to what one should or should not do on the Sabbath day, but I am sure that there are many activities and events, public, and private, that ought to be deferred to another day, and I would remind you again that the word the Lord used concerning the Sabbath was "holy"—"to keep it holy.")

Sunday, October 7

Third Day

Honour thy father and thy mother.
 Thou shalt not kill.
 Thou shalt not commit adultery.
 Thou shalt not steal.
 Thou shalt not bear false witness.
 Thou shalt not covet. . . .

I am grateful for these things in common, and I am grateful for a respect I have for the sincere convictions of all men, and the respect other men have for our sincere convictions.

I should like to share with you quickly and briefly some other things that we would hope men have in common, which we would subscribe to as members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, some of which are incorporated in our Articles of Faith and some of which appear elsewhere. The audience this morning being what it is, outside these walls, I should like to read some of these Articles of Faith:

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in His son, Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost.

We believe that men will be punished for their own sins, and not for Adam's transgression.

(Each of these is tempting to elaborate. Each one might well be the subject of a sermon.)

We believe that through the Atonement of Christ, all mankind may be saved, by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the Gospel.

We believe that the first principles and ordinances of the Gospel are: first, Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; second, Repentance; third, Baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; fourth, Laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost.

We believe in the same organization that existed in the Primitive Church, viz., apostles, prophets, pastors, teachers, evangelists, etc.

(There are others, and I will not take time to read them all.)

We believe all that God has revealed, all that He does now reveal, and we believe that He will yet reveal many great and important things pertaining to the Kingdom of God.

We claim the privilege of worshipping Almighty God according to the dictates of our own conscience, and allow all men the same privilege, let them worship how, where, or what they may.

We believe in being honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous, and in doing good to all men—[and, passing over some words of Paul]—If there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report or praiseworthy, we seek after these things.

We believe the Bible to be the word of God as far as it is translated correctly; we also believe the Book of Mormon to be the word of God.

The Lord has had many peoples and has dealt with them under many conditions at many times in many places, even unto the present, and his similar dealings with others as with ancient Israel we accept as scripture.

We believe also in the eternal continuance of the marriage covenant, and not just a marriage that death dissolves. We believe that the sweetest and most meaningful things in life are everlasting.

We believe in and accept all truth, and believe in the search for truth, through the inspiration of Almighty God and through the searching and seeking of earnest and honest men.

Now, it should not seem a thing strange that there are certain requirements and commandments and ordinances that must be accepted or adhered to. In all things in life, in the physical world and in the spiritual world, there are causes and consequences. Some of them we have to accept on faith. Even those which are demonstrated fact, we have to accept in part on faith, because we do not know the "why" of all things. We do not know why two atoms of hydrogen and one of oxygen make water, but we know they do. The "why" is something we shall learn later.

We do not know "why" the necessity for baptism and all the other ordinances under the hands of those having divine authority. We accept them on faith, in full faith.

We believe in continuous revelation. The Lord God has not told us all he knows, but he has told us much more than we use and live up to.

We believe in the acceptance of all truth, but not all theory. I have spent a good many years in my life in academic walls. I have a profound respect for scholars and scholarship and science and scientists, the ablest among whom would be the first to admit that their findings are still in flux, and that there is yet infinitely much to be discovered.

Patience, faith, virtue, humility, and a never-ceasing search, and living and keeping the commandments of God, are required of all of us—and it should not seem a thing strange that the Lord God has requirements and prescribed ways, and that just any way that men choose will not lead to the highest blessings that God can give. Those who wish to realize limitless opportunities and exaltation and happiness here and hereafter in the fullest possible measure must live according to his commandments, according to his prescribed way in the fullest possible way.

Truth is not always convenient. The commandments of God are not always convenient. They do not bend themselves to our convenience. Truth does not adapt itself to what we wish it were. We had better adapt our lives to what it is. We had better adapt our lives to the commandments of God, whether they are convenient or not.

Patience, faith, conforming our lives to truth, the keeping of the commandments, trust in the eternal future—the assurance that the most meaningful things in life are everlasting, and a patient search and seizing upon what the soul and the spirit with its imprint upon the soul tells us to be truth—these are required of us.

May I share with you a statement from an eminent and able New England scholar, a statement written to me in a letter just a few days ago by Dr. Henry Beston:

"Never bind life in the cords of an unintelligent skepticism. Unintelligent credulity can be dangerous, but an unintelligent skepticism locks the doors of the mind."

We can rationalize away almost anything, anything ever said, anything that ever happened, anything ever written or spoken. But we cannot rationalize away the witness of the Spirit unto our souls, which brings knowledge more sure than the things we can touch, and see, and feel. That witness I leave with you this day as to the reality of those things of which Brother Hugh B. Brown and President Clark have previously spoken, as to the glorious events of the restoration of the gospel of Jesus Christ, as to the way of life and salvation, and the divine reality of our Savior, who came to earth not to condemn but to save us.

Our Father in heaven is not an umpire who is trying to count us out. He is not a competitor who is trying to outsmart us. He is not a prosecutor who is trying to convict us. He is a Loving Father who wants our happiness and eternal progress and everlasting opportunity and glorious accomplishment, and who will help us all he can if we will but give him, in our lives, the opportunity to do so with obedience and humility and faith and patience.

God help us to live to have his help, that these things which he has in store for his children, all of whom we are, may be ours, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Elder Richard L. Evans of the Council of the Twelve has just concluded speaking. Now will the audience please join the Choir in singing, "Come, Come, Ye Saints," the hymn that lifted the hearts of the Pioneers on the Plains and recently thrilled in ecstasy cultured audiences of Europe as it was sung by this, our Salt Lake Choir. It will be led by Elder Cornwall.

The Choir and congregation joined in singing the hymn, "Come, Come Ye Saints."

President David O. McKay:

Elder Bruce R. McConkie of the First Council of Seventy will now address us. Elder McConkie will be followed by Elder Ezra Taft Benson of the Council of Twelve, who will be our concluding speaker.

ELDER BRUCE R. McCONKIE

Of the First Council of the Seventy

THIS MORNING we have heard fervent and true witness borne by these great men who have stood in this pulpit about the fundamental truths on which we stand. We have heard witness borne of the divine mission of Christ our Lord, of the glorious things incident to the restoration of the gospel, and of the establishment of the kingdom of God on earth in our day.

Along with these brethren, as a witness of these things, knowing for a surety of the truth of what I say, I bear witness and testimony and record that God has spoken in this our day; that the heavens have been opened; that the fulness of the gospel has been given again to men on earth; that angels have ministered from the presence of the Lord; and that the kingdom of God, the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, is here in the most literal and real sense.

Now, this is a startling, a dramatic, a marvelous announcement and claim to make. Perhaps it staggers the imagination of people who have not been schooled in the revelations.

Permit me to remind you that the ancient revelations speak in great measure, at extended length, about the glorious things that are to occur in the latter-days, in the era of restoration. I think there is no single subject covered in the ancient revelations as extensively, not even excepting the many revelations about the divine mission of our Lord, as is the general subject of the great era of restoration, the period when God will gather all things in one and consummate his glorious work in the latter days.

For instance: You will recall that after our Lord had organized and set up his Church in the Meridian of Time, after he had ministered among his apostles, his brethren, for a period of forty days following his resurrection, after all things were established for that era, and on the occasion when he was to ascend in glory to his Father, he was asked the question: "Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?"

And you will recall that he replied, "It is not for you to know the times or the seasons, which the Father hath put in his own power." (Acts 1:6-7.) But then he sent his witnesses to declare the glad tidings of salvation for that era to all the world.

In other words, those brethren knew that in a day subsequent to that which then was, in a period after New Testament times, the promises, glorious promises made to Israel, were to be fulfilled.

You will recall that all of the prophets in ancient Israel spoke and wrote at great length about the latter days and the restoration of the kingdom to Israel.

You will recall that early in his ministry, when Peter was speaking to those on whose hands the blood of Christ was found, he said these very expressive words:

Repent ye therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord;

And he shall send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you: [now please note]

Whom the heaven must receive until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began. (Acts 3:19-21.)

That is to say, between the first and second comings of our Lord, there was to be an era in the earth's history which was named "the times of restitution of all things," or as we would express it, in more up-to-date language, the era or period or age of restoration.

You will recall that it was Paul who said that in the Dispensation of the Fulness of Times all things would be gathered together in one in Christ, both things which are in heaven and on earth. (See Eph. 1:10.)

You will recall the words that Elder Hugh B. Brown quoted to us that an angelic ministrant should fly through the midst of heaven in the latter days to bring the everlasting gospel to men on earth. (See Rev. 14:6-7.)

We need not multiply illustrations; we easily could do so. There are multitudes and multitudes of scriptures which tell the events that are to transpire in our day, and so far as we can learn, no one else ever claimed revealed knowledge of their fulfillment; no one else ever came professing to know of the fulfillment of the prophecies of old, relative to the setting up of the kingdom of God in the last days.

We have this witness in our hearts, a witness borne of the Spirit, that these things have in our day occurred; and we believe most firmly that the Lord is no respecter of persons, which means that he will give the Holy Ghost to any living soul who will abide the law entitling him to receive revelations therefrom, and that member of the Godhead will bear record to him of the divinity of Christ his Son and of this great latter-day work that has been established.

You know, from the beginning, from the days of the Prophet Joseph to this moment, the men who have been living oracles, witnesses of the truth of these things, have been sound, stable, great, intelligent, competent men. We have not been led by people who are unstable or fanatical or unbalanced in any sense of the word. We have had men who have been educators and bankers, presidents of insurance companies, people who have sat in the halls of Congress and in Cabinets with Presidents, the most stable, mature, and sensible men, industrialists and otherwise, that anyone could expect to find.

Now it would seem to me that when men of the highest, soundest caliber—I mean the living oracles, the Presidency and the Twelve, from the beginning to now—stand up as we have heard it done here this morning, and bear fervent witness to the divinity of these things, and certify that they know as they know that they live, that God has spoken in this day, it seems to me that any person in the world who has spiritual inclination ought to stay himself and wonder, and be willing to search and make inquiry, and find whether these glorious and marvelous things are true, or whether they are not.

I had a man tell me how it came about that he was converted to the Church in his later years, past sixty. He said that he chanced to be on Temple Square. He walked into this building when President J. Reuben Clark was addressing a civic organization on a civic or political subject. At the end of his talk, this man told me, President Clark said in substance, "Now, I am going to bear you my testimony about Joseph Smith and the restoration of the gospel," which he did with the power that few can equal. The convert then said, "I had never before heard of Joseph Smith, but I did know who J. Reuben Clark was, and I figured that if a man of that caliber would tell me in the sincerity with which he spoke that this great truth was available, that I ought to make inquiry and find out," and he investigated and joined the Church. That is a very sensible attitude.

To what these great men who have spoken this morning have said, I add my own personal testimony, an assurance born of the Spirit, an assurance coming when the Holy Ghost, the Spirit of the Lord, which has spoken to the spirit which is within me, conveying truth with unshakable certainty. I add my witness that God Almighty has opened the heavens in our day; that all of the laws and principles which comprise the gospel of salvation are here again; that legal administrators stand at the head of the kingdom of God on earth; and that for all who will hearken and believe and conform to these principles there is peace and joy in this life and a hope of eternal reward hereafter. In the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Elder Bruce R. McConkie of the First Council of Seventy has just spoken to us. Elder Ezra Taft Benson of the Council of the Twelve will be our concluding speaker.

ELDER EZRA TAFT BENSON

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

MY BRETHREN AND SISTERS AND FRIENDS, both seen and unseen: Humbly and prayerfully I stand before you this Sabbath day. I have prayed fervently that I might have the power to say what is in my heart, and what our Father in heaven would have me say.

It is good to come home. For one who is on temporary leave from his official duties in the Church, and who misses very greatly the daily and weekly intimate contacts with the Church and its program—the visits to the stakes and missions—it is doubly good to be home; and to one who went through the experience which I went through six months ago, it is triply good to be home.

I was here to attend conference in April. In the early morning hours of the day when the conference was to open—because of the press of official duty—it became necessary for me to leave and return East. I would like to say, President McKay, if you should ever want to test the faith of the Latter-day Saints who live on the eastern seaboard just send them home as the conference is ready to open. I hope I never have to repeat that performance.

I have felt in my heart, my brethren and sisters, that I would like to say just a word regarding a simple principle and practice of the Church. I'd also like to express my testimony regarding the power of that simple principle and practice, and also express my gratitude for the influence which that principle and practice has had in my life and the lives of those whom I love and associate with.

I speak of prayer.

I express my gratitude to my brethren of the General Authorities for their constant prayers in my behalf, as they gather in the temple to the east of us weekly, around the sacred altar in that glorious temple. I express my gratitude and thanksgiving for the prayers offered in my behalf in the stake conferences and the other meetings throughout the Church. I express gratitude for the prayers and the faith of my devoted wife and children, who have complete faith in this glorious principle.

I express also my thanks for men and women, individuals in and out of the Church throughout this great land, and in foreign lands, who have expressed their faith with their prayers in my behalf. Hundreds and thousands of letters have come in from people in all walks of life, expressing their feelings and indicating that their prayers are being offered.

Only recently I was speaking at a great meeting in Chicago—a dinner meeting—to an audience not wholly friendly. Just before I was to speak a colored waiter whispered over my shoulder and said, "Mr. Secretary, would it be helpful to you before you speak to know that thousands of people throughout America are praying for you tonight."

I know not by what methods rare
But this I know: God answers prayer.
I know that he has given his word
Which tells me prayer is always heard
And will be answered soon or late
And so I pray, and calmly wait.
I know not if the blessings sought
Will come just in the way I thought,
But leave my prayers with him alone
Whose will is wiser than my own;
Assured that he will grant my quest
Or send some answer far more blessed.

Eliza M. Hickok

It is my testimony, my brothers and sisters and friends, that God does hear and answer prayers. I have never doubted that fact. From childhood, at my mother's knee where I first learned to pray; as a young man in my teens; as a missionary in foreign lands; as a father; as a Church leader; as a government official, I know without any question that it is possible for men and women to reach out in humility and prayer and tap that Unseen Power; to have prayers answered. Man does not stand alone, or at least, he need not stand alone. Prayer will open doors; prayer will remove barriers; prayer will ease pressures; prayer will give inner peace and comfort during times of strain and stress and difficulty. Thank God for prayer.

I am very grateful today that prayer has played such an important part in the establishment of this great nation. To every Latter-day Saint this nation has a prophetic history. Ancient American prophets predicted the coming forth of this nation and the establishment of the Constitution of this land. You can read in that sacred volume, the Book of Mormon, prophecies made centuries before this nation was established regarding the coming of Columbus and the Pilgrim fathers. Ancient prophets said these would humble themselves before the Lord. I have always been very grateful in reading the official records to find that they did humble themselves before the Lord; that their first official act in coming to these shores was to go on to their knees in humble gratitude and thanksgiving to the Lord.

The Founding Fathers, in order that their new experiment make sense, had to turn to religion, had to turn to the scriptures, had to turn to the prophecies, the Decalogue, the Sermon on the Mount. Then when the time came for the establishment of the Constitution, and when the time came for them to issue their Declaration of Independence, a sacred document issued in white heat on the anvil of defiance, they appealed to the Almighty, both at the opening of that document and at its closing. They spoke of eternal truths. They spoke of the fact that men are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights, about which President Clark spoke so beautifully last evening.

Then, at the close of the document they said,

... with a firm reliance on Divine Providence we mutually pledge to each other our lives, our fortunes, and our sacred honor.

And even in the formulation of the Constitution, which was done slowly and painfully, wrought on the forge of national necessity, prayer played an important part. There at the Constitutional Convention, when it seemed as if their efforts were to fall flat and to be of no avail, one of those whom the God of heaven had raised up unto this very purpose, to help establish the Constitution of this land—and you can read of it in Section 101 of the Doctrine and Covenants, in a revelation given to the Prophet Joseph—one of these Founding Fathers, Benjamin Franklin, his head gray with age, about the oldest in the group, and possibly the most experienced statesman of the lot, is reported to have stood up in the convention and uttered these words:

In the beginning of the contest with Great Britain, when we were sensible of danger, we had daily prayers in this room for divine protection. Our prayers, sir, were heard and they were graciously answered. . . . I have lived a long time and the longer I live the more convincing proofs I see of this truth—that God governs the affairs of men.

If a sparrow cannot fall to the ground without His notice, is it possible that an empire can rise without His aid? We have been assured, sir, in the sacred writings that except the Lord builds a house they labor in vain who build it. I firmly believe this, and I also believe that without this conferring aid we shall succeed in this political building no better than the builders of Babel.

It is my belief today, my brethren and sisters, that we need as a nation that same faith, that same reliance on divine aid and assistance, as was needed at that Constitutional Convention. I am very grateful that they established and wrote into their documents—their basic documents—a recognition of their dependence upon the Almighty; that they stamped on their coins the slogan, "In God We Trust."

Does it not inspire you, as it does me, when you go back through the history of this land and try to envision in your mind Washington at Valley Forge, during that terrible winter, on bended knees in the snow imploring divine guidance? Does it not thrill you as you see Abraham Lincoln during the crucial days of the Civil War driven to his knees in prayer to the Almighty, and to hear him say,

God rules this world. It is the duty of nations as well as of men to own their dependence upon the over-ruling power of God, to confess their sins and transgressions in humble sorrow . . . and to recognize the sublime truth that those nations only are blessed whose God is the Lord.

It is my plea today, my brethren and sisters—men of the priesthood particularly—that we use our influence as American citizens, and as citizens of the kingdom of God, as men who have faith in prayer, faith in God, that we will encourage our leaders, national, state, local, and civic leaders to take an interest in this matter of encouraging our people in this blessed land to bow themselves before the Almighty in prayer. I think there would be great safety in a nation on its knees. What assurance it would give of the blessings of the Almighty if the American people could all be found daily—night and morning—on their knees expressing gratitude for blessings already received, and acknowledging their dependence upon the Almighty and seeking for his divine direction.

I hope we may encourage that practice in our service clubs, schools, in our meetings of farmers, businessmen, and professional men. I have been pleased to see what I think is a turn toward an increase of interest in prayer and in religion. I was very pleased to find an increasing number of prayer groups in the Congress of the United States, where members of that body, of opposite political faith, could come together weekly and unite in humble prayer and petition to the Almighty.

I am pleased to find the increasing evidence of the practice of prayer in the executive branch of the government. I testify to the blessings which prayer has brought to the cabinet meetings of the President and to my own staff meetings. I think there is a need for it, my brethren and sisters, throughout our government. Without his divine help we cannot succeed. With his help we cannot fail.

May I mention a simple little experience that came to my personal attention some time ago. I think it was two or three years ago now when the President of the United States issued a proclamation for a day of prayer. It was not the first time it has been done in this great country, and I hope it will not be the last time. I am glad it has been done again this year. Then as is the custom, as the head of one of the departments of government, it was my responsibility, I felt, to send a memorandum to the heads of the twenty agencies in the Department of Agriculture, and to the employees, referring to the presidential proclamation in which we were asked to devote a day to giving of thanks for blessings received, and to beseech God to strengthen us in our efforts toward a peaceful world. And so, this memorandum was sent out, from which I read just one or two sentences:

In keeping with the President's proclamation, all members of the Department of Agriculture are requested to plan their work schedules and reserve the time between 11:30 a.m. and 11:45 a.m. free from appointments and interference so that all in their respective offices may utilize this time for meditation and prayer. Facilities are inadequate for the Department as a whole to meet together. We feel, therefore, that in addition to this brief period of time set aside during the day, all should be encouraged to petition God in their homes and with their loved ones both morning and evening for guidance, clemency, and forgiveness.

I was not only pleased, but I was also delighted with the response that came from the employees of that great department. I have before me a typical little note that went to the head of one of these agencies from one of the men appointed in charge of one of the groups. I would like to read it to you as an evidence of the fact that people do respond to leadership which calls for men and women to recognize their dependence upon the Almighty, and to humble themselves before him. This is the note:

In response to Secretary Benson's memorandum of September 20 about President Eisenhower's proclamation for a day of prayer, approximately 100 of our Forest Service family met in the conference room from 11:30 to 11:45 a.m. on Wednesday, September 22. Every division in the Washington office was represented from the messenger rooms up.

I read the Secretary's memorandum which in itself is a spiritual message of encouragement and inspiration. W. K. Williams read a prayer by J. Edgar Hoover, a copy of which is attached. The meeting was closed with oral prayers by both Mr. Williams and myself.

Following the meeting and continuing through today there have been numerous telephone calls and personal expressions of satisfaction over this opportunity for the Forest Service family to join with the President, Mr. Benson and other national leaders in this period of prayer for a more peaceful world.

Brethren and sisters, I am convinced in my heart that the spectacle of a nation praying is more awe-inspiring, more powerful, than the explosion of an atomic bomb. The force of prayer is greater than any possible combination of man-controlled powers because, as J. Edgar Hoover has so well said, prayer is man's greatest means of tapping the resources of God.

I am pleased that this nation, on several occasions, has appealed to the United Nations to open the General Assemblies with an appeal to the Almighty. I am pleased that only recently our representative in that body, referred to by President McKay some months ago, Ambassador Henry Cabot Lodge, Jr., wrote a letter to the seventy-five members of the United Nations appealing to them to open those meetings with an appeal to the Almighty; that some representative of the churches represented there be invited in their own words to lead in prayer. Senator Lodge made the appeal to all and invited them to join him in this petition. Senator Lodge said:

I do so in the conviction that we cannot make the United Nations into a successful instrument of God's peace without God's help—and that with His help we cannot fail. To this end I propose that we ask for that help.

There is probably no single thing that the United Nations can do which will so move and touch millions of people around the world and will give them such confidence in the United Nations.

I was pleased, my brethren and sisters, as I read the report of the April conference and the remarks by Elder Mark E. Petersen, speaking as directed by the First Presidency, in announcing the series of new Church posters and cards for the benefit particularly of our young people, to note that one of them was going to be devoted to prayer. I wish there were time this morning to read the account of this particular card and poster on prayer. One will show the picture of George Washington, Abraham Lincoln, and President Eisenhower in the background, and then in the foreground a family group. At the top we will read: "Great Men Pray," and again at the bottom: "Be Honest with Yourself."

Then that lovely sidepiece of explanation, which is an inspiration, and which I wish every American could read, yes, every person in the world, regarding the benefits and the blessings of prayer.

Brethren and sisters, I would like to see this nation on its knees in humble prayer. A few months ago I received a lovely poster from Conrad W. Hilton of hotel fame. This poster showed Uncle Sam in his red, white, and blue uniform on his knees, praying to the Almighty. Then the caption: "America on its knees . . . not beaten there by the hammer and sickle, but freely, intelligently, responsibly, confidently, powerfully. America now knows it can destroy Communism and win the battle for peace. We need fear nothing or no one . . . except God."

Yes, it is in our own enlightened self-interest to engage in this simple practice, this powerful practice of prayer. Roger Babson said many years ago: "What this country needs more than anything else is old-fashioned family prayer."

Thank God for prayer!

In closing may I quote from one or two of the scriptures because the scriptures are replete with admonitions and direction to God's children to pray. Of course, Christ set the all-important example.

If my people, which are called by my name, shall humble themselves, and pray, and seek my face, and turn from their wicked ways; then will I hear from heaven, and will forgive their sin, and will heal their land. (II Chron. 7:14.)

So said our Heavenly Father to ancient Israel, and I am sure that call is repeated to us today. I ask you, when you go home, to turn to that sacred volume of scripture—that American volume of scripture, if you will—the Book of Mormon, and read the words of Amu-lek, in the thirty-fourth chapter of Alma, in which he calls upon us to humble ourselves and continue in prayer to the Almighty. He admonishes us to cry unto him over our families, over our flocks, over our herds, over our fields, to seek him daily.

Yes, my brethren and sisters, there is power in prayer. All things are possible through prayer. It was through prayer that the heavens were opened in this dispensation. The prayer of a boy fourteen years of age, in the Sacred Grove, opened a new gospel dispensation, and brought forth a vision of the Father and the Son, as they appeared as glorified heavenly beings before the boy, Joseph.

God help us to pray. In the words of Alma, I close:

Counsel with the Lord in all thy doings, and he will direct thee for good; yea, when thou liest down at night lie down unto the Lord, that he may watch over you in your sleep; and when thou risest in the morning let thy heart be full of thanks unto God; and if ye do these things, ye shall be lifted up at the last day. (Alma 37:37.)

God grant that we may so live and so pray, that we may be lifted up at the last day, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Elder Ezra Taft Benson of the Council of the Twelve Apostles has just concluded speaking. We are happy to have him mingle with us in this Conference.

The closing song by the Tabernacle Choir will be "Hallelujah," conducted by Elder J. Spencer Cornwall. The closing prayer will be offered by Elder Serge J. Lauper, president of the San Francisco Stake, following which this Conference will stand adjourned until two o'clock this afternoon. Elder Alexander Schreiner has been at the organ.

We commend the members of the Church for cooperating with our officials in the city in keeping the grounds clear of paper and other litter. Please continue this afternoon to use the receptacles which have been conveniently placed for your use. Please do not eat your lunches in this sacred building, even though you are eager to retain seats for this afternoon.

The Tabernacle Choir sang the anthem, "Hallelujah."

President Serge J. Lauper of the San Francisco Stake offered the closing prayer.

Conference adjourned until 2 o'clock p.m.

THIRD DAY

AFTERNOON MEETING

The concluding session of the Conference was held Sunday afternoon, October 7, at 2:00 p.m.

The Salt Lake Mormon Tabernacle Choir furnished the choral singing for this session, under the leadership of J. Spencer Cornwall, with Frank W. Asper at the organ.

President David O. McKay:

At this, the opening of the seventh session of the 127th Semi-Annual Conference of the Church, the Salt Lake City Tabernacle is filled to capacity and overflow meetings are being held in the Assembly Hall and Barratt Hall. These services are also being televised over KSL-TV, Channel 5, and are being heard over radio station KSL and by arrangement through KSL over 16 radio stations in Utah, Idaho, Colorado, Nevada, California, and Oregon.

The music for this session will be rendered by the Tabernacle Choir, with Elder J. Spencer Cornwall conducting and Elder Frank W. Asper at the organ.

We shall begin this service by the Tabernacle Choir singing, "Great and Marvellous."

The opening prayer will be offered by Elder Scott B. Price, president of the East Ogden Stake.

Singing by the Choir, "Great and Marvellous."

Elder Scott B. Price, president of the East Ogden Stake, offered the opening prayer.

President David O. McKay:

The invocation was offered by Elder Scott B. Price, president of the East Ogden Stake.

We are receiving telegrams from those who met in Priesthood Meeting out in the Northwest, Chicago, and other places, last evening, but we have not received the compilation from the, I think, 18 groups. Whoever has that, we would appreciate having it in. Last year the total attendance was over 29,300. With the reports still out, lacking on the 18 groups, we have report on 27,000. If they will average 200 each it will exceed the number we had last year. If the committee will compile that, we shall be pleased.

The Tabernacle Choir will now sing, "Lamb of God," conducted by Elder Cornwall.

Following the singing President J. Reuben Clark, Jr. will present for your consideration and action the General Authorities, General Officers, General Auxiliary Officers of the Church.

The Tabernacle Choir sang the anthem, "Lamb of God."

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr.:

My brothers and sisters, as announced by President McKay, we are about to engage in what in human government would be termed the exercise of our franchise as members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Your sustaining vote means more than merely you have no objection or you are willing that those proposed should serve. By your vote witnessed by the raising of your hands and arms to the square, you not alone indicate that you have no objection, but your vote constitutes a pledge that you will support and sustain those for whom you so vote.

This is not a pro forma operation. May the Lord impress upon us the significance of our votes as we proceed.

ELDER HENRY D. MOYLE

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

MY BRETHREN AND SISTERS, I can ask for nothing more than to have that same spirit here with me today that I enjoyed as I undertook to fulfil my assignment to visit the missions of South America this past summer.

I had no sooner set foot upon that great continent than I had an opportunity to meet with a group of wonderful elders in the great city of Rio de Janeiro. Conditions that day were not as favorable as they might have been for the making of a good impression. I was inclined to be just a little discouraged. However an impression came over me when I stood up to address those elders that there was a spiritual awakening in process in South America; that the elders who were then working there would, during the short term of their mission, become conscious of this awakening; and that it would bring a great joy and satisfaction into their lives.

As I toured those missions, I became more and more convinced that that awakening had started in large measure through the relatively recent visits of our General Authorities to that great continent. I have in mind the visit there of President David O. McKay and President Stephen L. Richards, and of Elder Mark E. Petersen some eighteen months preceding my visit.

I am here to bear witness to you today that those impressions which I received upon that occasion have in part fulfilled themselves already. In that great land of Brazil we are forging ahead with our conversions and our baptisms far more rapidly than we have ever done before in the history of that mission. When I first arrived and made that prediction, President Sorensen and his elders had hopes of three hundred baptisms this year. They have exceeded that mark, and now hope for five hundred.

There has been a change in the feeling, the attitude of the missionaries. They sense, as they have never sensed before, that they are part of a great movement that is marching on to accomplish its great purpose among 54 million people who live in Brazil, and of which some 35 million are of European extraction. These people represent half of the entire population of South America.

From the moment we landed in Brazil until we completed our mission in Brazil, the Argentine, and the Uruguayan missions, there seemed never to be a moment but what that assurance which we received in Rio de Janeiro was present with us. It seemed to radiate from the membership of the Church. They are seeking diligently to lend obedience to the principles of the gospel of Jesus Christ. The elders are showing a degree of diligence which would commend them to any group of missionaries, I am sure, anywhere in the Church.

We had so many notable incidents and experiences that I shall not endeavor to detail any of them. I have a feeling there is a great mission for us to perform at home, and that thought has never left me. I sensed in the very first meeting the importance of our elders preaching an effective gospel. We have all experienced here today and in the previous sessions of this conference what it means to hear preached an effective gospel. Men have stood here and have borne their testimonies under the power and influence of the Holy Ghost. They have spoken with authority. They have had a keen insight into the principles of the gospel of Jesus Christ and understand their redeeming powers.

And so I say, as we journeyed through those great missions and enjoyed the sweet companionship of the mission presidents and their wives and families, we were impressed constantly with the thought that there was a work for us to do here at home—those of us who are responsible for having sent these young men and women into the mission field. I have come with a plea in my heart that we dedicate ourselves to teach the young and rising generation in our homes, first of all, the principles of the gospel long before they are called upon a mission. Develop within them power to explain principles, and have in their hearts a testimony born of the Spirit that the heavens have once again been opened, that the gospel has once again been brought to the earth, and that it is our mission above all other missions in life to promulgate this gospel among the nations of the earth and to teach the principles of the gospel to these peoples of the earth in their native lands and in their native tongue.

My heart goes out to elders who are sent to missions in foreign-speaking countries. I am sure my feelings are born somewhat of experiences which were mine when I was called to serve in what was then the Swiss-German Mission, under the presidency of Thomas E. McKay. I know what it is to go to a strange country and sense keenly the responsibility that rests upon us as missionaries to preach the gospel to those people in their native tongues. I am sure that the time has long since arrived when every Latter-day Saint family should cultivate within the family circle that tongue which was native to their parents or their grandparents.

We have an example in the life of Lehi and his family. We would not have the Book of Mormon today if it had not been for the fact that Lehi, inspired of our Heavenly Father, sent back for those brass plates of Laban, and thereby insured the perpetuation of the language of their forebears in their posterity.

I have a feeling that an obligation rests upon those of us whose parents came from foreign-speaking countries to show forth our love of the countries out of which we have been called by the priesthood of God to the extent of learning that language.

I have rather a deep-seated desire in my heart, and I always have had since I was a boy, to want to meet my great-grandfather to whom the elders first preached the gospel. Now, in my case, his language is my mother tongue. I am sure that same feeling exists in the hearts of all good Latter-day Saints whose families sprung from foreign-speaking nations. That is the loyalty side of it. I have a feeling in my heart that we can be loyal to the nation of our birth, or of our adoption, and still show forth our love of the country of our parents to the extent of perpetuating its language in our family circles.

I have been reading with a great deal of interest recently a book published by James B. Conant, former president of Harvard University, and now United States Ambassador to Western Germany, in which he says that there are two subjects—he puts them above all other subjects—which he would prescribe for modern day study in our universities and colleges. The first one is foreign language, and the second one is history. Thus we have a second reason for wanting to learn a foreign language. President Conant points out in his book that in countries such as Switzerland and Holland a man is not considered educated if he does not speak at least two foreign languages. He points out that with modern-day transportation, the capitals of the world today have been brought so closely together that we cannot carry on the business of the world without a more intimate knowledge of foreign languages than we now have. Surely that must be the case with the business of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

We have today, for example, five or six Spanish-speaking missions. We have three German-speaking missions. We have three Scandinavian missions, and many other missions in which foreign tongues are spoken; for example, the Brazilian Mission, of which I have spoken, in which the Portuguese tongue is spoken.

I wonder if it would not be becoming of us as Latter-day Saints to revive the language of our forefathers in order that we might better qualify ourselves to carry out the great mission which is ours of preaching the gospel to the nations of the earth.

I was rather interested in the tendency of the South American countries to concentrate upon the legal language, so to speak; in Brazil and in the Argentine many people are of German extraction. One whole state in Brazil is a German state, but during the war it became important that all should speak Portuguese as a security measure. So they had to give up the teaching of German in the schools of that German state of Santa Catarina. Inside of a few years, just half a generation, you now go to young boys and girls whose parents and grandparents spoke German fluently, and speak to them in German, and they answer you in Portuguese. They still understand a little, but they have entirely given up the speaking of that great tongue. The same is true to a large measure with the French. There are many French people there.

Now, it is important, even down there, that these languages should be perpetuated. We have not been able as a Church to send missionaries into Italy, into Portugal, into Spain. Every time we convert a person in South America of European extraction, we are bringing the gospel closer to their families on the continent. Instance after instance was given us of how, when a Portuguese family in Brazil is converted to the Church, they begin immediately sending their tracts and their literature, and above all, the Book of Mormon, into Portugal. Some are able to save enough to go to Portugal. The primary purpose of the visit of these people now to the Old Country, whether they be French or German or Portuguese or Italian, is to preach the gospel to their people, their families.

The result is that we have some instances where they have gone to the Old Country and converted their families, and then their families have had to come to this country in order to be baptized.

In all such instances, you see how essential it is to retain the language of our forebears. I desire to tell you the story of one German lad who was born of very wealthy parents. His father owned a tremendous estate in Germany. He called his son in one day and said, "My boy, all this is yours. I am going to retire."

The boy looked up at his father and said, "I do not know why, but I am not going to accept it. I am going to travel." Then he said, "I was led as it were by a spirit to come here to Brazil, and for eight long years I wondered why I had left home. I never was dissatisfied. I was always happy about it, but I did not know why until finally one day two Mormon elders came to me and preached the gospel. Fortunately these two men who were on a mission struggling to speak the Portuguese language could speak enough German to this young man to teach him the gospel. He said, "They had no more than finished their first conference with me than I knew why I had left my father's home."

His home now has been a gathering place for the elders. He has left his wife and his family of five children and is laboring in a distant city in Brazil as a full-time missionary. He is preaching the gospel to those who speak German in that city.

There is an obligation resting upon us, brethren and sisters, to see to it that the next generation of missionaries that come from our homes come better prepared in two respects to go forth and fulfil their missions, wherever they may be called:

First, to learn those languages which are in a way native to the family. I am sure those who come of German extraction will be able to speak the language with a better accent, with a larger vocabulary, and with a greater natural ease than those who did not have that gift by right of inheritance.

Second, to know the restored gospel and understand the great plan of life and salvation and have a love of the work.

I plead with you, my brethren and sisters, to anticipate; and while we are anticipating a mission for our sons and our daughters, we ought to anticipate for them also a marriage, a military career for our sons so long as we have compulsory military training, and then a life's work. We cannot begin too young. We certainly will increase the percentage of temple marriages if we take it upon ourselves to instruct our young people in these important affairs of life in their early ages; we will make better missionaries of them, make better citizens and better soldiers.

I bring you the greetings of the Saints and of the elders in South America. They are growing not only in numbers; they are also growing in strength, and they have a warmth and a hospitality which is not excelled anywhere in the world. In our very first meetings in the Argentine at La Paz and Buenos Aires we had a total of just under nine hundred people present. There was hardly a soul who left those meetings without coming up and shaking hands with Sister Moyle and me and welcoming us, telling us how grateful they were to the Church for sending first Brother Petersen, and then me, to tour these missions. They had the deep-seated hope in their hearts that they would be continually favored with such visits.

I do not feel that this report would be complete if I did not tell you of a little story that my wife used in practically all of the meetings that we held in these three missions. We were trying to impress upon the people the personality of God, his personal attributes. Sister Moyle generally emphasized that point by telling this little story. There was a boy (I cannot tell it as well as she does, but I will do my best), five years old who was accustomed to kneel down at his bed at night and say his prayers. On this particular night the mother listened at the door to see just what he said. This is what she heard: "God, bless Mama, bless Papa, bless Grandma," and then he usually hopped into bed. But on this occasion he remained on his knees and he said,

"And dear God, please take care of yourself, for if anything happened to you we would all be sunk."

Now, I hope and pray, my brethren and sisters, that we may all sense keenly the importance of living closely to our Heavenly Father and having our children live closely to him, that they may appreciate in very deed the personality of God and qualify themselves to go out into the world and preach Jesus Christ and him crucified; for I bear witness to you today that he lives, and that he died for the sins of the world, and that he has arisen as our atoning Savior and made possible for us through his redeeming sacrifice the privilege of gaining immortality and eternal life in the kingdom of our Heavenly Father.

This I pray humbly, may be our lot, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Elder Henry D. Moyle of the Council of the Twelve has just concluded speaking. We shall now hear from Bishop Carl W. Buehner of the Presiding Bishopric.

BISHOP CARL W. BUEHNER

Second Counselor in the Presiding Bishopric

MY DEAR brethren and sisters, I suppose you wonder what I might say, and I will tell you I am wondering that myself. I have been looking for another interpretation of the scripture that says the first shall be last and the last shall be first. In this case the last is about the last.

I certainly enjoy my work in the Church, and with the others I would like to bear my testimony to the divinity of this great work. It is wonderful to meet with the brethren, to feel their strength and their power. I wish you had the same privilege that we have of meeting with them. It is also a great privilege to travel in the stakes of the Church and meet you wonderful people in the areas in which you live.

Since hearing Brother Moyle today and Brother Bennion last Friday, I have had the feeling that our members living in countries far away from us seem much nearer to us, and hearing the choir sing yesterday, representing the countries of Scandinavia, I could not help thinking what a wonderful representation they were of the people and how proud the Scandinavians would have been had they been able to hear this choir sing from this tabernacle.

I have been equally thrilled by the marvelous music today. Brother Petersen had two foreign expressions that revealed his gratitude for the Scandinavian choir, but in the language that these people can understand, I can say in three words: It is wonderful!

I have been thinking a little of the great day in which we live and some of the marvelous things we observe, some things that are blessings to us, some that might tend to destroy us, and others that might lead to our self-preservation. I have been thinking of the scientist or the inventor who sits in his laboratory with his test tubes, his chemicals, his minerals, and all of the devices to measure time, speed, weight, etc., and ponders over some of the remarkable things that he has produced.

The atomic bomb that we have heard about during this conference is not very large. It is said that the one dropped at Bikini lifted ten million tons of water ten miles into the air. It is almost impossible to imagine such power. The H-Bomb exploded at Eniwetok all but wiped out a whole island in the Pacific Ocean, leaving a crater 175 feet deep and one mile wide. It is said that the power from this bomb exceeded the power of all the bombs dropped during World War II on Germany and Japan combined.

You may have read recently that a one pound slug of polished uranium, which is about the size of a golf ball, contains more power than all the TNT you could put into Yankee Stadium.

What man is doing is tremendous. I think of the speed and ease with which we travel. Compare this with the way Christopher Columbus and his crew crossed the ocean in the Nina, Pinta, and Santa Maria—fifty-one days, twenty-four hours a day. Have you ever multiplied that? He traveled and discovered a new land at the rapid speed of two miles an hour! Coming to conference, I am sure some of you walked five miles an hour to get a seat here.

I read in the paper recently that a jet plane had traveled 1,900 miles an hour and had gone into the air fourteen miles and broken the sound barrier—whatever that is. I have had a jet ride. I know how it feels to travel five hundred miles an hour in the air. It is thrilling and exciting. Another jet plane went all but four times that fast. We are living in a great day!

What man has been able to accomplish through his own intelligence is infinitesimal when compared to the power of the Creator.

We, too, are living as it were in the great laboratory of life. We are being tried and tested. We are seeking the combinations by which we can progress and prove ourselves. We are living in this world filled with good and evil, with right and wrong, with truth and error, and with light and darkness. You have heard today that there are false teachers, false doctrines, false prophets; and here we have been placed. Reference was made last evening in the general priesthood meeting to the great privilege of having a mortal body. It means that we kept our first estate. We are now being tried in life's laboratory to see whether or not we can keep our second estate; and it is not an easy thing. We are being tempted all the time; even the best of us are subject to temptation.

Think what we experience going through life and what it means to us. It has been said that we have the right to exercise our own free agency. I trust that this experience will enable us to select the things that will be constructive and that will bring us nearer to the Lord. It is said in the scriptures that the earth was covered with darkness, and gross darkness covered the minds of the people. I am grateful for that day when the light from heaven came again and the gospel was restored. Think of the advantages that men have now in this great laboratory to seek out the truth and get together those ingredients that will help us gain a testimony of the divinity of this great work.

Men of science have done great things. Men living in life's laboratory can also accomplish great things. We shall not all be saved; some will be destroyed. We do not all think the same way. We shall not all get the right combinations and arrive at the same great purpose for which we have been brought here. But I hope, brethren and sisters, that all of us will have a desire to seek out those things that will eventually gain for each of us eternal life in the kingdom of our Heavenly Father.

When you contemplate the power of the Almighty compared to the power that man seems to have been able to assemble, think of this:

And worlds without number have I created; and I also created them for mine own purpose; and by the Son I created them, which is mine Only Begotten. . . . For behold, there are many worlds that have passed away by the word of my power. And there are many that now stand, and innumerable are they unto man; but all things are numbered unto me, for they are mine and I know them. (P of G P, Moses 1:33, 35.)

Think also of the power of the resurrection, when the elements that have gone back to mother earth can be assembled and united with the spirit to form a perfect, resurrected body; the power to save and exalt in the kingdom of our Heavenly Father. As has already been said, and not one sparrow shall fall unnoticed. neither shall one hair of the head be lost (See Matt. 10:29-31)—and that is comforting to some of us, too.

God the Father and his Son have revealed themselves in this Dispensation of the Fulness of Times. I would like to read a quotation or two from the extracts of the history of the Prophet Joseph Smith.

The first verse tells why he wrote this:

Owing to the many reports which have been put in circulation by evil-disposed and designing persons, in relation to the rise and progress of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, all of which have been designed by the authors thereof to militate against its character as a Church and its progress in the world—I have been induced to write this history, to disabuse the public mind, and put all inquirers after truth in possession of the facts, as they have transpired, in relation both to myself and the Church, so far as I have such facts in my possession. (P of G P, Joseph Smith 2:1.)

He continues by relating where he was born, when he was born, telling about the other members of his family, and about a great religious revival that took place in the area into which they had moved. I would like to continue from there:

While I was laboring under the extreme difficulties caused by the contests of these parties of religionists, I was one day reading the Epistle of James, first chapter and fifth verse, which reads: If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him.

Never did any passage of scripture come with more power to the heart of man than this did at this time to mine. It seemed to enter with great force into every feeling of my heart. . . .

So, in accordance with this, my determination to ask of God, I retired to the woods to make the attempt. It was on the morning of a beautiful, clear day, early in the spring of eighteen hundred and twenty. It was the first time in my life that I had made such an attempt, for amidst all my anxieties I had never as yet made the attempt to pray vocally.

After I had retired to the place where I had previously designed to go, having looked around me, and finding myself alone, I kneeled down and began to offer up the desire of my heart to God. I had scarcely done so, when immediately I was seized upon by some power which entirely overcame me, and had such an astonishing influence over me as to bind my tongue so that I could not speak. Thick darkness gathered around me, and it seemed to me for a time as if I were doomed to sudden destruction.

But, exerting all my powers to call upon God to deliver me out of the power of this enemy which had seized upon me, and at the very moment when I was ready to sink into despair and abandon myself to destruction—not to an imaginary ruin, but to the power of some actual being from the unseen world, who had such marvelous power as I had never before felt in any being—just at this moment of great alarm, I saw a pillar of light exactly over my head, above the brightness of the sun, which descended gradually until it fell upon me.

It no sooner appeared than I found myself delivered from the enemy which held me bound. When the light rested upon me I saw two Personages, whose brightness and glory defy all description, standing above me in the air. One of them spake unto me, calling me by name and said, pointing to the other—This Is My Beloved Son. Hear Him! (Ibid., 2:11-12, 14-17.)

I think the great message of the ages still is that God lives, that he is mindful of us, his children, that he is all-powerful, that his Son is the Savior and Redeemer of the world.

Other messengers came also. I should not take more time, but just let me describe one other who came to the earth. Two or three years had elapsed since the time that the Father and the Son had appeared to the Prophet Joseph Smith:

While I was thus in the act of calling upon God, I discovered a light appearing in my room, which continued to increase until the room was lighter than at noon—day, when immediately a personage appeared at my bedside, standing in the air, for his feet did not touch the floor.

He had on a loose robe of most exquisite whiteness. It was a whiteness beyond anything earthly I had ever seen; nor do I believe that any earthly thing could be made to appear so exceedingly white and brilliant. His hands were naked, and his arms also, a little above the wrist; so, also, were his feet naked, as were his legs, a little above the ankles. His head and neck were also bare. I could discover that he had no other clothing on but this robe, as it was open, so that I could see into his bosom.

Not only was his robe exceedingly white, but his whole person was glorious beyond description, and his countenance truly like lightning. The room was exceedingly light, but not so very bright as immediately around his person. When I first looked upon him, I was afraid; but the fear soon left me.

He called me by name, and said unto me that he was a messenger sent from the presence of God to me, and that his name was Moroni; . . . (Ibid., 2:30-33.)

Actually these heavenly beings have been sent in this great Dispensation of the Fulness of Times. I would commend that you accept the testimonies of the brethren who have spoken during this conference concerning this great thing, the restoration of the gospel, and I am sure if you can accept them, you will have a conviction, a knowledge, and an understanding that this great latter-day work is divine.

May we all, always, young people and all of us, have a desire to ask, to knock, to seek, and to put together those combinations that will help us eventually gain a home in the celestial kingdom of our Heavenly Father, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Bishop Carl W. Buehner of the Presiding Bishopric has just spoken to us. Under the direction of Brother Cornwall the Choir and Congregation will now sing, "We Thank Thee, O God, For a Prophet." Elder Levi Edgar Young will speak to us following the singing.

The Choir and congregation sang the hymn, "We Thank Thee, O God, For A Prophet."

President David O. McKay:

Elder Levi Edgar Young of the First Council of Seventy will now speak to us. He will be followed by Elder Delbert L. Stapley of the Council of the Twelve.

MY BRETHREN AND SISTERS: With you I have enjoyed this great conference. The divine words and teachings of President McKay and all the brethren will remain with us, that we may grow in wisdom and truth.

As the brethren have referred to the noble servants who had the revelations of the Lord in the days when the Prophet Joseph Smith lived, I think of an incident that I shall ever hold in my heart and mind. Having been called to preside over the Swiss-Austrian Mission many years ago, I was sent to visit the University of Vienna. I was taken through the library, one of the largest libraries of the world, and the attendant who was escorting me took down a book from a shelf, and opening it, I read the title of it. It was the Principia, written by Sir Isaac Newton in the early part of the eighteenth century, and was known as the greatest scientific work of the world. It was written in Latin, the universal language of science at the time, and was the major guide to the world's scientific thought. "Newton died in peace," says one writer, "and in the knowledge that the fathomless wonders of the universe had been given their shape and their motion by the sure hand of God."

While I was looking at the Principia, my guide took from the shelf another book, which he said was a wonderful work of science. It was the volume on mathematics written by Apostle Orson Pratt. You may imagine my feelings as I read the title. The volume was published in London, and was used in the higher institutions of learning in Germany, Austria, and France. Here they had placed it at the side of the Principia.

I wish to say a few words of gratitude to President McKay and his counselors, and all the brethren who have spoken to us. In these three days of meetings I am sure everyone feels that he has been encouraged and strengthened by what he has heard. I shall not give to you this afternoon any prepared talk but merely express my gratitude for the divine teachings which have come to me as I listened to the words of wisdom and truth.

All of us have had our faith renewed, our testimonies strengthened, our spiritual selves quickened with divine light. Our paths have been made clearer before us, and we are now resolved to serve more diligently our Lord in righteousness. To refer to the beautiful messages of our Presidency and others, we believe all that God has revealed, and that he will yet reveal many great and important truths pertaining to the Kingdom of God. The ideals of love, of government, of intelligence, have been impressive, and we must contemplate these ideals with our best thoughts, each one of us; put them into practice—our missionaries especially—and our class leaders. Teachers must always remember that in speaking to people, they must convince them that we are interested in the good and mighty things that they believe.

We must in words and demeanor show always the dignity and authority of man, and talk of the noble rank he holds among the works of God. We must act in the worthy power of pure thought and let our ideals prevail. Let us try more diligently to become cultivated men and women.

We have been told to purify ourselves, to come closer to the perfect ideal which Jesus our Redeemer taught. The path is straight before us. We must love God; we must love our neighbor; we must do unto others as we would have them do unto us. Our attention has been called to the Ten Commandments, the Sermon on the Mount, the Lord's Prayer, the birth and resurrection of Jesus Christ, our Redeemer. We must have faith in mankind, and the divinity of man should be made known to our children. We must be more determined than ever to fulfil the great task expected of us, to make ourselves better, to make this a better world to live in, and to bring mankind nearer to God. We have been taught that our salvation and the salvation of all mankind is found in the true and everlasting gospel.

President Joseph Young, who was for many years President of the First Council of the Seventy, was chosen by the Prophet Joseph Smith to this important position. He said on one occasion in speaking of the quorums of Seventies:

The most effective way to satisfy one's noble impulses is training one's intelligence, to have a deep faith in Almighty God, and develop a love for Truth. We should give years of study of good books, years of devotion in the search for Truth. The Gospel demands this of brethren holding the priesthood of God.

In his dedicatory prayer in the Kirtland Temple, we have the words of the Prophet Joseph Smith:

... seek ye diligently and teach one another words of wisdom; yea, seek ye out of the best books words of wisdom; seek learning, even by study and also by faith. (D & C 88:118.)

In this day and age of schools and colleges, what a wonderful saying this is.

Let us remember the words we have heard at this conference and make them a part of our lives, I ask in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

We have just listened to Elder Levi Edgar Young, Senior President of the First Council of Seventy. Elder Delbert L. Stapley of the Council of the Twelve will be our concluding speaker.

ELDER DELBERT L. STAPLEY

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

MY BROTHERS AND SISTERS, I should like to express first of all appreciation for the spiritual uplift of this great conference. I have been inspired by it. I have been blessed by it. I am sure you have.

In his opening address at the last April general conference, our beloved President David O. McKay voiced an appeal for stability and harmony in the home. He expressed this timely concern:

"I am not so sure whether we are maintaining the high standards required of us in our homes. I feel constrained, therefore, at this opening session to make an appeal for more stability, more harmony, and happiness in home life."

I would recommend, my brothers and sisters, a re-reading and study of this inspired and important address. The wisdom of it is so apparent to ward and stake leaders acquainted with the problems in the home life of some Church couples, and the poor relationship between some parents and their children. It is apparent also to the leaders who work with youth. The President's vital message brought immediate response from the administrative officers of the Church Board of Education. They kindly invited me to address and lead a discussion on the subject, "Counseling on Standards of Morality," at a summer seminar scheduled for the Church seminary and institute instructors on the Brigham Young University campus.

In my personal interviews of youth over the Church and in visiting with ward and stake leaders I had gained some knowledge of the existence of moral problems among groups of Church young people. However, in preparation for this special and important assignment with the seminary and institute instructors who are charged with teaching the gospel to the youth of the Church, and therefore are close to them and their problems, I invited to my office a representative group of each, also four choice young people, two boys and two girls. The result of these interviews, together with the information developed from class discussion of the subject, was revealing and somewhat alarming. At the risk of some possible criticism, I desire frankly and honestly to point out a few facts concerning the disturbing problems that beset us and to make what I hope will be some helpful suggestions.

Here I should like to borrow the opening paragraph of an article I recently prepared for the November issue of the Relief Society Magazine which will appear under the caption, "Developing Safeguards for Youth":

"One of the serious problems confronting parents today is a growing tendency of moral laxity among youth. Too many parents are not fully aware that such a condition exists. Therefore, blind to the evils to which their children are exposed, unsuspectingly, therefore thoughtlessly, they contribute to an increase of immoral and sinful practices among them."

Good homes where the gospel is taught and lived and where love predominates are basic to the true character and high moral standards of youth. Parents should recognize there is much in this modern world to challenge the interests of young people. Much of what is offered is good, but some is bad, cheap, and of low standard. The pressures of unwholesome influences are dressed up so enticingly and exerted so cunningly, that if accepted they would destroy the virtues that make for true nobility of character and a life of joy and happiness.

Although we would not want it otherwise, there is so much knowledge present in the world today; and tomorrow and each succeeding day thereafter discovery, invention, and knowledge will continue to increase and become so conveniently available that mental development and learning will come earlier and earlier in the life of youth. With it, unless youth is well grounded in the faith, will come worldly sophistication and material pursuits and pleasures. Without maturity of feelings and judgment, wrong roads and attitudes can be easily taken that would impair the promise to them of a rich, useful, and happy life.

Parents and leaders of youth must recognize the worldly pressures to which young people are constantly subjected and not close their eyes to the worldly evils that gnaw unceasingly at the true moral patterns ordained of God for man to obey.

Our great challenge is to prepare youth now by wise and understanding teaching and counseling to escape these lurking perils that would destroy their very souls. To wait until after sins are committed before taking action will not eliminate the consequences nor the sorrow and heartache that follow transgression. Satan, through his human aids, has cunningly devised alluring schemes and enticements that confuse and frustrate youth as to the true values of life. The moral and spiritual standards of the gospel are frequently endangered. Knowledge of life and its facts are too often obtained by youth from wrong and undesirable sources because the home and parents, the proper source, too frequently close the door by side-stepping the issue or question, when a timely, intelligent, or understanding answer or explanation might change for good the whole course of a young person's life.

No doubt many parents lack an adequate vocabulary to express themselves about such intimate matters, but if they are parents of teen-agers, does it excuse them from learning and securing proper counsel and training to fulfil their God-given responsibility of bringing up children in the true ways of the Lord?

If parents would take full advantage of the plans and programs of the Church through the priesthood quorums, the auxiliary organizations, and the Brigham Young University extension courses in family living, they would competently qualify themselves for the important task of youth guidance. If parents do not fully become acquainted with the problems of their children when growing up in this age of freedom from restraints in boy-girl relationships, can they recognize the danger signals that may be developing in their lives?

Most young people are wonderful, teachable, and controllable. The adult world with its conduct confuses them. Correction in this area would largely solve the perplexities and the problems of youth. How versed are parents in the jargon of speech and terminology employed by youth to enable them to evaluate the meaning and seriousness of necking, light and heavy petting, dare games, self-abuse, and other evil practices with which youth often are too well acquainted, that weaken restraints and resistance and thereby destroy the true moral concepts of life?

Parents, live close to your children and more particularly during the adolescent years while they are in the process of growing up and experiencing physical changes, and also new and strange emotions that they do not fully understand. It is a critical period in their lives, when a constant counseling and stabilizing influence is so needful and helpful. It is a time for them to learn about the strange feelings that motivate their lives and actions. There are developing within them emotional disturbances and conflicts difficult to control, and if the knowledge and help they require cannot be obtained from parents, youth may solicit help from undesirable sources or from associates whose knowledge and sense of values are as immature and unsound as their own. Here lies a serious danger and pitfall that must be avoided.

Perhaps children should not blame parents for their own mistakes, but often they do, following a transgression that proper and timely instruction and counsel could have prevented. A simple and honest answer to questions and problems so vital to youth could make the big difference in their lives when temptations arise.

Parents should build comradeship and love in the home and eliminate strained relations to insure stability and security of home life for children. In dealing with children there should always be love and kindness, yet firmness, when setting up controls and rules of conduct.

Youth, if properly taught, for the most part expect and desire restrictions to guide them in social activities and dates. Safeguards and protective counsel are necessary to fortify them against familiarities and intimacies that lead to sin.

What appears to youth as fun, excitement, or glamour may present lurking dangers. If parents enjoy the confidence of their children and know what their plans are, they will then be able to see the hidden perils before them and from the experience of parenthood give protective guidance and counsel to help control their emotions and to safeguard virtue and honor, so essential to youth for a happy and satisfying life.

Personal ownership or freedom in the use of family cars seems to be a need in the lives of youth today, yet without adequate controls and the observance of respectable hours following parties or dances the cars often become agents for intimacies and moral infractions.

The responsibility of parents and youth leaders in this modern scientific world we live in is to teach and show youth how to live among these modern factors and still express a wholesome, integrated response to them and build up a set of standards of life, objectives that will worthily cull out of life the things that destroy and cultivate those virtues that build security and peace of soul. Parents should help youth to realize a clean mind and body make for happiness now and eternally.

Young people today have too much excitement, distraction, and passive entertainment. Perhaps we do too much for them and rob them of the excitement, legitimate and fully satisfying, of the creativeness which youth formerly enjoyed.

Morality is one of the highest achievements to which a human being can aspire. It indicates full and complete emotional maturity and orientation. It is, therefore, very complex and reaches into fields of living which we ordinarily do not associate with morality. If anything interferes with this development of maturity, it may be the underlying cause of immorality.

The home environment and training, then, become an important and prime consideration. A young man made this profound statement:

"I know in my own life one of the reasons I was chaste was that I never thought of being otherwise. I had a good, wholesome environment and a deep love for my parents, and the temptations were eliminated partly because of it."

Parents and teachers, also speakers from the pulpit, throughout the years have emphasized to the youth of the Church full observance of the Word of Wisdom. Our young people are thoroughly conscious of this divine law of health. The same constant effort and understanding, however, have not been placed upon the law of chastity. Perhaps it is because of its very delicate and intimate nature that chastity does not receive the same attention in the home, in the classroom, or from the pulpit as the Word of Wisdom.

The violation of moral purity is of the two sins far more serious in the eyes of God. Young people who are guilty of moral offenses are often true observers of the Word of Wisdom. This is an evidence that the law of chastity is not receiving the attention it deserves in the program of the home or of the Church.

In a survey conducted by a group of Church seminaries, each young person was given a list of commandments and laws governing the Church, among which were the Word of Wisdom and chastity. The young people were asked to list these commandments and laws in the order of their importance. In the compilation of the results of this survey most students placed the Word of Wisdom in first position. Somewhere in their training they had not been properly taught that the most serious sin short of committing murder is that of immorality. The true and vitally important values of morality must be clearly and unmistakably established in the minds and hearts of youth to assure acceptance and compliance by them.

Religion should always be on an understandable and practical plane in the home where children can live and enjoy it. Perhaps the Church should provide courses of study for the priesthood, applying the gospel to help the men become better husbands and fathers. A comparable course might be suggested for the Relief Society, dealing with the woman's role as a Latter-day Saint wife, mother, and home builder. Such courses, to have value, must not deal simply in generalities and admonitions, but must relate the principles of the gospel to the concrete knowledge of human nature and behavior.

God will not excuse us for our failure to find the full life meaning in our theology nor for failure to apply its values to the home and family relationships. Children, through sound home religious instruction, can be helped to attain wholesome satisfactions in life by developing basic loyalties to Deity, to the restored gospel of Christ, to the appointed leaders of the people, to the home and family, and also to the fundamental principles of proper moral conduct.

Mothers, unless absolutely necessary, should not seek employment outside the home, but rather should honorably fulfill their chief mission in life as wife, mother, and homemaker. Many problems of youth stem from mothers accepting remunerative positions that take them and their wholesome influence out of the home. Mother and the home are synonymous, therefore important to the safe rearing of youth.

In closing, my brothers and sisters, I return again to President McKay's appeal as quoted in the beginning of my talk, and suggest that we searchingly ask ourselves these questions: Are we maintaining the high and important gospel standards in our homes? Is family prayer engaged in daily? Do we set a proper example as true and faithful Saints for our children to follow with profit and enrichment of moral character values that will assure them a life of joy and happiness. Does harmony prevail in the home with love as the controlling and motivating force? Does the home provide security and stability to strengthen family ties? Are our children comfortable and happy, fully enjoying the environment and companionship of family living? These and many more like questions we could ask ourselves profitably as we contemplate the full scope of President McKay's warning.

I sincerely pray that we shall recognize not only the home and moral problems that do exist, but that as parents and leaders we will also resolve to qualify and pledge ourselves to be living examples of Christlike virtues, that we may be able to give wise, helpful, and understanding counsel and direction to youth in the process of growing up.

I pray that maturity will find each of them morally clean, sound in the faith, prepared and worthy for the sacred ordinances and choice blessings of God's holy temples.

I also pray, my brothers and sisters, that as leaders we shall give consideration to the problems of youth, to the need of doing something constructive that will help them to understand life, gain a knowledge and a testimony of the gospel that will carry them over difficult ground into a life of joy and happiness, and this I humbly pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

We have a note that says that when we sustained the presidency of the Young Women's Mutual Improvement Association of the Church, inadvertently Sister Reeder's first name was given as "Martha." Whether it was "Martha" or "Mary," we sustain unanimously Sister Bertha S. Reeder as president of the Young Women's Mutual Improvement Association.

We have a report of all but fourteen of the eighty-one halls in which the priesthood meeting was broadcast last night. The actual count of those in attendance totals 27,966. On the basis of those in attendance last April at the places that have not reported, the committee estimates an additional 1785 people, making a total of 29,752 members of the priesthood in attendance last evening. Thank you.

PRESIDENT DAVID O. McKAY

JUST A WORD about our obligation as citizens:

When the Apostle Paul was being bound with thongs for a scourging, he said to the centurion that stood by, "Is it lawful for you to scourge a man that is a Roman, and uncondemned?"

Then the chief captain came and said to Paul: "Tell me, art thou a Roman?" and Paul answered that he was. "And the chief captain answered, With a great sum obtained I this freedom."

I fancy that Paul straightened up when he said: "But I was free born!" (See Acts 22:25-28.)

I wonder if we freeborn Americans appreciate what it is to have the right to vote, to express by our vote our choice of those who are to rule over us. No, thank heaven, not to rule over us—to serve us in the service of the government. For you, the electorate, are the rulers in this great Republic.

Those who have taken out their citizenship I think appreciate it even more than some of us who have it by birth.

We have an election in November, in which you have the right to state who will fill the offices that are now to be filled in the nation, in the state, and in our local affairs. We ask, we plead that every member of the Church go to the polls in November and cast your vote for the men and women whom you wish to occupy the offices named. Now you choose, and choose wisely and prayerfully, but cast your vote.

We have a moment left in which to express appreciation and gratitude for those who have quietly and effectively rendered service in making these three days of conference so memorable. Undoubtedly I shall overlook some, but our hearts go out to everyone, and to all groups who have contributed to the success of this, probably the greatest, the most inspirational conference we have held.

I can just merely name them. First, we thank the public press, especially our leading newspapers who have been so fair and generous in letting the public who could not attend conference understand and to a degree partake of the inspiration that radiated not only from the words but also from the hearts of the speakers. We express appreciation to the reporters who have daily taken notes and so fairly and accurately reported each session of the conference.

We express appreciation for the cooperation of the city officials, including Chief Cleon W. Skousen and the traffic officers. I have noticed, as have many of you, that officers in uniform have been constantly at posts of duty protecting, as far as they could, pedestrians from any possible danger.

We express appreciation to the ushers who have rendered service early and late in seating the great audiences. They have been quiet, but effective, in their services.

We have already expressed appreciation for these beautiful flowers, "prophets of beauty and song," among the sweetest of God's blessings to men, to life. How beautiful is God's world if we but stop to listen and to look.

We express appreciation for the assistance rendered by the various radio and television stations, here in our own city and state, and in other states named in the various sessions of the conference. Truly, their service has been the means of permitting tens of thousands of people to hear the proceedings of this, the one hundred twenty-seventh semi-annual conference of the Church.

We have been greatly blessed throughout the conference with music—the first day the "Singing Mothers," conducted by Sister Florence J. Madsen; the second, by the combined Scandinavian choirs under the direction of Brother R. Hulbert Keddington; and today, the inspirational singing of our own Tabernacle Choir under the leadership of Brother J. Spencer Cornwall. How their singing, so willingly and spiritually rendered, has uplifted our souls! We have always had good singing in previous conferences, but I feel somehow that these three group of singers throughout this conference have reached superior heights, and we say thank you, and God bless you!

I wish to express gratitude for the support, blessing, and strength always of Presidents Richards and Clark and for the spirit of unity that pervades the Quorum of the Presidency. The wisdom of these able men is ever directed to the furtherance of the kingdom of God. May the Lord continue to bless them.

Likewise, these members of the Council of the Twelve: You can feel that in these quorums (and I include now the Assistants to the Twelve, the First Council of the Seventy, the Presiding Bishopric, and the Patriarch)—you can feel radiating from these men that for which Christ prayed when he offered that great intercessory prayer. Among other things he said:

"And now I am no more in the world, but these are in the world, and I come to thee. Holy Father, keep through thine own name those whom thou hast given me, that they may be one, as we are." (John 17:11.)

These brethren prove daily, as was particularly evidenced in a sacred meeting in the temple last Thursday, that they have that spirit of oneness, and we are united in praying that you presidencies of stakes, bishoprics of wards, presidencies of quorums, presidencies and superintendencies of auxiliaries, may be so blessed that you too may say: We strive to be one as the Father and Son are one. God bless you that this may be true.

Just preceding the opening of this conference, the Relief Society held dedicatory services of the new Relief Society home. They have been crowded, and have had to work in the congested hallways, stacked with boxes, to prepare sacred clothing. They have been forced to store away mementos and gifts because they had no room for them—gifts presented to them by lovers of the truth. Now they have a home in which these gifts may be properly displayed.

What is more, the dedication of this home has given room now to the other auxiliaries who are crowded, inconvenienced in their efforts to serve the Church. The removal of the Relief Society from their old quarters to the new will relieve the congested quarters of the other auxiliaries. We suggest to these auxiliaries that they continue as best they can. Committees are now working on plans to help you that you may have more room. In the meantime, work as best you can until the opportunity comes to give you also more room.

There are some others to whom I wish to express gratitude. We have not heard from them. They are the men and women throughout the entire Church who are contributing of their time and means to the advancement of the truth, not just in teaching, but in genuine service in many ways. Some of these are struggling to make their own living. Some of them are wealthy men and women who have retired, who count their wealth in millions. It means something when a man of means will give to the Church his contribution of a million, and then say, "All my time is yours." It means something to leave your vocation, cross the ocean, and render service to the building of schools and temples. God bless those who are rendering this service, and bless you all, for I think we can say for the Church, "We are striving to be one, Father, as thou and thy Son are one."

"Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me," said our Lord and Savior. (Matt. 25:40.)

We are grateful to the Lord for the guiding influence of his Holy Spirit throughout this conference. There is a saying that "My soul rejects the use of words; Lord, look at my heart." We can sincerely say, as unitedly we express gratitude to him for his presence during this conference: "Lord, look at our hearts!"

God help us all to serve one another in his name for the good and advancement of the kingdom of God, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER ALMA SONNE

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve Apostles

I AM AWARE that Christianity does not mean the same to all people. There are many beliefs, many interpretations, numerous conflicts and much discussion on matters pertaining to religion. I do believe, however, that the best people in our country are interested in preserving spirituality in America. No nation can grow permanently great without God. History has so proven. The foundation of spirituality is faith in the true and living God. Without such faith man is forever in the shadows, for he has lost his greatest incentive to right living.

One hopeful feature of the modern times in which we live is a return to the Bible. From beginning to end this sacred volume is a message of faith. It is a powerful testimony of the existence of God, and the divine mission of Jesus Christ. Its religious significance is recognized in all Christian countries. History proves that the Holy Bible has irrevocably altered the lives of men and nations. It has touched deeply the very heart of humanity, its influence has reached into the literature of the world and its passages have been quoted by preachers and laymen alike.

I believe that Biblical research and intensive study of the sacred writing will some day contribute much to the intelligent use of the Bible. Scholarship and honest investigation will eventually remove all doubt respecting its divine authenticity, its trust-worthiness and reliability as a guide to human progress.

It is natural for most men to turn to the past for proved wisdom. The Bible contains the wisdom of the ages and the demonstrations of God's power to uplift the human family. From its pages come a transcendent comfort and a deeper sense of life's purposes. I refer to its teachings with the utmost confidence. "Search the scriptures," said Jesus, "for in them ye think ye have eternal life: and they are they which testify of me." (John 5:39.)

The greatest advocate and teacher of faith in God is Jesus Christ. During his ministry he demonstrated its power. He taught faith to the unrepentant. He urged those stricken with disease to exercise their faith as a means of receiving the desired blessing. He healed the sick, raised up the dying, restored sight to the blind and brought hope and comfort to the distressed.

Thomas Didymus, who was profoundly shaken by the scene at Golgotha, had lost his faith. He had said on one occasion that he was ready to die with his Master. But like the others, he ran away. He had become sullen, resentful and unbelieving. "... Except I shall see in his hands the print of the nails, and put my finger into the print of the nails, and thrust my hand into his side, I will not believe." (John 20:25.)

Like all skeptics he insisted on a material test. He would not believe his eyes. He must feel and touch. So-called "reality" was his stronghold. But the Master understood the texture of his mind. Thomas Didymus must be reassured and strengthened in his faith.

A week later, the disciples were in the same house as on the first occasion and Thomas was with them. Suddenly the Lord appeared. He greeted them all with the words "Peace be unto you." His eyes searched out the doubting Apostle. He called him by name and said: "Reach hither thy finger, and behold my hands; and reach hither thy hand, and thrust it into my side; and be not faithless, but believing. And Thomas answered and said unto him, My Lord and my God." (John 20:27-28.)

But to Thomas came the distinction of receiving the last, but not the least, of the Beatitudes. "Thomas, because thou hast seen me, thou hast believed: blessed are they that have not seen, and yet have believed." (John 20:29.) Is this not the very foundation of the Christian religion? Is it not fundamental to everything that Jesus taught and did? Thomas Didymus admitted his defeat. He was prepared at that moment to recognize his Lord as the Son of God, the Redeemer of the world. Thus fortified Thomas Didymus, like the others, could climb the difficult heights of self-denial without wavering or faltering. His faith had been restored, his doubts had fled and the foundation upon which he stood would never give way.

Faith opens the door to an understanding of God—His character and attributes. "And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent." (John 17:3.) These words came from the prayer which Jesus offered to his Father for the apostles and all others who believe on him.

Faith is constructive for it supplies the urge to do things. A people blessed with faith are progressive, and invincible before difficulties. Israel was delivered from the Egyptian bondage through the exercise of faith. The pioneers found their way to a home in the West and laid the foundation of a commonwealth in the desert because of their faith in God's promises. By the same token the Pilgrim fathers established their ideals of civil and religious liberty in America.

Without an abiding faith the soul has no anchorage and is "driven with the wind and tossed." (James 1:6.) Man's faith in God is an acknowledgment of God's power to save and exalt the human family. It recognizes the deityship of Jesus Christ and accepts his gospel as the plan of salvation. It puts man in possession of vital information to lead him onward and upward, and to inspire him to live in harmony with divine law.

Faith is a gift of God to be developed by prayerful and open-minded investigation. It sets up hope and courage and explores the realms of the unseen. A loss of faith is a tragic setback in the journey towards perfection.

Skepticism, on the other hand, has no vitality. It offers no program. It contradicts every claim to a life after death. It robs man of his belief in moral and spiritual values, and destroys his fondest hopes and noblest aspirations. Unbelief is negative and rejects the revelations of God however manifested.

We are surrounded by many mysterious manifestations in nature and the outside world which we cannot explain. And yet the miracles performed by Jesus and the Prophets have been a stumbling block to many whose faith is weak. These deniers of God's power have refused to accept the God of the Bible as the Creator and the Ruler of the universe. Jesus, Himself, proclaimed his supremacy when he said: "... All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world. Amen." (Matt. 28:18-20.) No Christian can read those words without having a sense of awe and reverence for the Redeemer of mankind. He is the light of the world. He has no parallel among the many who have aspired to world leadership.

Paul, the Apostle, was a product of Christ's gospel. The power of faith manifested itself in the complete conquest which it made of him. There is as much difference between Saul of Tarsus and Paul, the Apostle, as there is between night and day. He came at a juncture in the Christian movement when he was most needed. His call to service in the ministry was unexpected for he was already listed with the enemies of the cause he later represented. His entire life from the day of his conversion, reflected an unconquerable faith, a firm conviction and an unshakable testimony which has lived for centuries.

His second letter to Timothy, which may have been his last, reveals his anxiety and concern for those who had joined the faith. The letter was written from his dungeon in Rome, where he was a prisoner for the gospel's sake. He begs Timothy to come to him and to bring a cloak which he had left behind in one of his missionary journeys. He also asks for books and parchments to satisfy his yearning for knowledge and studies which he had pursued during his years of missionary work. I quote from his epistle. "... for I know whom I have believed, and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him against that day." (II Tim. 1:12.) What could be more reassuring?

How does the letter end? I read the closing words: "For I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight,

I have finished my course, I have kept the faith: Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day: and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." (II Tim. 4:6-9.)

Those words are not the strain of the vanquished. A few days later, no doubt, he was put to death by Nero, a man stained with every crime and steeped in every vice.

Prayer is a manifestation of Faith. Every spiritual truth and all religious attainments have been achieved through prayer. It is an avenue of enlightenment. In his utmost extremity man is helpless and hopeless without God. Thoroughly humbled, he kneels in prayer and comes away triumphant. He does what is humanly impossible. Prayer has given stimulus and effectiveness to his strivings.

The hour has come to restore simple worship, family devotion in the home, a prayerful approach to daily problems, the landmarks of faith and a sense of God's eternal laws.

When the Master gathered his disciples at the foot of the Mount and delivered his magnificent Sermon to them, He taught them how to pray. "... enter into thy closet," said He, "and when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father which is in secret; and thy Father which seeth in secret, shall reward thee openly." (Matt. 6:6.) The prayer of faith is a personal communion with God. It is the pathway to power. It is the road to deliverance and contentment.

(The Choir sang: "The Voice of God Again is Heard."—Stephens.)

Announcer: The Tabernacle Choir sings next on this Church of the Air service Harriet Beecher Stowe's words of the glorious assurance of everlasting life: "When sinks the soul, subdued by toil, to slumber, its closing eyes look up to Thee in prayer; Sweet the repose beneath Thy wings o'er shading, but sweeter still to wake and find Thee there. So shall it be at last in that bright morning, when the soul waketh and life's shadows flee. Oh, in that hour, fairer than daylight's dawning, Shall rise the glorious thought, I am with Thee."

(The Choir sang: "Still, Still with Thee."—Shelley.)

Music: Organ and humming choir: "Sweet Is the Work."

Announcer: You have been attending CBS Radio's Church of the Air. Today's service, in connection with the Semi-annual General Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, came to you transcribed from the Mormon Tabernacle on Temple Square through the facilities of Station KSL in Salt Lake City, Utah. Our speaker was Elder Alma Sonne, business and civic leader, and Assistant to the Council of the Twelve Apostles of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Music was by the Tabernacle Choir, directed by J. Spencer Cornwall. Alexander Schreiner was at the organ.

SALT LAKE TABERNACLE CHOIR AND ORGAN BROADCAST

The following broadcast, written and announced by Richard L. Evans, and originating with Station KSL, Salt Lake City, was presented from 9:30 to 10:00 a.m. Sunday, October 7, 1956, through the courtesy and facilities of the Columbia Broadcasting System's network, throughout the United States, parts of Canada, and through other facilities, to several points overseas. The broadcast was as follows:

(The organ played, "As the Dew From Heaven Distilling," and on signal the Choir and organ broke into the hymn, "Gently Raise the Sacred Strain," singing the words to the end of the second line, and humming to end of verse for announcer's background.)

Announcer: Once more we welcome you within these walls with music and the spoken word from the Crossroads of the West.

The CBS Radio Network and its affiliated stations bring you at this hour another presentation from Temple Square in Salt Lake City, with J. Spencer Cornwall conducting the Tabernacle Choir, Alexander Schreiner, Tabernacle Organist, and the spoken word by Richard Evans.

We begin today with Cyril Jenkins' impressive musical setting for the unforgettable account of the Savior's silencing of the wind and the waves, with words paraphrased from a New Testament text: "Fierce raged the tempest o'er the deep, Watch did Thine anxious servants keep, But thou wast wrapped in guileless sleep, Calm and still. 'Save, Lord, we perish,' was their cry, 'O save us in our agony!' Thy word above the storm rose high, 'Peace, be still,' 'Peace, be still.' The wild winds hushed; the angry deep sank, like a little child to sleep. The sullen billows ceased to leap, At Thy will. So, when our life is clouded o'er, and stormwinds drift us from the shore, Say, lest we sink to rise no more, 'Peace, be still.'"

(The Choir sang: "Fierce Raged the Tempest."—Jenkins.)

Announcer: Alexander Schreiner turns first today on Temple Square to the urgent, impelling movement of the "Toccata in B Minor," by Gigout.

(Organ selection: "Toccata in B Minor."—Gigout.)

Announcer: And now the women's chorus of the Choir sings one of Robert Schumann's tender songs, with words suggested by Heinrich Heine: "How like unto a flower thou art; so good, so true . . . oh, may the angels guard thee."

(The Women's Chorus of the Choir sang: "How Like Unto a Flower."—Schumann-Cain.)

Announcer: The Tabernacle Choir turns next to music from the Messiah with the words of the Master paraphrased from Matthew: "His yoke is easy; his burden is light."

(The Choir sang: "His Yoke is Easy."—Handel.)

Announcer: Dr. Schreiner brings now to this hour, a delicate and distinctive mood in music by Fannie Dillon: "Woodland Flute Call."

(Organ selection: "Woodland Flute Call."—Dillon.)

Announcer:

There comes to mind the recent remark of a young man facing some current problems and pressures: It was the utterance of one awakening to reality: "There certainly are a lot of decisions," he said. This is an awareness we all come to. There certainly are a lot of decisions. The very essence of life concerns decisions—the matter of making choices. Some decisions should, of course, take time; some should wait for matters to mature. But there are some decisions that could take too much time—some that we could wrestle with too long, and to no good purpose. There are some choices we should decide swiftly—and then let them alone. And we could simplify many decisions by separating them into two convenient categories: decisions of principle and decisions of preference. As to decisions of principle, we shouldn't really waste much time on clear-cut questions of right and wrong. "Thou shalt not steal," for example, is quite clear-cut. "Thou shalt not bear false witness" is quite clear-cut. "Thou shalt not commit adultery" is quite clear-cut. Many such decisions are clearly covered by the commandments, and we could waste a whole lifetime wrestling with what ought to be more or less automatic. (Being without standards in making such decisions would be like trying to do business without standards of weight or money or measure. Suppose we didn't have an inch or a foot or a dollar—or a pint or a pound—and had to quibble about every length and measure and amount!) The decisions of principle, we repeat, should be more or less automatic. In this we are reminded of what Mencius said in one strong, short sentence: "Let men decide firmly what they will not do, and they will be free to do vigorously what they ought to do."<sup>1</sup> And now as to decisions of preference—as to what suit we should select, or what course we should study, what job we should take: For such decisions we have to consider ourselves, our qualifications, our personal preferences, and those of others also, and, in the more weighty matters, thoughtfully, prayerfully, think things through. In the matter of making decisions, there is no easy all-inclusive answer, but at least some of the essential decision can be somewhat simplified if we distinguish between decisions of principle and decisions of preference, and then have the courage and the character swiftly to settle the decisions of principle, and not waste time wrestling with clear-cut matters of right and wrong. "Let men decide firmly what they will not do, and they will be free to do vigorously what they ought to do."

(Organ selection: "He Died, the Great Redeemer Died."—Careless.)

Announcer: With Alexander Schreiner at the organ we have heard a hymn melody by George Careless which takes its title from the words of Isaac Watts: "He Died, the Great Redeemer Died."

And now with the earnest conviction of these scriptural words, the Choir closes with worshipful and moving music from the Messiah: "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain and hath redeemed us to God. . . . Blessing and honor, Glory and pow'r be unto Him that sitteth upon the throne and unto the Lamb forever and ever."

(The Choir sang: "Worthy is the Lamb."—Handel.)

Announcer: Once more we leave you within the shadows of the everlasting hills. May peace be with you, this day—and always.

This concludes the 1416th presentation continuing the 28th year of this traditional broadcast from the Mormon Tabernacle on Temple Square, brought to you by CBS Radio and its affiliated stations, originating with Radio Station KSL in Salt Lake City.

J. Spencer Cornwall conducted the Tabernacle Choir with its three hundred seventy-five voices. Alexander Schreiner was at the organ. The spoken word by Richard Evans.

In another seven days, at this same hour, music and the spoken word will be heard once more from the Crossroads of the West.

FIRST DAY

MORNING MEETING

The opening session of the Conference commenced promptly at 10 o'clock a.m., Friday, April 5, 1957, in the great Tabernacle, with President David O. McKay presiding and conducting the services.

The Brigham Young University Combined Choruses furnished the choral music for this session.

President McKay made the following introductory remarks:

President David O. McKay:

To the large audience assembled in the Tabernacle, the overflow gathering in the Assembly Hall and Barratt Hall, and to all those listening in over radio and television, in behalf of the First Presidency, Council of the Twelve, and other General Authorities, we bid you a hearty welcome to this, the One Hundred Twenty-Seventh Annual Conference of the Church.

The services this morning are being broadcast and televised over KSL-TV Channel 5, Salt Lake City, and are being heard over Radio Station KSL, and by special arrangements over three television stations in Idaho. They are likewise being heard over nine radio stations in Utah and Nevada. The names of these stations have already been announced to the television and radio audiences. We desire most appreciatively to express our gratitude to these various radio and television stations for their courtesy in making available their time and facilities for these broadcasts. It is truly a great service.

To those who are assembled in person, and to the untold thousands comprising the television and radio audiences, we repeat our hearty welcome, and pray that our souls may be uplifted and inspired by assembling together in this great Conference of the Church. We greet the young people and their leaders from the Brigham Young University who are here to furnish music for us. It is a joy to have you folks present.

We note these beautiful calla lilies and daffodils. For the eleventh consecutive year the Oakland-Berkeley Stake high priests' quorum has graciously furnished us flowers to beautify this building during the sessions of Conference. These calla lilies are messengers of their affection and loyal support. We thank the members of the Oakland-Berkeley Stake for this loving service. These beautiful daffodils have come from the Puyallup Valley Daffodil Festival, Inc., through the Tacoma Stake. We also thank these people for their remembrance. From the Phoenix and East Phoenix Stakes, we have flowers which have been plucked from a profusion of beautiful spring flowers which are now in full bloom in Arizona. The stocks are especially beautiful. We wish to express our thanks to President Junius E. Driggs and President David E. Heywood and the members of the Church in that area for this fine and thoughtful remembrance. The Bird of Paradise flowers have come from the Los Angeles Temple grounds. Elder A. Raymond Summers brought them with him. We acknowledge the receipt also of flowers sent by individuals, and thank them for their remembrance.

We have telegrams from mission presidents who cannot be here, and notice from servicemen—former missionaries—from Fort Bliss, Texas. They will arrive here this morning for this session. We welcome them. Down in New Zealand President Ballif sends the following: "At the time of April Conference our thoughts are definitely turned to the great meetings that occur at the center stake of the Church. The missionaries, both proselyting and labor missionaries, together with all the Saints in New Zealand, join in sending Aloha Nui to all assembled, and assure you of our faith and prayers for the health and well-being of our leadership and the continued progress of the Church. We are translating our testimonies into an intensive missionary program, and the completion of a great building project for which we express our gratitude to all of the members of the Church." Ariel S. Ballif, Mission President.

Friday, April 5

First Day

I wish to announce also that we have greetings from others, but time will not permit us to read them. Please take note, temple presidents, that there will be a meeting of all temple presidents in the annex of the Salt Lake Temple Sunday, April 7, at 4:30 p.m.

We acknowledge the presence of the following distinguished visitors,—there may be others whom we cannot see: Brother Ezra Taft Benson, a member of the Council of the Twelve, and also a member of the Cabinet of the United States Government; Lamont Toronto, Secretary of State; Adiel F. Stewart, Mayor of Salt Lake City; Ernest L. Wilkinson, president of Brigham Young University; President A. Ray Olpin of the University of Utah; President John L. Clarke of Ricks College; President Arthur F. Bruhn of Dixie College; Dr. Elliott Cameron, director of Snow College; Dr. M. Lynn Bennion, superintendent of Salt Lake City Schools. All are welcome, and we trust that you will share in the spiritual experience which we all hope to enjoy during the coming Conference.

The opening song by the Brigham Young University Combined Choruses will be, "He Watching Over Israel."

I wish to acknowledge the presence also of the mission presidents in the United States, Mexico, and Canada, all of whom are present; also the presidencies of stakes, bishoprics of wards, from all nearby states and countries.

After the Chorus sings, "He Watching Over Israel," the invocation will be offered by Elder Albert Leland Bott, president of the Mount Ogden Stake.

The Chorus will now sing.

Singing by the Brigham Young University Combined Choruses, Norman Gulbrandsen conducting, "He Watching Over Israel."

Albert Leland Bott, president of the Mount Ogden Stake, offered the invocation.

President David O. McKay:

The invocation just offered was by President Albert Leland Bott of the Mount Ogden Stake. The Brigham Young University Combined Chorus will now sing, "O How Lovely Was the Morning," arranged by Elder Crawford Gates, conducted by Elder Norman Gulbrandsen.

The Brigham Young University Combined Choruses sang, "O, How Lovely Was The Morning."

PRESIDENT DAVID O. MCKAY

4/57

MY BELOVED brethren and sisters, this is one of the most humbling experiences of my life. In anticipation of this moment I have spent many hours of thought and many hours of prayer. I think there is no experience in the world that makes one of the General Authorities, or any man who holds the priesthood, feel so dependent upon inspiration, as standing before a vast audience of members of the Church. I do pray for your sympathetic attention, and for the guidance of the Holy Spirit. It is a joy to meet with you, notwithstanding the sense of responsibility.

I have chosen as a text, to indicate a line of thought: "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." (Matt. 7:21.)

The thought is, as expressed by James: "But be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only." (James 1:22, italics added.) That applies particularly to each individual. Salvation is an individual affair. We are not saved as congregations, nor as groups, but we are saved as we come into the world as individuals, and the Lord's purpose is to save the individual, each being precious in his sight.

Before commenting further upon the theme, I desire to express commendation for the progress made by the Church and individual groups during the last six months and during the past year.

This has been another prosperous year for the Church. Increased faith and more active participation in Church activity are evidenced almost weekly by the reports of the General Authorities of their assigned visits throughout the stakes and missions. Some illustrative facts follow:

1. Regarding Sacrament Meetings: Attendance at Sacrament meetings during 1956 is the highest yet attained in the Church—15,000 more people attended last year than in 1955, and that was the highest percentage of attendance to date. From 1945 to 1955 there has been a gradual increase of attendance at Sacrament meetings of eleven percent.

2. Regarding Tithes and Offerings: Greater devotion is evident, also, in the increase of tithes and offerings. It appears that a larger proportion of the members are contributing a larger proportion of their incomes, the result being that tithes and offerings have increased during recent years substantially more than the growth in membership and the indicated increase in average incomes of the Saints. Those two items point to increased spirituality, the very object of our organization.

3. Regarding the Welfare Plan: We are grateful for the progress that has been made in the welfare plan. Hundreds of projects have been established, and bishops' storehouses equipped to supply in a helpful and dignified manner the needs of the poor. The priesthood generally and the Relief Society sisters have responded to this important work. We are especially grateful to the members of the general Church welfare committee, who have given direct supervision to this program for a period of over twenty years. The basic concepts of the welfare program have been tested and proved to be sound.

Nevertheless, we must constantly remind ourselves of the primary purpose of the plan, which is—First, to supply in a helpful and dignified manner food, clothing, and shelter to every person so in need.

Second, to assist men and women who, through misfortune, ill-luck, or disaster, find themselves without gainful employment, to become once again self-supporting.

Third, to increase among the members of the Church the true spirit of the brotherhood of Christ, having in mind in all their service the divine saying, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." (Matt. 25:40.)

4. Missionary Work: In 1956 there were 23,923 baptisms performed in foreign and stake missions, which is an increase of nine percent over the previous year.

5. Schools in Polynesia: I am sure you will be interested in the progress of the schools in Polynesia. The New Zealand College will be finished and ready for opening in February 1958. It is composed of an administration building, a student center building, which is made up of two full-scale gymnasiums, cafeteria, kitchen, student center, lounge, swimming pool, locker rooms, and an auditorium combined with the gymnasium which will seat 4500 people. There are five classroom wings which will accommodate 1000 day students, three girls' dormitories and three boys' dormitories, accommodating 600 students. I will not go into further detail, but I do wish to express a word of commendation to those who are working down there. I should name them, but there is one man and his wife, particularly, who deserve commendation, and that is Brother George R. Biesinger and his sweet wife. He has left his business here and devoted years to this project, and will continue to do so until the completion of the temple and the completion of these schools.

In Samoa, there are new additions to the Pesega School in Western Samoa. The school is completed also at Vaiola, Savaii, Samoa, and one at Sauniatu, Samoa. Another is now under construction at Mapusago, Samoa.

In Tonga at the Liahona College, two large wings to the boys' and girls' dormitories, a new classroom wing, a new dining hall with kitchen facilities combined, and dormitories for the men and women teachers are under construction.

In Hawaii, the new Junior College now being built at Laie, Oahu, will accommodate not fewer than 750 students. The large shop building and the main building are already nearing completion.

All of these school buildings of the South Pacific are being built by labor missionaries called from America, and local labor missionaries called from their respective homelands. The work is going forward in a completely satisfactory manner, and in all areas is on schedule. Commendation and appreciation are extended to the local labor missionaries and to the Saints who contribute to the sustenance of these labor missionaries in this vast building program, as well as to our labor missionary supervisors called from America.

6. Regarding Our Temples: Near Auckland, New Zealand, on December 22, 1956, another milestone in Church history was passed. Elder Hugh B. Brown, Assistant to the Council of the Twelve, under appointment from the First Presidency, conducted the services and officiated at the cornerstone laying ceremonies for the New Zealand Temple.

Cornerstone laying ceremonies for the London Temple will be held at New-chapel, Surrey County, England, May 11, 1957. Elder Richard L. Evans of the Council of the Twelve will officiate at the ceremonies. The ground for this temple was broken August 27, 1955.

Brethren and sisters, to partake of the spirit of faith and activity in the Church is inspiring. Membership therein is at once a privilege and a blessing.

Looking around us, we are convinced that we are living in an era of great progress, embracing wonderful inventions and scientific discoveries. Man's search for the unknown has led him out of the world of matter literally into the realm of space. He splits the atom, sets off horrifying hydrogen explosions, flies through space at a speed faster than sound, is taking steps to build satellites to accompany the earth in its revolutions. Many of the imaginations of Jules Verne are now commonplace realities. Flying to the moon is an achievement now considered possible.

The earth itself, figuratively speaking, is shrinking. The railroad, automobiles, airplanes, have made New York and San Francisco next-door neighbors, and Greenland and the South Pole only a few days apart!

But with all these things comes increased responsibility to every individual, man, woman, and child. New inventions bring greater opportunities, but demand more activity, more strength of character. Many years ago you and I read the following comment by Roger W. Babson, the great statistician:

"Although the airplane opens up boundless opportunities, it also threatens limitless perils. All depends upon whether we can match this flood of new material powers with an equal gain in spiritual forces. The coming generation can see in a minute more than the former generation could see in a week. The coming generation can outhear and outtravel the former generation. Horsepower has expanded beyond all dreams. But what about manpower? What about spiritual power, and the power of judgment, discretion, and self-control? Unless there is a development of character equal to this enlargement of physical forces there is sure trouble ahead. Twenty-five years ago an intoxicated man might tip the buggy over, but commonly the old horse would bring him home. Today a driver under the influence of liquor maims and kills. Tomorrow, therefore, is something to ponder over. Without moral progress in pace with physical progress the airplane will merely make dissipation more disastrous, immorality more widespread, and crime more efficient. One result of the automobile has been to put hell on wheels; the airplane will put hell on wings unless righteousness, too, is speeded up. On the development of character depends whether the airplane shall bring prosperity or calamity."

Along this same line also are the comments of Mr. A. Cressy Morrison, eminent scientist who, fearing "a period of regression for true civilization," says: "If we have read the signs of the times correctly, or even if we have exaggerated some of the symptoms, the only salvation for mankind will be found in religion. However, it must be a sound Christian religion, vitalized by its own primitive ideals; aware of the progress of science, rid of prejudice against fair speculative intelligence, and soaring high above frontiers. Never in her two thousand years has the Church had a more urgent call and a nobler opportunity to fulfill her obligations as the comforter and guide of humanity." That is from Man Does Not Stand Alone (p.

264), a book I commend to all earnest seekers after truth.

Well, as our text says, "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." (Matt. 7:21.)

Too many people in the world are sitting and giving only lip service to God; too many have forgotten him; too many are denying him; too many are crying, "Lord, Lord," but fail to follow his principles. Many of us through selfishness are lingering near the edge of the animal jungle where Nature's law demands us to do everything with self in view. Self-preservation is the first law of mortal life, but Jesus says, "He that findeth his life shall lose it; and he that loseth his life for my sake shall find it." (Ibid., 10:39.)

The first experience of our Savior after his baptism, and after having been acknowledged by his Father as his Only Begotten Son, was to triumph over selfishness on the Mount of Temptation.

Applicable today is Paul's admonition to the Philippians, given over nineteen hundred years ago:

"Wherefore, my beloved . . . [and that branch in Philippi was the first branch in Europe] work out your own salvation with fear and trembling. For it is God which worketh in you both to will and to do of his good pleasure.

"Do all things without murmurings and disputings:

"That ye may be blameless and harmless, the sons of God, without rebuke, in the midst of a crooked and perverse nation, among whom ye shine as lights in the world." (Phil. 2:12-15.)

An outstanding doctrine of the Church is that each individual carries the responsibility to work out his own salvation, and salvation is a process of gradual development. The Church does not accept the doctrine that a mere murmured belief in Jesus Christ is all that is necessary. A man may say he believes, but if he does nothing to make that belief or faith a moving power to do, to accomplish, to produce soul growth, his professing will avail him nothing. "Work out your own salvation" is an exhortation to demonstrate by activity, by thoughtful, obedient effort the reality of faith. But this must be done with a consciousness that absolute dependence upon self may produce pride and weakness that will bring failure. With "fear and trembling" we should seek the strength and grace of God for inspiration to obtain the final victory.

To work out one's salvation is not to sit idly by dreaming and yearning for God miraculously to thrust bounteous blessings into our laps. It is to perform daily, hourly, momentarily, if necessary, the immediate task or duty at hand, and to continue happily in such performance as the years come and go, leaving the fruits of such labors either for self or for others to be bestowed as a just and beneficent Father may determine.

I am not unmindful of the scripture that declares: "by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God." (Ephesians 2:8.) That is absolutely true, for man in his taking upon himself mortality was impotent to save himself. When left to grope in a natural state, he would have become, and did become, so we are told in modern scripture, "carnal, sensual, and devilish, by nature." (Alma 42:10.) But the Lord, through his grace, appeared to man, gave him the gospel or eternal plan whereby he might rise above the carnal and selfish things of life and obtain spiritual perfection. But he must rise by his own efforts and he must walk by faith.

"He who would ascend the stairway leading upward to eternal life must tread it step by step from the base stone to the summit of its flight. Not a single stair can be missed, not one duty neglected, if the climber would avoid danger and delay and arrive with all safety and expedition at the topmost landing of the celestial exaltation." The responsibility is upon each individual to choose the path of righteousness, of faithfulness and duty to fellow men. If he choose otherwise and as a result meets failure, misery, and death, he alone is to blame. President Brigham Young, speaking on this thought, once said:

"If Brother Brigham should take a wrong track and be shut out of the kingdom of heaven, no person will be to blame but Brother Brigham. I am the only being in heaven, earth, or hell, that can be blamed. This will equally apply to every Latter-day Saint. Salvation is an individual operation. I am the only person that can possibly save myself. When salvation is sent to me, I can reject or receive it. In receiving it, I yield implicit obedience and submission to its great Author throughout my life, and to those whom he shall appoint to instruct me; in rejecting it, I follow the dictates of my own will in preference to the will of my Creator."

Friday, April 5

First Day

In thus emphasizing individual effort, I am not unmindful of the necessity of co-operation.

"There is a destiny which makes us brothers,

None lives to self alone;

All that we send into the lives of others Comes back into our own."

—Edwin Markham*

A single, struggling individual may be stalled with his heavy load even as he begins to climb the hill before him. To reach the top unaided is an impossibility. With a little help from fellow travelers, quorums, or wards, he makes the grade and goes on his way in gratitude and rejoicing.

This is in harmony with the teachings of Jesus, "who sought to perfect society, not by popular agitation or by reorganization, but by perfecting the individual. He recognized the fatal fallacy in the dream of those who hoped to make a perfect state out of imperfect individuals. The ideal social state, which he described as the kingdom of God, is a commonwealth in which all men are united and governed by a commanding love both for God and for their neighbors."

The present-day turmoil and bitter strivings threaten to undermine basic foundations of Christian relationship. Liberty, freedom of speech, self-government, faith in God, and particularly faith in the efficacy of the restored gospel of Jesus Christ, are facing a bombardment from the ranks of error such as the world has seldom if ever witnessed.

Too many men quail under the impending onslaught, and cry vainly, "What can we do?" To members of the Church, to men everywhere, the Church answers, "Keep the commandments of God," as named specifically, for example, by the Prophet Nephi:

"... God hath given a commandment that all men should have charity, which charity is love. And except they should have charity they were nothing. . . .

"And again, the Lord God hath commanded that men should not murder; that they should not lie; that they should not steal; that they should not take the name of the Lord their God in vain; that they should not envy; that they should not have malice; that they should not contend one with another; that they should not commit whoredoms; and that they should do none of these things; for whoso doeth them shall perish." (2 Nephi 26:30, 32.) I commend this chapter to you.

Avoidance of Intoxicating Liquor: In this dispensation the Lord has warned mankind against the use of intoxicating liquors. In violation of that warning alcoholism is now a national problem. Americans spend the staggering sum of more than nine billion dollars every year for alcoholic beverages. In addition, lost wages, crime, and accidents traced to alcoholism cost Americans another $667,000,000 a year. (Facts given by Dr. Chester A. Winyard in "Alcohol and Human Tissues." See Deseret News, February 10, 1954.)

"Alcoholism has become a major public health problem, for it is 155 times more prevalent than polio, 11 times more prevalent than tuberculosis, and 6 times more prevalent than cancer. If the number of alcoholics continues to increase during the next ten years as it has during the past ten years, alcoholism will soon affect every family in the United States." So says a pamphlet published by the National Committee for the Prevention of Alcoholism, Washington, D. C., July 22-August 2, 1956.

Over a hundred years ago the Lord said through the Prophet Joseph Smith that "tobacco . . . is not good for man." (D & C 89:8.) Luther Burbank in the "Dearborn Independent" says:

"How much would you know about tobacco if, upon the tombstone of every one killed by it were inscribed, 'Killed by tobacco'?"

"You would know a lot more about it than you do now, but you would not know all, because tobacco does more than kill. It half-kills. It has its victims in the cemeteries and in the streets. It is bad enough to be dead, but it is a question if it is not sometimes worse to be half-dead,—to be nervous, irritable, unable to sleep well, with efficiency cut in two and vitality ready to snap at the first great strain. This seems like exaggeration. It isn't! It is well within the truth.

"Let me tell you how tobacco kills. Smokers do not all drop dead around the cigar lighters in tobacco stores. They go away and, years later, die of something else. From the tobacco trust's point of view, that is one of the finest things about tobacco. The victims do not die on the premises, even when sold the worst cigars. They go away, and when they die, the doctors certify that they died of something else,—pneumonia, heart disease, typhoid fever, or what not.

"In other words, tobacco kills indirectly and escapes the blame," confirming what the Prophet Joseph said before, "tobacco . . . is not good for man."

"Approximately 38,000,000 Americans are regular cigaret smokers, although a million and a half have quit smoking entirely in the last eighteen months, according to estimates based on a survey made by the US Bureau of the Census for the National Cancer Institute of the Public Health Service, Department of Health, Education, and Welfare. The 38,000,000 cigaret smokers include 25,000,000 men and 13,000,000 women." (See "America's Smoking Habits," THE IMPROVEMENT ERA, April 1957.)

In the Church no teacher who indulges in smoking should be permitted to teach our children in Primary and Sunday School. Through the Prophet Joseph the Lord gave the Word of Wisdom to all. It is time, in the light of revelation and the discoveries of science, that this Church upholds its principles regarding these things.

The best way to prevent indulgence in these harmful habits is to refuse to tamper with them. Let each youth decline the first invitation to indulge, remembering that "The soul that is worth the honor of earth, is the soul that resists desire."

"Wherefore, now let every man learn his duty, and to act in the office in which he is appointed, in all diligence.

"He that is slothful shall not be counted worthy to stand, and he that learns not his duty and shows himself not approved shall not be counted worthy to stand." (D & C 107:99-100.)

The Church is thriving, as indicated in my opening remarks. Let us rejoice in her progress. To see the discoveries of science and to be the recipients of inventions and new appliances as they relieve daily life of former drudgery give hope and encouragement; but to overcome difficulties, to control temper, to subdue and conquer passion, in whatever form, to feel in one's heart a growing love for truth and for one's fellow men, to sense a nearness to God our Father, and to recognize the whisperings of his voice through the Holy Spirit, fill the soul with joy and make life worth living.

That obedience to the principles of the restored gospel gives to man these blessings, I testify in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Our next speaker will be Elder Clifford E. Young, Assistant to the Twelve. He will be followed by Elder Richard L. Evans.

ELDER CLIFFORD E. YOUNG

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve Apostles

I REALIZE, my brethren and sisters, that every week we meet with people whom you represent. You are a cross section of the stakes and the missions where we from time to time visit. You are always so kind and considerate of our every need. Yet I do not know why I should feel timid as I stand here this morning to attempt to say just a few words, and especially after this impressive address by President McKay. It is a challenging position, and I do ask for an interest in your faith and prayers.

I can only suggest a few things in the short time allotted. You remember in reading the eighth chapter of John, that Jesus went into the temple and "... all the people came unto him; and he sat down, and taught them." Then the scribes and the Pharisees, the doubting scribes and Pharisees, brought to him a woman taken in sin. He rebuked them by telling them if they were without sin they could condemn, but they had no right to condemn unless they were without sin. (See John 8.) He was reaffirming the truth taught to his disciples as he sat with them on the mount, when he said:

Judge not, that ye be not judged.

For with what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged: and with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again. (Matt. 7:1-2.)

Jesus was teaching them a fundamental truth. He was not condoning sin, but he was emphasizing this truth to those scribes and Pharisees who would trap him, who would question whether or not he accepted the law. They were not concerned about the sin; they were more concerned about making good their own argument and establishing themselves in their position with him, because they did attempt to argue, if you will read the chapter, but he was equal to their seeming cleverness.

Then we are told he continued to teach them that he was "the light of the world: he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life." (John 8:12.) Then many believed and to those who believed, he said:

... If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed;

And ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free. (Ibid., 8:31-32.)

My brethren and sisters, this brings so forcibly to us the importance of the message we have listened to this morning. We have heard the truth. The truth will make us free if we will just permit it to.

You remember that when the Savior stood before Pilate, Pilate wanted to set the Savior free. He had sent him to Herod, but Herod, not willing to take the responsibility other than to scourge him, to mock him, had sent him back to Pilate. Pilate, impressed that there was something about the Nazarene that transcended human power, his own power of understanding, would have set him free. He questioned him, and among the questions was, "What is truth?" (Ibid., 18:38.) There is no record of the answer. I would that we had the complete record. Without any doubt the Savior did answer him. But in this day the Savior has said:

The Spirit of truth is of God. I am the Spirit of truth, and John bore record of me, saying: He received a fulness of truth, yea, even of all truth;

And no man receiveth a fulness unless he keepeth his commandments.

He that keepeth his commandments receiveth truth and light, until he is glorified in truth and knoweth all things. (D & C 93:26-28.)

We have heard the truth this morning. We hear it from this pulpit conference after conference. We read about it.

Do we apply it in our lives? If we do, then we sense that degree of freedom to which we apply it, and there are so many ways, my brethren and sisters, that we can apply it.

We have it exemplified in the field of science. Human suffering is being alleviated by the unselfish efforts of men and women who are devoting their time unselfishly, trying to discover the causes of disease and find a remedy.

I marvel as I travel about in meeting some of our own brethren, great men, devoting their time unselfishly in the fields of science whereby they may relieve human suffering, trying to find truth, that mankind may be free.

You know, in this Church we have stake presidents who devote their time generously to their labors in their stakes, and yet day after day work in the laboratories, seeking to find the source of some of the diseases that so far have baffled the medical world. I honor them. God bless them for the great work they are doing.

In all of these fields, "know the truth." I think of our young people—President

McKay has touched on this so forcibly—what it would mean to our young people if they could avoid some of these pitfalls, if they could know the truth and would live the truth.

I was reading recently a talk by the eminent English scientist and surgeon, Dr. William Osler. He has gone now—but a generation ago he was known all over the world for his great work. England claims him; she knighted him. He was born in Canada. He spent a good deal of time in this country. Some of our own local men of a generation ago knew him well. He spent fifteen years at Johns Hopkins. In a talk he gave before the students of Yale University in 1913, his thesis was to “live today your fullest, live the truth today.” Never mind yesterday, it is past. You cannot do much about it. But you can live today and that will prepare you for tomorrow.

Among other things he cautioned the men to whom he was talking, on the excessive use of liquor—he might have said to avoid it entirely—and the excessive use of tobacco, and he pointed out the evils of these things to which Brother McKay has alluded.

“If you will avoid these,” he said, “You will have a clear mind. Your vision will be clear and keen. It will add to your happiness. It will make today a better day.”

I would that we could emphasize that among our own people, our young people especially, to help them to live today and to get all that they can out of life. We have the truth, and in living it, we may be free.

Now there is one more thing—I have mentioned it here from this pulpit before, and I come in contact with it so often that I am going to repeat it. I think our young people, as they start out in life, should exercise caution. We have been taught from this pulpit time and time again to avoid obligations that we cannot meet, and yet many of our people find themselves in bondage. They have not lived the truth, hence they are not free. They are in bondage. All young boys and girls who start out in life owe it to themselves and to their children, just as fast as they can, to see that their homes are their own. I know it is a struggle. I know from my own experience, and I know what debt means.

Brigham Young warned us against debt. And we heard President Grant from this pulpit say what it had done for him, the struggle he had had, but he also said this, against the counsel of some of his friends: “I never wavered in my obligations to the Lord during it all, and because of that I was able to pay my obligations.” And he promised the people that if they would be true to their tithes and their offerings, not excuse themselves on the ground of debt, they would be able to be free. I accept that as a truth, and I can bear testimony to it, my brethren and sisters.

So this “knowing the truth” is an everyday principle. It is a principle we can live every day in our lives. It has a practical application.

Then there is the spiritual side of it all. When Jesus was talking to his disciples, he was also reminding them that he and the Father were one. In this same chapter to which I referred, he pointed out that he and the Father bore witness of this eternal truth that he was the Son of God, the Redeemer of the world. They did not believe it, but it was an eternal truth just the same.

Think what that means—to know that truth. We are nearing Easter, which will be celebrated with all the pageantry and tradition typical of it. But underlying it all will be the fundamental truths that Jesus was the Christ, the Redeemer of the world, the Savior; that there is a continuity of life; that life does not end with death. What blessed concepts! And they are true and God will bear witness to our souls these truths, if we will seek to know. He has given us the way.

The Lord help us that we may know the truth, that we may be free, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Elder Clifford E. Young, Assistant to the Council of the Twelve, has just spoken to us. Elder Richard L. Evans of the Council of the Twelve will be our next speaker.

ELDER RICHARD L. EVANS

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

WITH YOU, my brethren and sisters, I have been moved and sobered and satisfied by the opening address of our beloved President, and his utterance as to the inescapable importance of personal responsibility.

Beyond all that our Savior did for us in his saving grace, without which there would be no hope of salvation for any of us, beyond all this, it is clearly up to each of us, in the freedom God has given us, and in the right and responsibility of choice which he has placed everlastingly before us, what we will do with our lives.

Our President's remarks call to mind a sentence from, I think, Viscount John Morley, in which he said that "no man can climb out beyond the limitations of his own character." It is everlastingly and basically true: No man can rise above the limitations of his own character.

Sometimes we would like to believe that there is less responsibility upon us than there is for the outcome of our lives. I am reminded of the story of a small lad who came home from school and accosted his father, saying: "Dad, here is my report card. It's bad again. What do you think is wrong with me? Heredity or environment?" There are some other alternatives that he had not thought of! (He might have thought of studying!)

There are some considerations that all of us must soberly think of in accepting personal responsibility for the keeping of the commandments, for the choices we make, for how we use the freedom God has given us, for he will not force any of us to become what we are not willing to pay the price of becoming.

Some days ago I spent some time with a young man who was troubled. He did not like the way our Father in heaven was running the world. He said, "We need to know more."

Well, I agreed with him. We do need to know more. I should like to know all the answers. I am sure we all would. But, I said, "Let us begin with what we know. I think we can agree that there are some things we do know. What are we doing with them? Let us begin with the Ten Commandments, and also the two great commandments:

Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind.

This is the first and great commandment. And the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself. (Matthew 22:37-39.)

Do you know anyone who is keeping them in their fullness? Just for example, do you know anyone who literally and always loves his neighbor as himself? I agree we need to know more, but also we need more to use more of what we do know."

The Lord has set up the objectives. He has given us a few simple rules. He has given us freedom; he has given us the right of choice, and what we shall become will depend, beyond his saving grace, on what we do with what we know.

And in replying to this young man, I could not refrain from observing that even though I were to agree with him that there are some things I would do differently from my point of view. I reminded him that we—he and I—cannot make a worm, and we cannot make a blade of grass, and who were we to dictate to the Creator in our small wisdom?

One thing he was troubled about was the necessity for faith: Why could he not know by sight or sound of the existence of God himself. "Why can't I see him? Why doesn't he tell these things to me? Why do I have to live by faith?"

There are people who have not had to live by faith, who have found themselves in serious trouble. There are those to whom the Lord God has spoken, who have made grievous errors.

Let us take the case of Lucifer, who lived with his Father. He did not have to have faith as to the existence of his Father in heaven, but what did his knowledge do for him? He was brilliant, but he lacked humility. He was arrogant and overly ambitious. He wanted to usurp his Father's power, and he wanted to do things in his own way. He wanted to change the commandments, to change the rules, and to run the kingdom according to his own pleasure and convenience, and his own view of things. So it is not always just not knowing that gets in our way. With his brilliance, humility would have saved Lucifer, but that he did not seem to have.

Now President McKay has invited our attention to some things specifically concerning the use of which we have been cautioned against, and concerning certain practices and dangers, and concerning the commandments which have been given to us plainly and clearly, all of which bring before all of us the question, often disputed, as to what is right and what is wrong:

Often we hear it argued that if a person does only those things which harm himself, he has a perfect right to do so, since there is no harm done except to himself.

Specifically with reference to the use of some things—some of which President McKay has mentioned this morning—I think we can lay down a line of right and wrong quite clearly, more clearly than we sometimes suppose. I think that whatever is detrimental to health and happiness, or whatever impairs effectiveness or efficiency, is clearly wrong, morally wrong, spiritually wrong, as well as physically wrong, and I do not believe that a person harms only himself in the use of what he calls his right to live his life as he pleases.

In the first place, if he impairs his own efficiency he is robbing his loved ones, and the world, of some things that he might have produced or done for them. Secondly, if he impairs his health, he is placing a burden on others, or the possibility of that burden—and no man can know that he is not going to place that burden upon other people. So, I say again, the line seems to be rather sharply drawn, or can be: that when we do those things that are harmful to us or to others, or which impair our efficiency or that of others, clearly we are doing that which is wrong. It is more than just a personal choice. It becomes a concern for everyone. It does become a moral matter—a matter of commandment—and rightly so.

The glory of God is intelligence, and I cannot conceive of man's being accounted as being intelligent if he does that to himself or to others which impairs health and happiness and effectiveness and efficiency. Indeed, all the commandments are designed to bring about these very things: our health and happiness, and peace and progress, and effectiveness here and hereafter, limitlessly; and we need to keep that humility which is ever called for in the making of our choices and the living of our lives.

And even if we sometimes think we would run the world differently, in our limited understanding, we know so little with all we know. We still cannot answer most, if any, of the questions asked of Job many centuries ago, when the Lord God answered Job out of the whirlwind and said,

Where wast thou when I laid the foundations of the earth? declare, if thou hast understanding. . . . Hast thou entered into the springs of the sea? . . . Have the gates of death been opened unto thee? or hast thou seen the doors of the shadow of death? . . . declare if thou knowest it all. Where is the way where light dwelleth? and as for darkness, where is the place thereof, . . . Who hath put wisdom in the inward parts?

We might ask it another way. Who has given the body the wisdom to heal itself?—or who has placed instinct in animals—

Who hath given understanding to the heart?

. . . Who provideth for the raven his food?

. . . Gavest thou the goodly wings unto the peacocks? or wings and feathers unto the ostrich?

Which leaveth her eggs in the earth, and warmeth them in dust,

. . . Hast thou given the horse strength?

. . . Doth the hawk fly by thy wisdom, and stretch her wings toward the south?

Doth the eagle mount up at thy command, and make her nest on high?

Shall he that contendeth with the Almighty instruct him? He that reproveth God, let him answer it. (See Job 38-40.)

Life is short at best. Even if we should live twice as long as our present expectancy, it would still be short. We should have our minds and hearts and the whole intent of our souls on the things that give us health and happiness and effectiveness here, and which will lead to limitless progress hereafter, and there are clear-cut ways of discerning the difference between right and wrong. I pray that we may find them and live by them, and that our Father's purposes and promises concerning each of us may be realized by the wisdom of our choices and by the acceptance of this personal responsibility of which President McKay has spoken. For beyond our Savior's saving grace no one stands between us and our own salvation—or exaltation. I pray that we may find it, and that we may be part of that glorious homecoming which it is our Father's hope and purpose to bring about for the whole human family.

Friday, April 5

First Day

God bless you and be with you, and with us all in the use of our freedom, and in the acceptance of the challenge and trust which our President has given unto us this day in meeting and living by this personal responsibility, and making our choices wisely so that all that our Father intends for each of us may be ours in his presence and in his kingdom with our loved ones. In Jesus' name. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

You have just heard Elder Richard L. Evans of the Council of the Twelve. The Choir and Congregation will now sing "High On The Mountain Top," two verses. Following the singing, Elder LeGrand Richards will speak to us.

The Combined Choruses and the congregation joined in singing the hymn, "High On The Mountain Top."

President David O. McKay:

Elder LeGrand Richards of the Council of the Twelve will now address us.

ELDER LEGRAND RICHARDS

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

I AM SURE OUR hearts have all been stirred this morning with appreciation for being privileged to be members of this great Church, for our great leader and the power of his leadership, and for these our Brethren, and I rejoice in being with you, in being a part of this great latter-day gospel movement.

The President referred in his talk this morning to the great progress that is being made and has been made in the world scientifically, the comforts that we enjoy, the powers that have been harnessed, and as I think of that—electricity and the sound waves that have brought us all these modern conveniences—I wonder if the world realizes that there are other unseen powers that are operating in the world, the power of darkness seeking to destroy the work of the Lord, and the power of God in the hearts of the honest who find the way of eternal truth.

I would like to predicate the few words that I say this morning on an experience that I had a few weeks ago in attending a stake conference in a neighboring state. One of the fine men of the community, through the efforts of our stake missionaries, had recently joined the Church. He was happy in his membership in the Church. It brought a change in his life, a change in his thoughts, a change in his habits, a change in his desires and interest in his fellow men. He had a neighbor with whom he had been very friendly. They lent each other equipment from their farms, but as soon as this man joined the Church his neighbor turned against him.

The new convert ran for a position on the school board, and his neighbor went out and gathered people from far and near to bring them into the polls to defeat this former friend and neighbor. After the election was over, the new convert went to his neighbor. He said, "What have I done that would change your attitude toward me as it has been changed?" The answer was, "I do not like the Mormons."

If he had been living in the days of the Savior, his answer would have been,

"I do not like the Christians," and I think of the words of the Savior when he said:

If the world hate you, ye know that it hated me before it hated you.

If ye were of the world, the world would love his own: but because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you.

Remember the word that I said unto you, The servant is not greater than his lord. If they have persecuted me, they will also persecute you; if they have kept my saying, they will keep your's also.

But all these things will they do unto you for my name's sake, because they know not him that sent me. (John 15:18-21.)

If we understood the power there is operating in the world to deceive the nations! Reference has been made this morning to Satan. We read in Revelation that when he was cast out of heaven, the cry went up,

... Woe to the inhabitants of the earth and of the sea! for the devil is come down unto you, having great wrath, because he knoweth that he hath but a short time. (Rev. 12:12.)

And there was war in heaven: Michael and his angels fought against the dragon; and the dragon fought and his angels,

And prevailed not; neither was their place found any more in heaven.

And the great dragon was cast out, that old serpent, called the Devil, and Satan, which deceiveth the whole world: he was cast out into the earth, and his angels were cast out with him. (Ibid., 12:7-9.)

Just think of that statement for a moment, that he "deceiveth the whole world." I am sure the world does not know how often they listen to his deceptive voice in the things that they do and in the decisions that they make. At this particular point, when we look back over the history of Christianity, we ask ourselves, "How could they have crucified our Lord, the one great example unto all men?" The only answer is because they were deceived by this power of darkness. It is not only those who are wicked who listen to his voice, but also many righteous people who mean to be doing God's service, just like Paul of old, or Saul of Tarsus. You remember how he held the cloaks for those who stoned Stephen to death, not because Stephen had done any harm, but because this power that "deceiveth the whole world" could not make place for him in this world, and brought about his martyrdom.

Paul, on his way to Damascus, went to obtain a writ to persecute the Saints, and then it was that the voice of the Master said, "Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? . . . it is hard for thee to kick against the pricks." (Acts 9:4-5.) You see, Paul had thought he was doing the Lord's service, but after he came to know the power of the truth, he gave his life. We read how often he was scourged and whipped, and finally he was beheaded at Rome under Nero. Take the history of all of the apostles. Why were they put to death? Why did the world hate them? Because they were not of the world, and the world could not fellowship these apostles.

I was in Mexico a few weeks ago, where I saw oil paintings of all of the apostles and how they were put to death. Peter, as you know, was hanged with his head downward. James was beheaded at Jerusalem, and Paul, as I have told you, was beheaded at Rome. John was thrown into a cauldron of boiling oil. Through the power of God his life was saved, and all of the apostles were put to death save John. Why? Because this power of the evil one "deceiveth the whole world," according to the word of John.

Those of us who have had considerable missionary experience know how literally that is true. Why were the Saints all looked down upon? When Paul appeared in Rome, as you will remember, the high priests said,

... we desire to hear of thee what thou thinkest, for as concerning this sect, we know that it is everywhere spoken against. (Acts 28:22.)

Why was the truth everywhere spoken against? Well, you see, there was a war in heaven. There isn't time to go into detail; I just read to you a few words about that. Satan and a third of the hosts of heaven were cast down upon this earth, and they brought with them the knowledge that they had, and according to Isaiah, Satan has decreed that he would exalt his throne above the throne of God, that he would become like unto the Most High.

Friday, April 5

First Day

Then Isaiah speaks of him who has deceived the nations and destroyed the world and the inhabitants thereof, and all we need to do is to look at the history of the world, and realize the power that is bringing about such destruction, when, if we would heed the light of truth and inspiration of the Spirit of the Lord, all men might live in harmony and in peace, and the nations of the earth might walk in the light of the Lord their God, which condition, we are told, will ultimately come to pass.

So these great persecutions we find in our own work. As the Church was evil-spoken of in that day, it is evil-spoken of in our day. We have found this as we have labored among the people. If it were not for that power that deceiveth the nations, there would be hundreds of thousands of honest people in this world join this Church because it literally is the Church of Jesus Christ restored again to the earth in this day.

I think of Nicodemus who came to the Savior of the world. He said, "... we know that thou art a teacher come from God, for no man can do these miracles that thou doest, except God be with him." And Jesus told him how he should be born again, and then he said, "We speak that we do know, and testify that we have seen; and ye receive not our witness." (John 3:2, 11.)

Now we are witnesses of the Lord Jesus Christ, and we speak that we do know to the world, and we testify that we have seen, and we know that his truth has been restored to the earth, and the heavens have been opened; and so, as Jesus said, "because ye are not of the world, ... therefore the world hateth you."

Many of our finest members are those who have had prejudices against this Church until they were brought into contact in a way that we could present the gospel message to them. I had a report from one of my distant relatives back in New England a short time ago, and he had just read one of our books. He said, "I doubt if you have any idea the erroneous conception the people of New England have regarding the Mormon Church. Sometimes I wonder if they believe the things that they tell."

A man in New England to whom I had the privilege of preaching the gospel wrote me a letter after I returned home. He was the treasurer of his own church. He thanked me for bringing him the truth but said, "I am too big a coward to accept it until I can get my friends and my relatives and my neighbors to feeling more friendly toward your people." You see, because we are not of the world, therefore the world hates us.

We were holding a conference in Mississippi when I was the president of the mission there, and a young college man came up at the close of the morning meeting and wanted to know if he could talk in the afternoon meeting, and I assured him he might. He said, "But I am not a member of your Church." "Well," I said, "you cannot say anything that will hurt any of our members," and so we called him up to speak, and this is what he said:

"I was raised here in Mississippi to believe that the Mormons were the most undesirable people in the world, and then I finished my college education and went to Arizona to work. There my lot was cast with the Mormon people, and when I returned here it was cast with the Mormons here. Now I have been attending their meetings. I know what their lives are, and their ideals, and their teachings, and I no longer think of the Mormons as the most undesirable people in the world. I am wondering when I will be good enough to be a member of the Mormon Church."

That is what people find when they know the truth, and if the evil one were not out deceiving the minds of the whole world, as the scriptures say, this work would go on with mighty progress in the world.

I bear you my witness that there is not an honest man nor an honest woman in this world who really loves the Lord who would not join this Church if he knew what it was, and we find testimonies coming to us from all sides.

I remember one minister in Holland. His friends who had joined our Church persuaded him to come and listen to our missionaries, and at the close of the meeting he denounced Joseph Smith as a false prophet, as a deceiver, as everything vile he could think of, and then he went home and went to bed. He told me this story himself, and he was one of the finest companions I have ever labored with in the Church.

He said, "I did not know what I had done, but I knew that I had grieved God because peace had gone out of my mind. I lay and tossed all night until the wee hours of the morning, and then arose and walked the streets until I thought the Mormon elders would be up, and then I went to their door and asked for a copy of the Book of Mormon." I want to tell you that I never listened to a testimony that impressed me more than to hear that man of God bear witness that he knew that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God, and the Book of Mormon was true, and the kingdom of God had been established in the earth to prepare the way for the coming of the Lord.

We have had a good many ministers join the Church just recently—one only last week right here in Salt Lake City—men who are humble enough to realize that the truth must be established in the earth as it was in the days of old to prepare the way for the coming of the Lord.

In closing, I would like to read a little statement from two of our recent converts. This is a copy from a letter that I received a few days ago from a woman I met in Alabama while touring that mission last November—a dignified, beautiful character. She left her own church, and after so doing, she went back to the minister to ask him to take her name off the records. She said, "May I go in the classroom where I have stood for years, and taught a Sunday School class? I want to thank God for the privilege that has been mine of teaching in that room and ask his blessings upon me as I leave it."

Here are a few words from her letter: "Elder Richards, I was a member of this wonderful Church one year, the 5th of February, and I can truthfully say, 1956 was the happiest year of my life. There is hardly a day that passes that something doesn't happen that strengthens my testimony. I only regret that I did not have an opportunity to receive this gospel about thirty years ago. I will just have to be content with doing what I can the rest of my life."

And then she tells of her activities in the Church.

This is from a woman who wrote in to Salt Lake City for information from the Bureau of Information, and they sent her literature to read. Then after joining the Church she wrote: "I now have a serenity and composure, and inner strength, and an inward joy which I never before possessed." That is the kind of joy Paul had, and others who had been enemies of the Church, until Paul was willing to give his life for his testimony. You will remember when he stood in chains, and Festus said, "Paul, thou art beside thyself; much learning doth make thee mad," to which Paul replied, "I am not mad, most noble Festus; but speak forth the words of truth and soberness." Agrippa said, "Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian," to which Paul replied in words like this, "I would to God, that not only thou, but also all that hear me this day, were . . . as I am, except these bonds. (Acts 26:24-25, 28-29.)"

In closing, I want to read to you the statement of Gamaliel. You remember the statement of Gamaliel, how he came to the rescue of the apostles of old and said this to the chief priests of the land:

Ye men of Israel, take heed to yourselves what ye intend to do as touching these men.

And now I say unto you, Refrain from these men, and let them alone: for if this counsel or this work be of men, it will come to nought:

But if it be of God, ye cannot overthrow it; lest haply ye be found even to fight against God. (Ibid., 5:35, 38-39.)

I bear you my solemn witness that any man or any woman who lifts a voice or a hand to stay the progress of this work is fighting against God, the Eternal Father, and is deceived by the author of evil in the world. God bless you all in the great missionary cause of the Church, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER BRUCE R. McCONKIE
Of the First Council of the Seventy

PRESIDENT MCKAY spoke this morning in plainness and with great force and power, saying that we should keep the commandments of God; that we should be doers of the word, and not hearers only; that we should work out our salvation with fear and trembling before God—all in accordance with the principle that it is not he who saith, "Lord, Lord," but he that doeth the will of the Father, who will gain eternal salvation.

Now I would like to call attention to one particular commandment—a commandment given in that revelation which is known as the law of the Church, a commandment which, if kept, will give us joy and peace and happiness in this life and assure us of that fulness of salvation to which our President referred this morning. The Lord said this: "Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and shalt cleave unto her and none else" (D & C 42:22); and similarly we might say, "Thou shalt love thy husband with all thy heart, and shalt cleave unto him and none else."

Let us turn the light of introspection upon ourselves. How much do we love our husbands and our wives? How much do we love our children? How fervent and realistic is our desire to have the family unit continue in eternity? May I say something relative to the relationship between the continuation of the family unit in eternity, and receiving the fulness of salvation, the fulness being eternal life or exaltation in the kingdom of God.

Every thinking person knows there will be different degrees of reward in the life hereafter. The mere fact that men are to be judged according to their works indicates that varying rewards will be meted out. Our Lord said,

In my Father's house are many mansions:

—and then to emphasize the self-evident nature of that great truth, he added,

If it were not so, I would have told you. (John 14:2)

We know of kingdoms of glory likened respectively to the stars, the moon, and the sun, as pertaining to their glory. These kingdoms are the telestial, terrestrial, and celestial. The celestial is the kingdom of God, the kingdom we may attain through the Church, through the gospel, and through personal righteousness. Having that perspective, please note the words of this revelation:

In the celestial glory there are three heavens or degrees;

And in order to obtain the highest, a man must enter into this order of the priesthood [meaning the new and everlasting covenant of marriage];

And if he does not, he cannot obtain it. He may enter into the other, but that is the end of his kingdom; he cannot have an increase. (D & C 131:1-4.)

In exactly the same sense that repentance and baptism is the gate which puts us on the path leading to salvation in the celestial kingdom, so this order of marriage called celestial marriage opens the door and puts us on the path whereby we may press forward to eternal life and exaltation in the highest heaven of the celestial world. The revelation on marriage, speaking of people who have opportunity in this life to abide the terms and conditions of this eternal marriage covenant and who do not do it, says that in the world to come there is neither marrying nor giving in marriage for them. Those who do not avail themselves of the opportunity in this life to enter the celestial law of marriage become "ministering servants, to minister for those who are worthy of a far more, and an exceeding, and an eternal weight of glory," the Lord says:

For these angels did not abide my law; therefore, they cannot be enlarged, but remain separately and singly, without exaltation, in their saved condition, to all eternity; and from henceforth are not gods, but are angels of God forever and ever. (D & C 132:16-17.)

In eternity there will be on the one hand immortality, which means to live forever as a resurrected being; there will be on the other hand eternal life, which is the greatest of all the gifts of God.

Friday, April 5

First Day

There will be on the one hand those who are servants, who are ministering angels; there will be on the other hand exalted and glorified personages. The difference between these two categories—the one on the one hand, and the other on the other—the difference is the continuation of the family unit in eternity. By definition and in its nature, exaltation consists in the continuation of the family unit through all ages yet to be. If the family unit continues, if husband and wife go into the spirit world as a married couple and come up in the resurrection continuing as husband and wife, then exaltation is assured. If they go there separately and singly—either not having entered into this celestial order or, having entered into it, having not kept the terms and conditions and laws that appertain to it—they will have immortality only and not eternal life.

All men will get all that they are able to receive, all that a gracious and merciful Father can give them, but the fulness is reserved for those who abide the whole gospel law, who keep all of the terms and conditions of the new and everlasting covenant of marriage.

Now, how much do you love your husband or your wife? With what desire do you seek eternal exaltation in the mansions hereafter? Let it be remembered that love is measured in terms of obedience and of service, in accordance with the principle, "If ye love me, keep my commandments." (John 14:15.) Accordingly, if we have in our hearts a love, born of the Spirit of Christ, for our families, and for that matter, for our own salvation, we will seek to do those things which will qualify us to gain recommends to the temple, there to be sealed in the eternal marriage union; and then having been so sealed, we will desire with all our hearts to walk in the light, to keep the covenant that we have made, so that it will be of full force and validity in the eternal world, having been bound on earth and sealed in heaven, having been ratified by the Spirit here, and made of full force and validity in the mansions hereafter. There is not any single thing, any single act or performance that any Latter-day Saint ever does in this world as important as marrying the right person in the right place by the right authority, because that kind of marriage is the gate to peace and contentment and happiness in this life, and it opens the door to the attainment of the fulness of the kingdom of the Father hereafter. In the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

He to whom we have just listened is Elder Bruce R. McConkie of the First Council of Seventy. Elder Harold B. Lee of the Council of the Twelve will now speak to us, and Brother Lee will be followed by Elder Alma Sonne.

ELDER HAROLD B. LEE

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

THIS MORNING in the opening session our beloved President lifted my soul with his remarkable address, and it pleases me to know that my whole soul responds to the truthfulness of the great message which he gave us. I trust that in these few minutes what I say will be in full harmony with that about which he has instructed us.

The sermon of President Bruce R. McConkie has laid a remarkable foundation for the thoughts which I have had on this same important subject, so important to the welfare of all our Father's children here and in the world to come. So the spirit willing, and if I may have an interest in your faith and prayers, I would like to speak briefly about this sacred ordinance of temple marriage which is so vital to every human soul.

I should like to introduce my few remarks by relating three simple incidents that have occurred on this block; then I should like to bring one or two powerful lessons from the scriptures and from the sermons of some of our leaders; and then conclude, in the few moments that I have, with a few observations with reference thereto.

These three incidents are true life stories as told by temple watchmen who serve us around the clock over on the east gate through which all who come to the temple proper must enter. I shall read these incidents just as they were given to me by the brethren.

"One morning not so long ago I was sitting at the desk in the temple gate house reading when my attention was drawn to a knock on the door. There stood two little boys, ages about seven or eight years. As I opened the door, I noticed that they were poorly dressed and had been neither washed nor combed. They appeared as if they had left home before Father or Mother had awakened that morning. As I looked beyond these little fellows, I saw two infants in pushcarts. In answer to my question as to what they wanted, one of the boys pointed to his little brother in the cart and replied: 'His name is Joe. Will you shake hands with little Joe? It is little Joe's birthday—he is two years old today, and I want him to touch the temple so when he gets to be an old man he will remember he touched the temple when he was two years old.'

"Pointing to the other little boy in the other cart, he said this: 'This is Mark, he's two years old, too.' Then, with a solemn, reverent attitude rare in children so young, he asked: 'Now can we go over there and touch the temple?' I replied: 'Sure you can.' They pushed their little carts over to the temple and lifted the infants up, and placed their hands against that holy building. Then as I stood there with a lump in my throat, I heard the little boy say to his infant brother, 'Now, Joe, you will always remember when you was two years old you touched the temple.' They thanked me and departed for home."

The second incident:

"This spring (1956) a large group of young men and young women (perhaps one hundred) ages fifteen, sixteen, and seventeen years, from Spokane Stake, came to the temple of the Lord to perform baptisms for the dead. They were a very fine-looking group. Their features beamed with the light of the gospel. They were quiet and very orderly; they possessed the spirit of reverence. They realized they were on holy ground and were about to enter into God's holy temple to perform baptisms for the dead. Led by the priesthood and members of the genealogical committee into the temple, they gave the right to citizenship in the kingdom of God to perhaps 750 souls. As they came out of the temple after their day's work was done, I saw a young girl go up the steps to the main entrance to the temple on the east side. As I approached her I noticed she was standing facing the door with bowed head and hands clasped in prayer. I waited. As she descended the granite steps she came over to me, tears of joy streaming down her face. She said, 'This has been the happiest day of my life.'

(May I pause to say that perhaps she, too, that day had truly touched the temple for the first time through holy and sacred ordinances.)

And then the final incident:

"As I see almost daily Latter-day Saint women who have sold their birthright for a pot of porridge and are now reaping the whirlwind—women who could have enjoyed the blessing of the priesthood and the blessings of the house of the Lord, but who failed to heed the counsel of the prophets of God and married out of the temple of God. Mothers bring their daughters as far as the temple gate house (for that is as far as they are permitted to go), and as they cling to each other in loving embrace, weeping as if their hearts would break, daughter taking departure and entering into the temple of the Lord—Mother is heard to say, 'Oh, if I had but listened to my parents and to the counsel given me by my bishop to prepare myself and wait until with my husband, I could be married in the house of the Lord! I have tried for thirty years to convince my husband that Mormonism is true, but I have utterly failed. And to think I am not even permitted to witness my daughter's marriage and that I may never have the joyous experience which is now to be hers!'"

As I relate these incidents, those of you who may not now be members of the Church may ask, "But why is a marriage in the temple so important?"

Friday, April 5

First Day

Brother McConkie has answered it perfectly. Shall I summarize what he said as he has quoted from the scriptures? Only through this sacred ordinance of a temple marriage can members of the Church receive an exaltation in the celestial kingdom.

Listen again to the word of the Lord:

In the celestial glory there are three heavens or degrees;

And in order to obtain the highest, a man must enter into this order of the priesthood [meaning the new and everlasting covenant of marriage];

And if he does not, he cannot obtain it.

He may enter into the other, but that is the end of his kingdom; he cannot have an increase. (D & C 131:1-4.)

The Lord has said it again in another revelation:

... if a man marry a wife by my word, which is my law, and by the new and everlasting covenant, and it is sealed unto them by the Holy Spirit of promise, by him who is anointed, unto whom I have appointed this power and the keys of this priesthood; ... and if ye abide in my covenant, and commit no murder whereby to shed innocent blood, it shall be done unto them in all things whatsoever my servant hath put upon them, in time, and through all eternity; and shall be of full force when they are out of the world; and they shall pass by the angels, and the gods, which are set there, to their exaltation and glory in all things, as hath been sealed upon their heads, which glory shall be a fulness and a continuation of the seeds forever and ever. (Ibid., 132:19.)

In explanation of that scripture, the Prophet Joseph Smith said this (and I read this because there seems to be some misunderstanding as to just what the Lord meant) the Prophet said in explanation:

Except a man and his wife enter into an everlasting covenant, and are married for eternity while in this probation, by the power and authority of the Holy Priesthood, they will cease to increase when they die; that is, they will not have any children after the resurrection. But those who are married by the power and authority of the priesthood in this life, and continue without committing the sin against the Holy Ghost, will continue to increase and have children in the celestial glory. The unpardonable sin is to shed innocent blood or to be accessory thereto. All other sins will be visited with judgment in the flesh, and the spirit being delivered to the buffetings of Satan until the day of the Lord Jesus. (DHC Vol. 5, pp. 391-2.)

(And of course, this last statement means clearly on condition that they repent of their sins.)

As I have gone throughout the Church, I have been concerned to know why there are so many of our young people who do not avail themselves of the opportunity of going to the temple. I have asked our leaders as I have gone about to stake conferences, and they have given me several answers.

The most frequent reason given is that young people do not have proper encouragement from their homes. Unfortunately, many, unlike the little children in the incident I have related, have not been impressed in their childhood with the sacred privileges of the temple. Parents who themselves have lightly regarded their temple covenants can expect little better from their children because of their bad example. Little children should not be taught to reverence the temple itself but to look forward reverently to the holy experiences which one day might be theirs.

And then another reason is one that strikes a bit of pain to the hearts of all of us who realize that there must be much truth to it. Our leaders say that some do not go to the house of the Lord because they are not worthy of a temple recommend. It was the late Brother Orson F. Whitney who wrote a beautiful verse which is found at the entrance of the Alberta Temple:

Hearts must be pure to come within these walls
Where spreads a feast unknown to festive halls.
Freely partake, for freely God has given,
And taste the holy joys that tell of heaven.

Here learn of Him who triumphed o'er the grave,
And unto men the Keys, the kingdom gave:
Joined here by powers that past and present bind
The living and the dead perfection find.

Now there are certain standards that are required, as President McConkie has explained, and the bishop and the stake president are expected to scrutinize each applicant in order to keep sacred these holy temples where these sacred ordinances are being performed.

With regard to this matter of keeping young people pure and clean for these sacred privileges, I found something that to me was great wisdom from an address by Dr. Henry I. Bowman, President of Stephens College at Columbia, Missouri. It is an all-girls' junior college. The article is headed: "Petting, Hasty Marriages, and Babies." I read one or two paragraphs:

If any girl thinks she is doing her boy friend a favor by permitting or encouraging petting, she's both stupid and juvenile. A friendship with a girl of a warm, vibrant, and genuine personality and charm—a friendship that later may culminate in marriage—is more significant to a lonely boy.

Now and then, young people enter into hasty marriages with the hope of insuring fidelity of the other during their separation. They forget that fidelity depends, not upon formal vows, but upon an inherent sense of decency and honor. If that is lacking, no ceremony can make up for it. A sweetheart is just as powerful an urge to fidelity as a wife.

I've noticed that few partners in hasty or war marriages include in their sketchy plans the possibility of a baby. One recent bride told me casually she was going to live with her parents until her husband returned. "And will there be room if you have a child?" I asked. "Heavens, no," she replied, "we aren't worrying about that." Like thousands of other brides and grooms, this couple is accepting the responsibilities of marriage without accepting the responsibilities of children. Aside from the question of the morality of planning a childless marriage, even temporarily, there is the practical fact that few marriages turn out happily that are deliberately childless.

I wish that all of the youth of the land could hear the counsel of that wise educator and leader of youth.

Some tell us that young people have avoided going to the temple because they prefer a time marriage first to see whether or not their marriage is going to prove successful before they go to the temple. And some have said facetiously, "Well, I am not sure whether I want him for eternity or not."

President Brigham Young, commenting upon this very matter, said this:

Those who attain to the blessings of the first or celestial resurrection will be pure and holy, and perfect in body. Every man and woman that reaches to this unspeakable attainment will be as beautiful as the angels that surround the throne of God. If you can, by faithfulness in this life, attain the right to come up in the morning of the resurrection, you need entertain no fears that the wife will be dissatisfied with her husband or the husband with the wife, for those of the first resurrection will be free from sin and from the consequences and power of sin. This body is "sown in corruption, it is raised in incorruption; it is sown in dishonor, it is raised in glory; it is sown in weakness, it is raised in power; it is sown a natural body; it is raised a spiritual body." "And as we have borne the image of the earthly, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly." (Journal of Discourses 10:24.)

Those who go to the marriage altar with love in their hearts, we might say to them in truth, if they will be true to the covenants that they take in the temple, fifty years after their marriage they can say to each other: "We must have not known what true love was when we were married, because we think so much more of each other today!" And so it will be if they will follow the counsel of their leaders and obey the holy, sacred instructions given in the temple ceremony; they will grow more perfectly in love even to a fulness of love in the presence of the Lord himself. Young people do not know the true sacredness of marriage until they have been taught by the temple ordinance.

Another of the reasons given why some do not marry in the temple is that they marry out of the Church and therefore cannot enter the temple. Dr. Paul Popenoe, who is not of us but is a wise man in counseling on such matters, has this to say concerning marrying outside of your church:

The price may be almost anything. It may be alienation from your own family or alienation of your bride from hers; it may be giving up your church to join hers. It may be the abandonment of each of church affiliation, and living thenceforth without association with organized religions; it may be less than any of these, or much more; count the price before you go ahead; and if you want to do it, pay it in advance!

I wish the parents could understand that youth will find their mates from that company which they frequent the most. However, we must not despair, even if some of ours do marry away from us. We must not relinquish our hold upon them or slacken our efforts to try to persuade, as long as life shall last.

Finally, our leaders say that because of the fashions of the day our young people are persuaded to marry out of the Church. They desire a so-called church wedding with much pomp and ceremony, some because they prefer a sort of semi-nudity in their social life that is not permitted in those who have obeyed the basic requirements of the temple which counsel as to modesty in dress. Careless mothers who permit even in childhood or babyhood nudity or semi-nudity in dress are but sowing the seeds of disregard for standards of modesty which if taught and adhered to in her growing up years will prepare a daughter for entrance into the holy and sacred ordinances of the Lord.

I listened to a young lad I was interviewing for a mission in Canada, and as I talked to him to inquire whether he had kept himself morally clean, he smiled, this handsome, fine son, and replied, "I will have to tell you what my mother told me. She said, 'Son, no mother can raise a fine son without the aid of a pure, sweet girl to help her. Be sure, then, Son, you choose the right kind of girl companion.'" He said, "I have done that, and I am clean, as my mother has counseled me to be."

Our boys overseas have looked forward to the day when they could come home and marry sweet, clean girls.

Some time ago, I wrote something to the mothers of the Church about preparing their daughters to enter the temple:

In this day, the fashions, the sham, the pretenses, and the glamour of the world have badly distorted the holy concept of home and marriage, and even the marriage ceremony itself. Blessed is the wise mother who paints a living picture to her daughter of a sacred scene in an exquisite, heavenly sealing room where, shut out from all that is worldly, and in the presence of parents and intimate family friends, a beautiful, youthful bride and groom clasp hands across a holy altar. Thank God for that mother who shows her daughter that here, nearest to heaven on earth, heart communes with heart, in a mutuality of love that begins a oneness which defies the ravages of hardship, heartaches, or disappointments to destroy, and supplies the greatest stimulus for life's highest attainments! (Relief Society Magazine, June 1955, p. 351.)

And now may I close with one more incident. I was attending a stake conference where a mother was asked to speak of the joys that had now come since she and her husband had together been to the temple. She said when they were married he was a fine, honorable man, but he had some habits that did not permit him to hold the priesthood. He said, "If you will join me in a civil marriage, I promise you I will get in shape, and I will get a recommend and take you to the temple." He was like the man who said he knew he could stop smoking because he had done it a thousand times.

So he tried all through these years but had never been successful. Before he was ready, they had five lovely girls in their family. But now somebody touched the heart of this man; he was given the priesthood and a recommend; and they went to the temple. She described the going to the temple and what it meant, and how finally they came into that most beautiful of all the rooms in the temple, and as they knelt at the altar, their five little girls dressed in beautiful white dresses came in and took their places around the altar, and there a man of God pronounced them a family for eternity.

Her story was impressively told and touched every heart. Then she leaned over the pulpit. Sitting right down in the front seat was her husband. She looked down at him, and for that moment she seemed to forget that there was anybody else in the room but just the two of them. She said to him, "Daddy, I don't know how to tell you how the girls and I feel about what you have done for us. I guess all we can say is, Daddy, thanks from the bottom of our hearts, because except for you, the girls and I would never have a chance to be a family together in the celestial kingdom. Thank God for you, Daddy, and for what you have done for us."

Oh, that every father-heart in this whole Church could hear the cry of that mother-heart, and before it is too late, prepare himself to go and to enter into this sacred ordinance, for which I pray in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve Apostles

IN THIS POSITION, brethren and sisters, one always becomes conscious of his limitations. The other day I read in a local newspaper about a sarcastic lawyer who was making it pretty rough for the witness. The lawyer said, "Did you see the accident?" The witness replied, "Yes, sir."

"How far away were you?"

The witness said, "Oh, about thirty feet."

"Well, how far can you see anyway?"

He said, "I do not know, but in the morning when I wake up I can see the sun, and they tell me it is about ninety million miles away."

I shall always appreciate the fact that the missionaries of the Church found my grandparents in faraway Scandinavia. That circumstance accounts for my greatest blessing in this life. As a result, I have grown up in the Church among God's people in these valleys of the mountains. From my earliest recollections, I was taught faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, and in the promises and the predictions of holy prophets. I recall that I was very young when I first heard the story of the restoration and the coming forth of the Book of Mormon. I believed it then as I believe it now. I knew then as I know now that my grandparents had not been misled.

As a young man doing missionary work over in England, I became the private secretary to President Charles W. Penrose and to President Rudger Clawson. From them I learned many things which confirmed my belief and strengthened my testimony. Since then I have examined the claims of Joseph Smith, the Prophet. I have weighed and tested every doctrine and every teaching of the Church. I have compared them with the teachings of other churches. The gospel message as revealed through the latter-day Prophet is complete and soul-satisfying. It is the power of God unto salvation.

I know this, and I testify to you that I do know it. No alterations and no far-fetched explanations have been necessary. The original declarations made by Joseph still stand. They cannot and have not been changed to satisfy the whims of critics, either in the Church or out of the Church.

In the year 1829 the Book of Mormon appeared. It was received with an avalanche of abuse and ridicule. It was repudiated and cast aside as being unworthy of study and serious consideration. But, my brethren and sisters, the tide is turning. It is turning with marvelous rapidity in these, our days. Thinking men are beginning to regard it as a powerful book with a great message. It has had wide distribution. Many translations have been made. It reveals God's purposes with respect to man's sojourn in mortality. It brings to light the results of skepticism and wrongdoing. It emphasizes the sanctity and durability of divine commandments in directing men in this striving for God's favors and blessing. It confirms the teachings of the Holy Bible, and proclaims the deityship of Jesus Christ, the resurrection, and the atonement wrought out on Calvary.

There is much controversy in these modern times even among so-called Christian leaders concerning these religious fundamentals. Once they were regarded as the rock foundation of the Christian religion. The coming forth of the Book of Mormon is a part of the "marvelous work and a wonder," proclaimed and prophesied by Isaiah, the great prophet. The spirit of the book convinces a sincere reader of its divine origin. The book is not a product of man's genius or man's learning. It is a revelation from Almighty God.

It is a message to the modern world from an ancient race who went down because they failed to live to the light which God had given them. But the teachings of the Book of Mormon are timely. They fit into our lives today as we live amid conditions around us. They come as a warning to those who are inclined to trifle with the injunctions of an overruling providence. The sacred volume is also a continuing and compelling testimony of the divine calling of Joseph Smith, the Prophet. As with the Book of Mormon, so with the revelations contained in the Doctrine and Covenants. They furnish a solid foundation for the exercise of faith and the development of spirituality.

These scriptural productions confirm and clarify the ancient scriptures known as the Old and New Testaments. As an example I read from the thirty-seventh chapter of Ezekiel:

Moreover, thou son of man, take thee one stick, and write upon it, For Judah, and for the children of Israel his companions: then take another stick, and write upon it, For Joseph, the stick of Ephraim, and for all the house of Israel his companions:

And join them one to another into one stick; and they shall become one in thine hand. (Ezek. 37:16-17.)

Biblical scholars have failed to offer a satisfactory explanation of this prophetic utterance. Where is the stick of Joseph, also called the stick of Ephraim? How shall this stick, or book, be joined with the stick of Judah, or the Bible? How can these sticks become one in the hands of God for the enlightenment of humanity? The Book of Mormon answers these questions. It is the only answer. The Book of Mormon, as you know, is a powerful witness. It is a builder of faith. It is a converter of souls to the truth, and the Book of Mormon is true, and truth will triumph even against strong and determined opposition.

As a boy I attended a little chapel on the walls of which appeared in bold lettering these words: "Truth Will Prevail." I often read it. Everybody read it. They had to. It was there before their eyes. It was like a battle cry in those days of opposition and persecution. Truth will eventually break in pieces all the substitutes which confuse and bewilder a faithless and an unrepentant world. I recall the words often repeated by Elder Orson F. Whitney,

Truth is truth where'er 'tis found
On Christian or on heathen ground.

I am also reminded of the poem which has taken a place in the classics of our literature.

Then say, what is truth? 'Tis the last and the first,
For the limits of time it steps o'er.
Though the heavens depart and the earth's fountains burst,
Truth, the sum of existence, will weather
the worst,
Eternal, unchanged, evermore.

—John Jaques

Now, in conclusion, may I read Carlyle's statement:

Fight on, through dark fortune, and through bright. The Cause thou fightest for so far as it is true, no further, but precisely so far, is very sure of victory. The falsehood of it alone will be conquered, will be abolished, as it should be, but the truth of it is a part of Nature's own laws, co-operates with the world's eternal tendencies and cannot be conquered.

I testify that Mormonism, so-called, is true; that it is the power of God unto salvation; that it is the same gospel which Peter and Paul preached, and which was taught by the Savior of men. May we remember it, and may we adhere to its saving principles, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER LEVI EDGAR YOUNG

Of the First Council of the Seventy

PRESIDENT McKAY and Counselors: my brethren and sisters: I should like to say something about a people whom we all know and respect. I refer to the Jewish race who today are suffering in their native land of Palestine because of peoples who are determined to drive them from their homes—homes that have belonged to them from the far distant ages. In every period of the world's history, the Jewish people have stood for the brotherhood of mankind and have recognized that God gave the world its first children who came from heaven. From the days of Abraham, the Jews have maintained their identity as have no other people in history. They have remained one race in blood, instinct, and faith in one Supreme Being. They still follow the words of the Prophet Jeremiah when he addressed the Jewish captives in Babylon:

Build ye houses and dwell in them; and plant gardens, and eat the fruit of them;
And seek the peace of the city whither I have caused you to be carried away captives, and pray unto the Lord for it [his blessings] . . . ye shall have peace. (Jer. 29:5, 7.)

What great help the Jews of all ages have given to the divine principles of life! Levinger in his History of the Jews tells us that Columbus had with him on his first voyage, five Jews, including the man who first stepped on American soil. When they reached the first little island, the interpreter, who was a Jew, was the first man to write a description of the land. In the chronological writings of Padre Claudio Clemente is preserved a form of prayer said to have been used by Columbus on Friday morning, October 12, as he stepped on the land of the New World. The prayer was used by Cortez, Balboa, and Pizarro in their discoveries.

Columbus declared in one of his letters to the king and queen of Spain that he was the "agent in the hand of God to go forth upon the mighty deep." According to Washington Irving, Columbus, when he set foot on the island of San Salvador, uttered the following prayer, which has been translated from the Latin:

O God, our Father, eternal and omnipotent, creator of heaven and earth and sea, we glorify Thy Holy name, praise Thy majesty, whom we serve in all humility, we give unto Thy Holy protection this new part of the world.

Jews continued coming to America, but they were poor lowly immigrants, and their suffering was something terrible. And yet, the Jews were ever ready to help in times of distress. During the American Revolution, the "great majority of the Jews in the thirteen colonies were ardent in the cause of Liberty. Jews were elected to the Continental Congress." And many of them in every colony advanced all the money they had to help the American army. The man who did more, however, than any other Jew, was Haym Salomon, a wealthy Jew who lived in Philadelphia. Haym Salomon was a native of Poland. He was liberally educated, and his family was very cultured. Robert Morris writes in his journal:

I sent to Haym Salomon and desired in every way to have him raise funds for the army. The men were starving everywhere.

Haym Salomon responded. He first gave money to the starving soldiers and then to such men as Jefferson, Washington, and James Madison. At the close of the war, he had given all he had, $700,000, and within a few months, it is said, Salomon died of starvation. The family was never reimbursed, and the wife and children suffered greatly, owing, of course, to the death of husband and father. Theirs was a great sacrifice for the gaining of American independence.

The place held by the Jews in creating our English literature is now becoming known. The character of Shylock in Shakespeare's famous comedy sums up the tragic position of the Jew in medieval Europe. The German, Lessing, in his Nathan the Wise was instrumental in having the ideals of the Jews understood. And it was a Jew, Spinoza, who helped to bring about the enlightenment which enabled the Jews to take a place in modern society. We can hardly realize the large number of Jewish writers who have created the literature of America. Fannie Hurst, Edna Ferber, Sholem Asch, and Robert Nathan are only a few of the many famous Jewish writers here in our country. You no doubt have read Israel Zangwill's The Melting Pot, which is a direct outcome of his visit to America.

The Jewish people have had their own music since the days of Abraham when they used to sing and dance in their sacred meetings. And to think of the famous Jewish actors on the American stage who gave renown to the old Salt Lake Theatre. It was Charles Frohman who once declared that the Mormon theatre in Salt Lake City seemed to have a spirit of light that made the actors play at their very best. Charles Frohman lost his life when the Lusitania went down some years ago. As he stood on the deck of the ship trying to comfort the passengers that were weeping and praying, he said, "Why fear death. . . it is the most beautiful experience of life."

The history of the Jews through all the ages beginning with the Holy Bible is a story of faith, love of God, and tenderness for all mankind that someday will become known.

In September 1823, the Prophet Joseph Smith prayed to the Lord to forgive him his imperfections, and in answer to his humble pleading God gave him a vision, and a glorious person stood before him. "When I first looked upon him," said Joseph,

I was afraid, but the fear soon left me.

He called me by name, and said unto me that he was a messenger sent from the presence of God to me, and that his name was Moroni; and that God had a work for me to do; . . . (J. S. 2:32-33.)

The Angel Moroni then quoted the eleventh chapter of Isaiah, saying it was about to be fulfilled.

Knowing this historic fact, the sculptor, Cyrus Dallin, made the Angel Moroni that graces the central tower of our Salt Lake Temple.

And now comes an event in the history of the Church that causes the most intensive faith in the work of God in this day. The Prophet Joseph Smith sent Apostle Orson Hyde to the Holy Land in 1841, where he dedicated the land for the return of the children of Judah. The prayer was prophetic in every way. Beautiful are the words of Orson Hyde as he prayed to God that the Holy Land of the Jews should be saved. I give only a few words of the prayer:

Now, O Lord! Thy servant has been obedient to the heavenly vision which Thou gavest him in his native land; and under the shadow of Thine outstretched arm, he has safely arrived in this place to dedicate and consecrate this land unto Thee, for the gathering together of Judah's scattered remnants, according to the predictions of the holy Prophets—for the building up of Jerusalem again after it has been trodden down by the Gentiles so long, and for rearing a Temple in honor of Thy name. . . .

Grant, therefore, O Lord, in the name of Thy well-beloved Son, Jesus Christ, to remove the barrenness and sterility of this land, and let springs of living water break forth to water its thirsty soil. Let the vine and olive produce in their strength, and the fig-tree bloom and flourish. Let the land become abundantly fruitful when possessed by its rightful heirs; let it again flow with plenty to feed the returning prodigals who come home with a spirit of grace and supplication; upon it let the clouds distil virtue and richness, and let the fields smile with plenty. Let the flocks and the herds greatly increase and multiply upon the mountains and the hills; and let Thy great kindness conquer and subdue the unbelief of Thy people. Do Thou take from them their stony heart, and give them a heart of flesh; and may the Sun of Thy favor dispel the cold mists of darkness which have beclouded their atmosphere. Incline them to gather in upon this land according to Thy word. Let them come like clouds and like doves to their windows. Let the large ships of the nations bring them from the distant isles; and let kings become their nursing fathers, and queens with motherly fondness wipe the tear of sorrow from their eye. (DHC 4:456-7, italics added.)

How beautifully the Prophet Isaiah has given words of encouragement to Zion:

O Zion, that bringest good tidings, get thee up into the high mountain; O Jerusalem, that bringeth good tidings, Lift up thy voice with strength; lift it up, be not afraid; say unto the cities of Judah, Behold your God!

Behold, the Lord God will come with strong hand, And his arm shall rule for him. (Isaiah 40:9-10.)

May we give our faith and prayers to the Jewish people in all the world this day, I ask in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

BISHOP CARL W. BUEHNER

Second Counselor in the Presiding Bishopric

MY DEAR brethren and sisters, I would like to dedicate the few moments allotted to me to the faithful youth of the Church, who in my opinion are carrying their full load as true champions. Their records have never been better. Their influence is felt for good far and wide. I am sure their influence has been felt in the home. There they have helped to develop the spirit of "love at home" and bring strength to the family.

Their searching questions have done much to stimulate inactive parents to activity and faithfulness in the Church. I would like to relate a few little experiences that have come to me which have impressed this on my mind. The first is a story about a little boy named Mark.

While I was attending a youth conference up north recently, during the evening's entertainment it was announced that a little boy named Mark would play some piano solos. The master of ceremonies suggested that he would like to have Mark's father come forward with him and introduce him. They both came up front to the microphone. The father explained that when little Mark was only two months of age, his eyes had to be removed from their sockets because of cancer. When Mark became about two and one-half years of age, he found his way to a piano and there began to play some little simple pieces of music. Mark is now six years of age, and he was going to play some piano solos for us.

As his father was talking about Mark, he said, "Mark just loves to play the piano; Mark just loves to play the organ; Mark just loves to play the trumpet; and Mark just loves to play the string instruments." About this time, Mark's little high voice came ringing out, and he said, "Daddy, I love you, too." You could feel an affinity between a father and a son that was wonderful. Then the father took little Mark over to the piano. Being a very small boy, he could not reach from one end of it to the other, so he went first to the left side, found the end of the piano, then walked to the right side and located the other end. Then standing on the tip of his toes and straining every muscle of his body, Mark reached for the top of the piano. This he could scarcely do. When he had become oriented, he mounted the piano bench and played three numbers with the finesse of a professional. Mark inspired every person there that night. Mark, if you are listening, I would like to tell you that you are on your way to becoming a great man. I feel some of us with all our faculties will never be as accomplished as little Mark who lost his eyesight when he was only two months of age.

I think of a father of a large family who have recently become members of the Church. This father was invited to give a short talk at one of the sessions of our quarterly conferences. The children were very proud of their dad, and as he was speaking to us, he said, "Do you know I changed my necktie six times this morning. Each of my children had an idea I would look better in another necktie." I thought two things about this—how wonderful it is to have six different possibilities in the way of neckties to wear with a suit, and how proud these children were of their dad. They wanted him to look his very best when he addressed our quarterly conference that morning. I appreciate this in these children. There may have been some younger who could not express their opinion—this story just represented the six who could. I enjoyed the feeling of love felt in that home between these children and their parents.

Recently, I heard the story of another man who is now just coming into activity in the Church. He indicated that his son came to him and said, "Dad, do you know what tomorrow is?" To which the father replied, "Yes, my boy, you will be eight years of age." "That's right, Dad," he said, "and do you know what that means?" The father indicated that he did and said, "I have been thinking about this, Son, I have spoken to the bishop, and we have made arrangements to have someone baptize you." To this the boy replied, "But, Dad, I don't want just someone to baptize me—I want you to baptize me." The countenance of the father fell, and he appeared very embarrassed as he had to say to his son, "Because of my inactivity in the Church, I only hold the office of a deacon and that does not carry with it the authority to baptize." To this the boy said, "Dad, I'll wait."

"Just think of the responsibility that was placed on my shoulders," the father continued. "Now I was preventing my son from becoming a member of this Church. Because of my inactivity and because I had not been advanced in the priesthood, this prevented me from enjoying the privilege of baptizing my son a member of the Church."

However, the challenge worked. This good father really went to work, and he indicated that within a few months he had qualified himself to be ordained a priest and had the honor of officiating at the baptism of his son.

I heard another impressive story of a different nature. I was in the home of some wonderful people that I met during a recent quarterly conference in California. There were a father and a mother who had five children. The mother was to have a serious operation and was very much concerned about it, as any of us would be if we were to go through the same ordeal. The children in the home began to sense the anxiety of their mother as she was preparing to leave home and enter the hospital. They realized the seriousness of what might happen. A day or two before the mother left for the hospital, one of the younger boys, about six years of age, came to her and said, "Mother, everything is going to be all right. I talked to the Lord last night about your condition. I told him you were going to undergo a serious operation and that you were worried about it. The Lord understands, Mother, and everything is going to be all right." To this she said, "You know, a calmness came over me. I knew everything would turn out all right, and it did." Later she said to me, "This little boy would never think of going to bed at night without first offering his prayer to his Heavenly Father. Some of the other children might, but not this boy." You must admit with me that young people with such faith exercise a great influence in the home.

Another experience that impressed me was concerning a young lad who recently attended a Senior Aaronic Priesthood graduation exercise, a little red-headed fellow and the only youngster present with the men and women who were participating in this service. When the meeting was over, he came to the sponsors of the Senior Aaronic Priesthood school to express his appreciation to them for what the school had done for his dad. Young people, I think you are wonderful!

A little girl eight years of age came home from Sunday School one morning and said to her father, "You know, Dad, I have been learning some wonderful things about heaven and what we must do to have a home with our Heavenly Father when we leave here. I would like to ask you a question. What is going to happen to us if I keep doing the things my Sunday School teacher has been telling me to do, and you keep doing the things I have seen you do?"

The father said, "I could not answer my daughter, and it disturbed me. That night I called the bishop to see which night of the week they held priesthood meeting. You can tell how long I have been away from Church—they don't hold priesthood meeting in the evenings any more. The bishop was not at home, but his wife indicated I should call the ward clerk. This I did, and he told me the time that the priesthood meeting now convened on Sunday morning. He further said, 'I will be looking for you. I am a little sandy-haired man, and will have on a light gray suit. I will meet you at the door when you come Sunday morning.' Then I said to him, 'So you will know who I am, I weigh about two-hundred pounds. I have black curly hair and will be wearing a blue suit.' When I approached the chapel on Sunday morning I saw the clerk, and standing next to him was a very large man who turned out to be the bishop of the ward. The challenge by my daughter started me back into activity in this Church of ours. I am now an assistant ward clerk."

I see that my time has gone. I have some more stories to relate—someday I might write a book, and you can read them then. [Laughter.]

In conclusion I should like to say, God bless the youth of the Church. I love them. I love to work with them. They are doing great things, and I am sure their faces are turned in the right direction. If those of us who have to do with these young people will give of our time to assist them so that their lives will follow the course that is set for them, which will lead them back into eternal life, joy and happiness will not only be theirs but ours. May it be so, and may our Heavenly Father's blessings be with us, each and every one, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

I AM DEEPLY appreciative, my brethren and sisters, of this opportunity, and especially to have felt the wonderful spirit that has been with us in these meetings. I am sure it has come to us in large measure as a result of the inspired opening remarks of our beloved President. I hope that that same inspiration may continue with me for the next few moments.

There is a passage in the scripture that has impressed itself upon me recently very much. It was Job who said:

There is a spirit in man: and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding. (Job 32:8.)

Born of this inspiration is the testimony we have of the divinity of the Savior of mankind. We know and bear witness to the world that he is the only Begotten Son of the Father, the Redeemer of mankind, the Lord God Almighty.

The Prophet Joseph Smith tells us that the Holy Ghost is the medium through which inspiration is transmitted to us from on high and that the reception of the Holy Ghost is the distinguishing characteristic of Latter-day Saints.

Paul made clear to the Corinthians the true relationship between the Holy Ghost and our personal testimony of the divinity of the Savior. He said:

But the manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal.

For to one is given by the Spirit the word of wisdom; to another the word of knowledge by the same Spirit;

To another faith by the same Spirit; to another the gifts of healing by the same Spirit;

To another the working of miracles; to another prophecy; to another discerning of spirits; to another divers kinds of tongues; to another the interpretation of tongues. (1 Cor. 12:7-10.)

Paul enumerates many gifts of the Spirit. The greatest gift, however, is not the performing of miracles or talking in tongues, or prophesying, etc.; but the inception of an individual testimony is the greatest of all gifts of the Spirit. And that is a gift which comes from God through the Holy Ghost and can be received by any man, woman, or child in the world who desires to know the truth. It is at once the greatest and certainly the most universal of all gifts born of the Spirit. It is indeed the Comforter promised to all who, through faith in God and repentance, seek with a contrite heart a remission of sins in the waters of baptism.

It is received by all who thus qualify through the laying on of hands by those in authority as provided by the eternal laws of God.

As surely as God sent his Son to redeem the sins of the world, so he sends the Holy Ghost to those who seek divine guidance in understanding the gospel.

It is the Holy Ghost, a member of the Godhead, a Personage of spirit, who inspires the souls of men with an understanding of God's will.

Now this inspiration comes through our lives of worthiness. Our testimony is the foundation upon which we progress. The inspiration of the Almighty, by and through which we received our witness, inspires us to bear testimony to others of our knowledge of God.

Every true convert to the Church has felt the twofold power of his conversion and of this inspiration—first, to convert himself, and second, to assist in the conversion of others.

It is our purpose as members of the Church to consider constantly the place of testimony in our lives. We dare not become complacent or unaware of this priceless gift which is ours. When we bear our testimony we are teaching others the truths that have enriched our lives and made us happy. Our testimonies are borne—First, to give thanks to God for the knowledge and assurance he has given us; second, to assist our brethren and sisters in the strengthening of their testimonies; and third, to carry the conviction which is ours into the hearts of all other people upon the face of the earth.

We may sometimes find satisfaction in sharing our material wealth with others. But far greater satisfaction comes from sharing ourselves, our time, our energy, our affection, and particularly in imparting to others our testimony of God, the power of God unto salvation, the knowledge we possess of God and his purposes. When we are truly converted, we realize that "this is life eternal, to know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou has sent" (see John 17:3), and to sense our responsibility to others to assist them in attaining eternal life.

Christ said to his disciples just prior to his ascension:

But ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you: and ye shall be witnesses unto me. . . . (Acts 1:8.)

For thou shalt be his witness unto all men. . . . (Ibid., 22:15.)

We must then constantly qualify ourselves as witnesses of spiritual matters. One of President McKay's favorite poems illustrates the thought I have in mind:

The builder who first bridged Niagara's gorge
Before he swung his cable, shore to shore,
Sent out, across the gulf, his venturing kite
Bearing slender cord for unseen hands
To grasp upon the further cliff, and draw
A greater cord, and a greater yet;
Till at last across the chasm swung
The cable—then a mighty bridge in air!
So we may send our little timid thought
Across the void, out to God's reaching hands,
Send our love and faith to thread the deep—
Thought after thought, until the little cord
Has greated to a chain no chance to break,
And we are anchored to the Infinite.

—Edwin Markham*

The Spirit then will reveal all things to us essential to our mission. We must be prepared to recognize and accept that which the Spirit offers, that which the Spirit would make clear to our understandings. Then knowledge flows freely to us from heaven.

We know that through obedience to the principles of the gospel, all who believe on the name of Jesus Christ and endure in faith to the end, shall be saved in the celestial kingdom in the presence of the Father.

We find in the life and works of Joseph Smith how the Spirit can magnify us for our callings if we but attune our lives thereto.

I never expect to live long enough to see a more wonderful example of that inspiration than we witnessed here this morning when President McKay spoke under the inspiration of his high calling.

Through the witness of the Spirit I know that Joseph Smith was a Prophet of God, raised up to fulfil the promises made of old, to bring to mankind the opportunity to become heir to all of the blessings the Lord has promised his children through the entire time of their sojourn here in mortality upon the earth.

And now after 120 years of terrific scrutiny, the works and testimony of the Prophet Joseph Smith stand unimpeached. No one can imagine a severer cross-examination than that to which he was subjected all through his life. By any standard, legal or otherwise, he was an almost perfect witness. Above all, he sealed his testimony with his blood.

We who through the inspiration of the Almighty have received his testimony, and that of his faithful brother Hyrum, are charged with responsibility to accept and to perpetuate and add our solemn witness thereto, that the blood of this generation shall not be upon us.

And as many as repent and are baptized in my name, which is Jesus Christ, and endure to the end, the same shall be saved.

Behold, Jesus Christ is the name given by the Father, and there is none other name given whereby man can be saved;

Wherefore, all men must take upon them the name which is given of the Father, for in that name shall they be called at the last day;

Wherefore, if they know not the name by which they are called, they cannot have place in the kingdom of my Father.

And now, behold, there are others who are called to declare my gospel, both unto Gentile and unto Jew;

Yea, even twelve; and the Twelve shall be my disciples, and they shall take upon them my name; and the Twelve are they who shall desire to take upon them my name with full purpose of heart.

And if they desire to take upon them my name with full purpose of heart, they are called to go into all the world to preach my gospel unto every creature.

And they are they who are ordained of me to baptize in my name, according to that which is written. (D & C 18:22-29.)

That we do constantly bear witness to the hope we have within us is further proof of the divine nature of the work in which we are engaged. Were it otherwise we could not be called the true Church of Jesus Christ. Where else in all the world are the true fruits of the inspiration of the Almighty to be found, inspiration that giveth the souls of men understanding. Throughout the history of the Church innumerable examples of spiritual guidance are found. One which I have cherished since childhood is an early experience of Wilford Woodruff.

While traveling in New England, on assignment by Brigham Young, President Woodruff drove his carriage into the yard of Brother Williams. Brother Orson Hyde drove a wagon by the side of his carriage. President Woodruff's wife and children were in that carriage. He had only been there a few minutes when the Spirit said to him, "Get up and move that carriage." When he told his wife that he had to move the carriage, she asked, "What for?" He answered, "I don't know."

That was all she asked on such occasions. When he told her that he did not know, that was enough. President Woodruff got up and moved his carriage four or five rods, and put the off fore wheel against the corner of the house. He then returned to bed. The same Spirit said, "Go and move your animals from that oak tree." They were two hundred yards from his carriage. He moved his horses and put them in a little hickory grove. Again he went to bed. In thirty minutes a whirlwind came up and broke that oak tree off within two feet of the ground. It swept over three or four fences and fell square in that dooryard, near Brother Orson Hyde's wagon, and right where the carriage had stood. What would have been the consequences if he had not listened to that Spirit? Why, President Woodruff, his wife, and children doubtless would have been killed.

That was the still, small voice to him—no thunder, no lightning, but the still, small voice of the Spirit of God. It saved his life. It was the Spirit of revelation.

We can all afford to develop a sensitiveness to the promptings of the Spirit in all things pertaining to our physical as well as our spiritual well-being.

In speaking on this subject, Joseph Fielding Smith has said, "The testimony of the Holy Ghost is Spirit speaking to spirit, and is not confined solely to the natural or physical sense."

I bear witness to you, my beloved brethren and sisters, that there is the testimony of the Spirit. I know by the manifestation of the Spirit that Jesus is the Christ, the Risen Lord, the Master of us all, whose sins he took upon himself. I know that through his redeeming sacrifice immortality and eternal life is ours, through our obedience to the great plan of life and salvation of which he was the Author.

May we all become in our own right, saviors upon Mount Zion, instruments in the hands of the Lord in helping to establish his Church and kingdom here upon the earth, continually bearing our witness in his behalf, that the world may know that God has once again spoken from the heavens to give us direction and purpose in our lives. We as his duly ordained servants come to open the door to all who seek righteousness.

The Lord has said:

"... this is my work and my glory—to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man" (Moses 1:39)—a result which cannot be accomplished without understanding from on high, an understanding which the Almighty alone can inspire.

God help us to accomplish the high purposes he has for us in life, I pray humbly, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Elder Henry D. Moyle of the Council of the Twelve has just concluded speaking.

The Choir will now sing "How Lovely Is Thy Dwelling Place." The benediction will be offered by President Raymond P. Larson of the Morgan Stake.

We wish to say a word of appreciation to these young folks who have come from the Brigham Young University to render service today. Whenever the choruses have come from Provo to furnish the singing for the sessions of Conference, those listening in and the congregations have always been uplifted and inspired. The students today have been no exception. We thank you. You have represented your school in honor, and you have rendered a service to our great Conference. God bless you and your leaders.

A meeting devoted to the work of the stake and foreign missions will be held in the Tabernacle this evening at seven o'clock. All stake mission presidents, stake missionaries, the presidencies of stakes, are requested to attend this meeting. An invitation is extended also to members of high councils, bishoprics, presidents of seventies quorums, and the general boards of auxiliary organizations. Mission presidents in attendance at the Conference are expected to be present.

Further, an agricultural meeting sponsored by the General Church Welfare Committee will be held tomorrow morning at 7:30 o'clock in the Assembly Hall. The following are invited to attend: stake presidents, bishops, or their representatives, all ward and stake agricultural representatives and others interested in agriculture.

The choir will now sing "How Lovely Is Thy Dwelling Place," and the benediction will be offered by President Raymond P. Larson of the Morgan Stake, after which this Conference will be adjourned until tomorrow morning at 10:00 o'clock.

The Combined Choruses sang the selection, "How Lovely Is Thy Dwelling Place."

My brothers and sisters, we are again at a time when we sustain the officers of this Church and its organizations, as already announced by President McKay.

I take the liberty of again reminding you that you here assembled are voting for the Church. In a very true sense you are a constituent assembly, you represent the Church, you will be asked to sustain, or otherwise, those who are proposed to be sustained, and I would like to urge upon you the realization that this is not a pro-forma presentation. It is a presentation in which those who vote in the affirmative pledge themselves with their uplifted hands that they will sustain those for whom they vote. And this sustaining means that you will support, follow, and obey in the proper ways those who preside over you.

Second Counselor in the First Presidency

MY BROTHERS AND SISTERS, contrary to my usual custom and practice, I intend to read what I have to say today. I assure you I have tried to prepare it under the influence of our Heavenly Father, and I humbly pray that it will carry the message which I have hoped for.

I plan to say something today about the Constitution of the United States of America — its Framers and some of its essential principles — America, the land choice above all other lands — for our great and priceless liberties, including the security of our homes and property, our freedom of speech and of the press, freedom of religion and the free exercise thereof, indeed freedom itself and its liberties, as our fathers knew and enjoyed, as also ourselves, depend upon its preservation. As there is much detail and as I wish to be as accurate as I may be, I have written out what I wish to say.

It seems wise to remind ourselves of these matters because some people belittle that great document and its fundamental principles, sometimes to the point of derision. Sometimes we forget the Constitution.

Constitution "Outmoded"

These defamers say that the Constitution, and our government under it, are outmoded; not responsive to present-day conditions of life and living; not sufficient to meet and solve present-day problems; and that we need a modern, up-to-date system of government. They let us know what should be done to meet their ideas and plans, which seem always to run to despotism.

I have observed that numbers of these defamers take advantage to the utmost of every liberty and freedom created and protected by the Constitution in order to destroy it and its guarantees, so to make easy the setting up of a tyranny that would deprive the common man of his freedom and liberties under it, so permitting these defamers to set up a government that would give place, power, and privilege to them in a despotism to be imposed upon the mass of mankind. We have witnessed this very despotism. There would be a Kremlin in every country on the globe, all under the super-Kremlin in Moscow.

Ten Commandments "Outmoded"

One class of these defamers are the same persons who declare the Ten Commandments, the basic law of the civilized world, to be outmoded, although these Commandments still speak with their divine power and authority against the same evils existing today, each one of them, not one missing, even as they existed in the days of Moses; Commandments that proclaim righteous principles that are as valid and applicable today as when, on Mt. Sinai, they were written on slabs of stone by the finger of God. Sinners would get rid of the divine rebukes and penalties prescribed for their wickedness and would treat as naught the promised rewards for that righteous life that would rob them of the fleshly pleasures of sin.

Sermon on the Mount "Outmoded"

The same people declare the Sermon on the Mount to be outmoded, irresponsible to the needs of the people of today. The divine truths of the Sermon, its surpassing loveliness, indeed the sublimity of its ethical teachings, do not, say they, harmonize with their modern life where we see greed, ambition, selfishness, dishonesty, deceit, falsehood, and licentiousness thrive and on which they live and riot. We have noted this experiment also.

If all that God and his Only Begotten taught that will lead us to the immortality and eternal life that is God's declared glory, could be wiped out and forgotten, leaving only Satan and his work, the followers of Satan would, in their ignorance, have reached a Satanic heaven.

Organization of Constitutional Convention

The Constitution of the United States was framed in Independence Hall, Philadelphia, May 14, 1787, to September 17, 1787. The Framers were delegates sent thereto by the Thirteen Colonies. Seventy-four were appointed; fifty-five reported at the Convention; nineteen did not attend; thirty-nine signed the Constitution. Representatives signed from each of the Colonies except Rhode Island.

Bill of Rights

The Constitution as signed lacked a Bill of Rights, though these rights were discussed in the Convention. As the Colonies voted to ratify the Constitution, each proposed amendments to remedy the omission. Over one hundred amendments were proposed. Some forty to fifty were eliminated as duplications.

Seventeen were finally approved by the House of the First Congress; the Senate reduced the number to twelve, which were sent to the various legislatures for ratification. The final returns showed that ten had been ratified.

Historical Experience of Framers

The Framers and their fathers had in the preceding seventy-five years, fought through four purely European wars — in America between the British and her colonists on one side, and the French and her Indian allies on the other. The colonists had little, if any, concern in the European issues. They fought because the homelands fought. In the first three of these wars the colonists lost much, suffered massacres. Yet at the end of each war, each European government returned, each to the other, the gains either had made in America. The colonists had heavy losses, had no gains except the experience that builded up over the decades, experience that aided them, first, in winning their independence, and, thereafter, in establishing this Government.

No wonder Washington in his Farewell Address counseled against foreign entanglements. He stated the reasons drawn from colonial experience.

The French and Indian War, the last of the four, broke the French foothold on the Continent. Washington participated in that war as an officer and suffered in Braddock's defeat at Fort Duquesne.

During a part of this whole period, the colonial legislatures had been fighting against royal representatives; in the earlier decade the fathers of the Framers carried on these contests; in the latter years, many of the Framers were themselves involved.

Movement for Independence

The movement for independence began soon after the close of the French and Indian War; for example, the Committees of Correspondence. Some of the very best minds and ablest men in the Colonies participated. Framers served on these earlier revolutionary bodies. Many Framers were members of the Continental Congress. When the Revolution came, they had the experiences, bitter as to both men and money, that came to that Congress in raising troops and materials of war. They had knowledge. Some were experienced in the actual problems of conducting a war. One at least, Franklin, had seen distinguished service in the diplomatic field.

Saturday, April 6

Second Day

Characters of Framers

The Framers were men of affairs in their own right. Some were distinguished financiers. More than half of them were university men, some educated in the leading American colleges—Harvard, Yale, Columbia, Princeton, William and Mary; others in the great colleges of Great Britain—Oxford, Glasgow, Edinburgh. Washington and Franklin were among those who had no college education. Altogether there were seventy-four delegates appointed; fifty-five who reported at the Convention, "all of them," it has been said, "respectable for family and for personal qualities." Of these fifty-five, only thirty-nine were present at the signing. Nineteen failed to attend the convention.

They were men of varied political beliefs. Some were Federalists; some anti-Federalists. Some seemed favorable to a mere revamping of the Articles of Confederation.

No Political "Blueprint" Available

The amazing thing is that there was not in all the world's history a government organization even among confederacies, that could be taken by the Framers as a preliminary blueprint for building the political structure they were to build. Franklin declared:

"We have gone back to ancient history for models of Government, and examined the different forms of those Republics which, having been formed with the seeds of their own dissolution, now no longer exist. And we have viewed Modern States all round Europe, but find none of their Constitutions suitable to our circumstances."

They had been in session for about a month (June 26, 1787) when Madison declared:

"... as it was more than probable we were now digesting a plan which in its operation w<sup>d</sup> decide forever the fate of Republican Gov<sup>t</sup> we ought not only to provide every guard to liberty that its preservation c<sup>d</sup> require, but be equally careful to supply the defects which our own experience had particularly pointed out."

Who the Framers Were

A little further detail about the thirty-nine Framers who actually signed the document will be useful.

Of those thirty-nine signers, twenty-six had seen service in the Continental Congress. They knew legislative processes and problems. Thirteen had served both in the Continental Congress and in the Army. What a wealth of experience they had obtained in both legislative and executive duties! Of the nineteen who served in the Army, seventeen had served as officers—they knew the problems of armed forces in the field; and of these seventeen, four had served on Washington's staff.

Let us go down the roll: Washington, the "Father of his Country," and Madison, sometimes called the "Father of the Constitution," were later Presidents of the United States. Hamilton (a financial genius) was Secretary of the Treasury under Washington. McHenry (Maryland) was Secretary of War under Washington. Randolph (Virginia) acted as Attorney General for Washington and later as his Secretary of State. Rutledge (South Carolina), a distinguished jurist, was later Chief Justice in the United States Supreme Court. Oliver Ellsworth (absent when the Constitution was signed) was also later a Chief Justice of the Supreme Court. Blair, Paterson, and Wilson were later Justices of the Supreme Court. (Wilson had been on the Board of War and Ordnance in the Second Continental Congress.)

Benjamin Franklin, a philosopher and scientist, had behind him years of most distinguished and successful diplomatic service. King (Massachusetts) was later a Senator and thereafter Minister to Great Britain. Charles Pinckney (South Carolina) was Minister to Spain. Dickinson (Delaware) founded Dickinson College, and Johnson (Connecticut) was President of Columbia College.

Gerry (Massachusetts) was later Vice-President of the United States, and Ingersoll (Pennsylvania) a candidate for the Vice-Presidency.

Gorham (Massachusetts) and Mifflin (Pennsylvania) had been Presidents of the Continental Congress; Clymer (Pennsylvania), Continental Treasurer; Robert Morris (Pennsylvania), Superintendent of Finances; Sherman (Connecticut), a member of the Board of War and Ordnance, all in the Continental Congress.

We might add, as among the most distinguished of this group, the other Morris (Gouverneur) from Pennsylvania, and the other Pinckney (Charles Cotesworth) from South Carolina.

There were many other distinguished men. They were distinguished before the time of the Convention; they won great distinction after. Men of affairs and influence, they were in their respective Colonies, later States. They were all seasoned patriots of loftiest patriotism. They were not backwoodsmen from the far-off frontiers, not one of them.

What a group of men of surpassing abilities, attainments, experience, and achievements! There has not been another such group of men in all the one hundred seventy years of our history, no group that even challenged the supremacy of this group. Gladstone solemnly declared:

"The American Constitution is the most wonderful work ever struck off at a given time by the brain and purpose of man."

When God Plows His Furrow

When God puts his hand to the plow, his furrow is deep and straight, clear to the end. God gave us the heritage; ours is the duty to cherish and protect it. We have, as a people, a special relationship to these men and their work.

In a revelation to Joseph at Kirtland at the time of some of the darkest days in Missouri (December 16, 1833), when there seemed to be no protection for the Saints from the civil authorities, the Lord spoke. He told the people to continue to "importune for redress. . . ."

"According to the laws and constitution of the people, which I have suffered to be established, and should be maintained for the rights and protection of all flesh, according to just and holy principles;

"That every man may act in doctrine and principle pertaining to futurity, according to the moral agency which I have given unto him, that every man may be accountable for his own sins in the day of judgment.

"Therefore, it is not right that any man should be in bondage one to another.

"And for this purpose have I established the Constitution of this land, by the hands of wise men whom I raised up unto this very purpose, and redeemed the land by the shedding of blood." (D & C 101:77-80.)

A little time before this, the Lord declared that the constitutional "principle of freedom in maintaining rights and privileges, belongs to all mankind, and is justifiable before me," and that the people should "renounce war and proclaim peace." (August 6, 1833, ibid., 98:5, 16.)

When (1833) the Lord gave these approving revelations, the Constitution with its coterminous Bill of Rights, was almost fifty years old. Two amendments only had then been made; one (1798) concerned the Federal judicial power, the other (1804) the election of President and Vice President. Some thirty years later (1865, 1868) came the next two amendments terminating slavery and guaranteeing citizenship and its protection, so meeting the principle declared by the Lord in 1833 regarding bondage of men, one to another.

In the prayer of dedication of the Kirtland Temple, the Prophet prayed: ". . . may those principles, which were so honorably and nobly defended, namely, the Constitution of our land, by our fathers, be established forever." (Ibid., 109:54, March 27, 1836.)

In 1835 (August 17), at a general assembly of the Church held at Kirtland, a far-reaching "Declaration of Belief regarding Governments and Laws in general" was adopted by the Saints. (Ibid., 134.)

These Framers of the Constitution were the men whom the Lord "raised up unto this very purpose, and redeemed the land by the shedding of blood,"

Saturday, April 6

Second Day

making it ready for the blessings proclaimed for all.

Preparation of Framers

No more clearly does it appear that Moses was so trained in the royal Egyptian courts that he could lead ancient Israel out of bondage, or that Brother Brigham was so trained, in directing the exodus of the Saints from Missouri to Nauvoo, that he could lead modern Israel from the mobbings and persecutions of the East to the freedom of the mountain fastnesses of the West; neither one was more clearly trained for his work than these Framers were trained for theirs—rich in intellectual endowment and ripened in experience. They were equally as the others in God's hands; he guided them in their epoch-making deliberations in Independence Hall.

The Framers were deeply read in the facts of history; they were learned in the forms and practices and systems of the governments of the world, past and present; they were, in matters political, equally at home in Rome, in Athens, in Paris, and in London; they had a long, varied, and intense experience in the work of governing their various Colonies; they were among the leaders of a weak and poor people that had successfully fought a revolution against one of the great Powers of the earth; there were among them some of the ablest, most experienced and seasoned military leaders of the world.

As to all matters under consideration by the Convention, the history of the world was combed for applicable experiences and precedents.

The whole training and experiences of the colonists had been in the Common Law, with its freedoms and liberties even under their kings. They knew the functions of legislative, executive, and judicial arms of government.

Some Constitutional Principles

Time is not available now to consider in detail the work of the Convention nor the Constitution that was framed. A very few principles only, and they among the basic ones, may be mentioned. You all know them; they are now merely recalled to your minds. Sometimes we miss the import of them.

Three Independent Branches

First—The Constitution provided for three departments of government—the legislative, the executive, and the judicial.

These departments are mutually independent the one from the other.

Each department was endowed with all the powers and authority that the people through the Constitution conferred upon that branch of government—the legislative, the executive, and the judicial, respectively.

No Encroachment by One Branch Upon Another

No branch of the government might encroach upon the powers conferred upon another branch of government. In order to forestall foreseeable encroachments, the Convention provided in the Constitution itself for a very few invasions by one or the other, into one of the other departments, to make sure that one department should not absorb the functions of the other or encroach thereon, or gain an overbalancing power and authority against the other. These have been termed "checks and balances."

Non-delegation of Powers

A third principle that was inherent in all the provisions of the Constitution was that none of the departments could delegate its powers to the others. The courts of the country have from the first insisted upon the operation of this principle. There have been some fancy near-approaches to such an attempted delegation, particularly in recent years, and some unique justifying reasoning therefor, but the courts have consistently insisted upon the basic principle, which is still operative.

An examination of the records of the Convention will show how anxiously earnest the Framers were to set up these and other principles of free government.

No Kings in America

The Convention seems to have experienced no really serious difficulty in setting up a judiciary department, nor, in certain aspects, the legislative department with its powers, until it came to those powers which dealt with matters that in some governments had been regarded as belonging to the executive. You will recollect that practically all of these Framers had suffered under George III and his Minister, Lord North. So they abandoned the British model, for, as Randolph said, ". . . the fixt genius of the people of America required a different form of Government." This ruled out royalty.

It might be noted that Washington, as the Revolution closed, had definitively scotched at Newburgh, the kingship idea.

Kings and America

Of course, the Framers did not know (no living mortal then knew) that centuries before a prophet of the Lord had declared as to America:

"Behold, this is a choice land, and whatsoever nation shall possess it shall be free from bondage, and from captivity, and from all other nations under heaven, if they will but serve the God of the land, who is Jesus Christ, who hath been manifested by the things which we have written." (Ether 2:12.)

Nor did the Framers know (again, no living mortal then knew) that centuries after this prophecy, but still centuries before the Framers met, another prophet had declared:

"And this land shall be a land of liberty unto the Gentiles, and there shall be no kings upon the land, who shall raise up unto the Gentiles." (2 Nephi 10:11.)

The unhappy, short-lived experiences of the Dom Pedros in Brazil and of Maximilian in Mexico seem the exceptions that prove the rule. The Spirit of the Lord was leading.

The National Executive

In providing for the executive department, there was considerable discussion as to whether the executive department should be one person or several. Commenting upon a proposal for three,

Randolph said their unity would be "as the foetus of monarchy."

Who should choose, elect, or appoint (the terms were used almost interchangeably) the Chief Executive was exhaustively debated; so was the problem of the length of his term, from one year, to Hamilton's during "good behaviour," including the question whether he should be ineligible for re-election, and whether he should be subject to impeachment.

Power to Declare War

But one of their most searching examinations related to the war powers of government, including the power to declare war. It became clear very early in the debates that as Chief Executive, the President should execute the laws passed by Congress. But he was also made Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States and of the State Militia when called into the service of the United States. The delegates were fearfully anxious over this function of government. There was one suggestion that the Commander in Chief should not personally go into the field with the troops, so fearful were they of his power.

Where War Powers Rest

But in whom should rest the so-called war powers? This was the urgent problem. It soon became clear that the Convention was unalterably opposed to endowing the President with these war powers; it was conceded he should have the power to repel invasions, but not to commence war, which meant he could not declare war.

Chief Executives Conceived as Plain Human Beings

Some of the arguments made in this connection, involving the possibility of a military usurper, remind one of the potential calamities pictured by Lincoln in his prophetic Lyceum Address, where he sketched what an ambitious, fame-and-power-seeking executive might do.

Various other potential actions by the executive were explored. Future Presidents of the Republic were conceived as including men capable of doing the things that ambitious men in power had done over the ages. Men were still human, had the same urges and ambitions. The earnest effort was to make as nearly impossible as could be, the malfeasances of the past by men in high executive office in the future; and seemingly perhaps beyond everything else as a practical matter, to prevent the President from taking us into war of his own volition. The Framers therefore provided that the war powers, including the declaration of war, should rest exclusively in the Congress, both by express provisions, and, as the record shows, by the conscious intent of the Framers.

The Net Position of the National Executive

The net result may be stated thus: as Chief Executive, the President was to enforce the laws passed by Congress, including those passed by Congress in the exercise of the war powers that were explicitly and exclusively possessed by Congress; as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States and of the Militia of the States when called into the actual service of the United States, he was to direct the military operations thereof in the field, with the powers incident thereto.

These principles should never be forgotten by any free, liberty-loving American, the kind of American the Constitution and the Bill of Rights make of us, and in which they were designed to protect us.

The People Are Sovereign

Furthermore, under our form of government, we the people of the United States, as the Preamble to the Constitution declares, formed this government. We alone are sovereign. We are wholly free to exercise our sovereign will in the way we prescribe. The sovereignty is not personal, as under the Civil Law. The Constitution expressly provides the only way in which we may change our Constitution.

We may well repeat again: We the people have all the powers we have not delegated away to our government, and the institutions of government have such powers and those only as we have given to them. The total residuum of powers, including all rights and liberties not given up by us to Federal or State Governments, is still in us, to remain so till we constitutionally provide otherwise. Under the Civil Law that basically governs Continental Europe, the people have only such rights as a personal sovereign or his equivalent bestows, the residuum remaining in him or them. Wherever and whenever powers are exercised by any person or branch of our government that are not granted by the Constitution, such powers are to that extent usurpations.

The Constitution and Ourselves

WILL NOT EACH of you ask yourself this question: What would probably have happened if Joseph Smith had been born and had attempted to carry on his work of the Restoration of the Gospel and the Holy Priesthood, if he had been born and had sought to go forward in any other country in the world?

Must we go far to seek why God set up this people and their government, the only government on the face of the earth, since the Master was here, that God has formally declared was set up at the hands of men whom he raised up for that very purpose, and the fundamental principles of which he has expressly approved?

Constitution Is Part of My Religion

Having in mind what the Lord has said about the Constitution and its Framers, that the Constitution should be "established, and should be maintained for the rights and protection of all flesh," that it was for the protection of the moral agency, free agency, God gave us, that its "principle of freedom in maintaining rights and privileges, belongs to all mankind," all of which point to the destiny of the free government our Constitution provides, unless thrown away by the nations—having in mind all this, with its implications, speaking for myself, I declare that the divine sanction thus repeatedly given by the Lord himself to the Constitution of the United States as it came from the hands of the Framers with its coter-minous Bill of Rights, makes of the principles of that document an integral part of my religious faith. It is a revelation from the Lord. I believe and reverence its God-inspired provisions. My faith, my knowledge, my testimony of the Restored Gospel, based on the divine principle of continuous revelation, compel me so to believe. Thus has the Lord approved of our political system, an approval, so far as I know, such as he has given to no other political system of any other people in the world since the time of Jesus.

The Constitution, as approved by the Lord, is still the same great vanguard of liberty and freedom in human government that it was the day it was written. No other human system of government, affording equal protection for human life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, has yet been devised or vouchsafed to man. Its great principles are as applicable, efficient, and sufficient to bring today the greatest good to the greatest number, as they were the day the Constitution was signed. Our Constitution and our Government under it, were designed by God as an instrumentality for righteousness through peace, not war.

Our Constitutional Destiny

Speaking of the destiny that the Lord has offered to mankind in his declarations regarding the scope and efficacy of the Constitution and its principles, we may note that already the Lord has moved upon many nations of the earth so to go forward. The Latin American countries have followed our lead and adopted our constitutional form of government, adapted to their legal concepts, without compulsion or restraint from us. Likewise, the people of Canada in the British North America Act have embodied great principles that are basic to our Constitution. The people of Australia have likewise followed along our governmental footpath. In Canada and in Australia, the great constitutional decisions of John Marshall and his associates are quoted in their courts and followed in their adjudications. I repeat, none of this has come because of force of arms. The Constitution will never reach its destiny through force.

God's principles are taken by men because they are eternal and true, and touch the divine spirit in men. This is the only true way to permanent world peace, the aspiration of men since the beginning. God never planted his Spirit, his truth, in the hearts of men from the point of a bayonet.

The Framers had their dark days in their work. There were discouragements, there were hours of near hopelessness for some. Yet, as they were engaged in God's work, and he was at the helm, we know it was as certain as the day dawn, that Satan would be there also, with his thwarting designs.

But I see in their divers views, their different concepts, even the promotion of their different local interests, not the confusion which challenged Franklin, but a searching, almost meticulous study and examination of the fundamental principles involved, and the final adoption of the wisest and best of it all—I see the winnowing of the wheat, the blowing away of the chaff.

Franklin's Prayer

On one of these dark days, the venerable Franklin, ripe in years and in experience, arose and spoke to the Convention (June 28, 1787). Said he:

"The small progress we have made after 4 or five weeks close attendance & continual reasonings with each other—our different sentiments on almost every question, several of the last producing as many noes as ayes, is methinks a melancholy proof of the imperfection of the Human Understanding. We indeed seem to feel our own want of political wisdom, since we have been running about in search of it. We have gone back to ancient history for models of Government, and examined the different forms of those Republics which having been formed with the seeds of their own dissolution now no longer exist. And we have viewed Modern States all round Europe, but find none of their Constitutions suitable to our circumstances.

"In this situation of this Assembly, groping as it were in the dark to find political truth, and scarce able to distinguish it when presented to us, how

Saturday, April 6

Second Day

has it happened, Sir, that we have not hitherto once thought of humbly applying to the Father of lights to illuminate our understandings? In the beginning of the Contest with G. Britain, when we were sensible of danger we had daily prayer in this room for the divine protection.—Our prayers, Sir, were heard, and they were graciously answered. All of us who were engaged in the struggle must have observed frequent instances of a Superintending providence in our favor. To that kind providence we owe this happy opportunity of consulting in peace on the means of establishing our future national felicity. And have we now forgotten that powerful friend? or do we imagine that we no longer need his assistance? I have lived, Sir, a long time, and the longer I live, the more convincing proofs I see of this truth—that God governs in the affairs of men. And if a sparrow cannot fall to the ground without his notice, is it probable that an empire can rise without his aid? We have been assured, Sir, in the sacred writings, that 'except the Lord build the House they labour in vain that build it.' I firmly believe this; and I also believe that without his concurring aid we shall succeed in this political building no better than the Builders of Babel: We shall be divided by our little partial local interests; our projects will be confounded, and we ourselves shall become a reproach and by word down to future ages. And what is worse, mankind may hereafter from this unfortunate instance, despair of establishing Governments by Human Wisdom and leave it to chance, war and conquest." So spoke Franklin.

My Witness

Out of more years, but of far, far less wisdom and experience, I echo Franklin's testimony "that God governs in the affairs of men," and that without his concurring aid we shall build in vain, and "our projects will be confounded, and we ourselves shall become a reproach and by word down to future ages."

I bear my testimony that without God's aid, we shall not preserve our political heritage neither to our own blessing, nor to the blessing of our posterity, nor to the blessing of the down-trodden peoples of the world.

In broad outline, the Lord has declared through our Constitution his form for human government. Our own prophets have declared in our day the responsibility of the Elders of Zion in the preservation of the Constitution. We cannot, guiltless, escape that responsibility. We cannot be laggards, nor can we be deserters.

On the back of the chair in which Washington sat as President during the Convention, was carved a half-hidden sun, showing just above a range of hills. As the signing of the Constitution was about over, Franklin observed to some fellow delegates:

"I have often and often, in the course of the session, and the vicissitudes of my hopes and fears as to its issue, looked at that (sun) behind the President, without being able to tell whether it was rising or setting; but now, at length, I have the happiness to know that it is a rising, and not a setting sun."

Such was the prophecy that marked the closing of the greatest political convention of all time, for the Lord was there working out his purposes in a system he could endorse.

God give us the power, each of us, to enshrine in our hearts the eternal truths of our Constitution; that come what may, we shall never desert these truths, but work always and unceasingly that, as Lincoln said, "government of the people, by the people, for the people, shall not perish from the earth."

Such is my prayer, and I ask it in the name of Jesus. Amen.

ELDER EZRA TAFT BENSON

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

MY BELOVED brethren and sisters, humbly and gratefully I approach this sobering responsibility. I am grateful for this conference. I have had a prayer in my heart in the last few moments that every person living in this world might have the opportunity to hear and to read the masterful address given by our beloved President at the beginning of this conference and the great and statesmanlike address to which we have just listened from President Clark.

For months I have had borne in upon my heart a desire to discuss a certain matter in this conference which I feel impressed to discuss with you. I hope I will not be misunderstood. I assure you that I also need the counsel which I am about to express.

In the book of Kings we read about a woman who came weeping to Elisha, the prophet. Her husband had died, and she owed a debt that she could not pay; and the creditor was on his way to take her two sons and sell them as slaves.

By a miracle Elisha enabled her to acquire a goodly supply of oil. And he said to her:

Go, sell the oil, and pay thy debt, and live thou and thy children of the rest. (II Kings 4:1-7.)

"Pay thy debt, and live." How fruitful these words have ever been! What wise counsel they are for us today!

Read the words of wise men down through the ages, and we find over and over again this great insistence upon the wisdom of being debt-free. Shakespeare put on the lips of one of his characters in Hamlet these words:

Neither a borrower nor a lender be;
For loan oft loses both itself and friend,
And borrowing dulls the edge of husbandry.

Others have written:

Do not accustom yourself to debt as only a convenience; you will find it a calamity. (Johnson)

The debt-habit is the twin brother of poverty. (Munger)

Poverty is hard—but debt is horrible, said another philosopher. (Surgeon)

John Randolph, one of the early leaders of our nation, remarked:

I have discovered the philosopher's stone that turns everything into gold; it is, "Pay as you go."

And one of the wisest men in the annals of our country, Ben Franklin, wrote:

Think what you do when you run into debt; you give to another power over your liberty.

True, times have changed since Franklin's day, but the principles of truth and wisdom never change. Our inspired leaders have always urged Latter-day Saints to get out of debt, live within our means, and pay as we go.

Our own pioneer forefathers have left us a heritage of thrift—of saving—of freedom from debt.

Surely they would counsel us today: "Pay thy debt, and live."

I speak to you today of a twofold duty which all of us have—a duty to our country as Americans—and a duty to ourselves as individuals, as children of God.

Never has a nation been so blessed with productivity as we in this land. Last year our output of goods and services reached the enormous value of 412 billion dollars. This was an increase in terms of real value of more than forty percent in the last ten years. The increase in output for each person since 1946 has been nearly twenty percent.

Saturday, April 6

Second Day

Whence comes this astounding capacity to produce? I am deeply convinced that it lies in the blessings of our Heavenly Father and in the untrammelled initiative, enterprise, and freedom of our people, in the fact that success or failure of our nation rests primarily with the people.

Yet, despite our wealth, our productivity, our material progress, do we not see signs of danger ahead? Do we not discern unhealthy tendencies, perhaps even germs of decay, in a general weakening of some of our oldest American traditions?

In the past quarter century, there has been a tremendous shift from individual to governmental responsibility in many phases of economic and social life. There has been a rapid shift of responsibility from the states to the federal government.

Twenty-five years ago the federal government received one-fourth of all the taxes collected in the United States. Today the federal government collects not one-fourth but three-fourths of all our taxes. Twenty-five years ago all taxes, federal, state, and local, took fourteen percent of our national income. Today, taxes take thirty-one percent.

In twenty-four years, our expanding federal government has boosted the average family's tax bill from 120 to 1600 dollars a year. In twenty-four years the national debt has swollen to an average of 7,000 dollars for each family.

Many forces work together toward the concentration of power at the federal level. Our people have come to look to the federal government as the provider, at no cost to them, of whatever is needful. If this trend continues, the states may be left hollow shells, operating primarily as the field districts of federal departments and depending upon the federal treasury for their support.

The national debt today is 277 billion dollars, equal to two-thirds of a year's total income. Interest on this debt is more than seven billion dollars a year, about sixty percent as much as the net income of all our farm people.

Through a great effort, in this the period of our greatest prosperity, we reduced this debt by four billion dollars last year (1956), and the expectation is for a further slight reduction this year. This but illustrates how much easier it is to go into debt than to get out.

History teaches that when individuals have given up looking after their own economic needs and transferred a large share of that responsibility to the government, both they and the government have failed.

At least twenty great civilizations have disappeared. The pattern is shockingly similar. All, before their collapse, showed a decline in spiritual values, in moral stamina, and in the freedom and responsibility of their citizens. They showed such symptoms as excessive taxation, bloated bureaucracy, government paternalism, and generally a rather elaborate set of supports, controls, and regulations, affecting prices, wages, production, and consumption.

When we add up our total debt—debt owed by federal, state, and local governments, by business and by individuals—the sum is a staggering 693 billion dollars. In ten years, our total debt has risen nearly 300 billion dollars—about seventy-five percent. Most of this increase was in private debts, which climbed from 252 to 425 billion dollars, or an increase of seventy percent.

We have mortgaged our future. We have done so because we live beyond our income.

Now I do not mean to say that all debt is bad. Of course not. Sound business debt is one of the elements of growth. Sound mortgage credit is a real help to a family that must borrow for a home.

But is it not apparent that in the areas of both public and personal debt the limitations of soundness have been seriously strained?

Personal income, even after taxes, on a per capita basis, is the highest it has ever been. Yet mortgage debt and personal debt have been increasing. Between December 1952 and December 1956, home mortgage debt rose sixty-nine percent. This was by no means due entirely to the building boom.

Personal debt has also sharply increased—reaching a total of 42 billion dollars at the end of 1956, compared with about 9 billion dollars only fifteen years earlier. The increase in personal debt during the past two years exceeded the total personal debt outstanding in 1954. No matter which income group we select, the proportion of people with such debt has increased since 1949. A few years ago only one family out of three owed personal debts; now more than half have such obligations.

Why this great increase in debt today?

Have incomes declined so that people must borrow money to maintain their level of living? No, incomes generally have shown a steady climb to the present record level.

Is there something about the distribution of income which explains this increase in debt? No, strangely enough, personal debt is reported most frequently not for the low but for the middle income brackets, those families with incomes from $3000 to $7500 annually.

How, then, can we explain the increase in private debt?

One reason, I believe, is that the adult experience of many people covers only the period of the war and postwar inflationary period, the years of high employment and high income since the early 'forties. During these years, those who went in debt to buy a home or a farm saw the value of their equity increase. Those who bought cars or home utilities experienced relatively little difficulty in paying for them. Wages and prices rose. Incomes increased. The longer one postponed a purchase, the more he had to pay.

For many of these people it is difficult to believe that serious recession will ever come again. Feeling secure in their expectations of continuing employment and a steady flow of wages and salaries, they obligate their future income without thought of what they would do if they should lose their jobs or their incomes were stopped for some other reason. But the best authorities have repeatedly said that we are not yet smart enough to control our economy without downward adjustments. Sooner or later these adjustments will come.

Another reason for the increase in debt, I believe, is deeper—and causes greater concern. This is the rise of materialism as contrasted with spiritual values. Many a family, in order to make a "proper showing," will commit itself for a larger and more expensive house than is needed, in an expensive neighborhood. Again almost everyone would, it seems, like to keep up with the Joneses. With the increasing standard of living, that temptation increases with each new gadget that comes on the market. The subtle and carefully planned techniques of modern advertising are aimed at the weakest points of consumer resistance. And there is a growing feeling, unfortunately, that material things should be had now, without waiting, without saving, without self-denial.

How many people stop to think when they buy on a thirty-six-months-to-pay basis that they place their future earnings for three years ahead in the hands of moneylenders. What is there about a late model car that can make such a sacrifice worth while?

Worse still, a large proportion of families with personal debt have no liquid assets whatsoever to fall back upon. What troubles they invite if their income should be suddenly cut off or seriously reduced! We all know of families who have obligated themselves for more than they could pay.

There is a world of heartache behind such cases.

All of us as Americans have a patriotic responsibility not to contribute to the inflation danger by needlessly building still higher the mountain of total debt. All of us as individuals—and above all, as members of families—have an obligation in conscience not to mismanage our resources.

Yes, there is a tendency for all of us to want to "keep up with the Joneses," but even though our income is low we have plenty of company. This should make it easier to live within our income and resist borrowing from the future except in cases of necessity—never for luxuries.

It is not fair to ourselves or our communities to be so improvident in our spending that the day our income stops we must turn to relief agencies or the Church for financial aid.

Do not, I solemnly urge you, tie yourselves to the payment of carrying charges that are often exorbitant. Save now and buy later, and you will be much farther ahead. You will spare yourselves high interest and other payments, and the money you save may provide opportunity for you to buy later at substantial cash discounts.

Saturday, April 6

Second Day

If you must incur debt to meet the reasonable necessities of life—such as buying a house and furniture—then, I implore you, as you value your solvency and happiness, buy within your means.

So, use credit wisely—to acquire a farm, to own a home.

But resist the temptation to plunge into a property far more pretentious or spacious than you really need.

How much better off you will be, especially young families just starting out, if first you buy a small house which you can expect to pay for in a relatively short time. Such a house in a neighborhood where values are increasing will usually provide the basis for a very large down payment on a bigger home when you are ready for it.

True, you can sometimes buy with little or no down payment, and on long terms. But these terms mean that a very large part of your total payments will go to pay interest charges, not to retire the principal of the debt. Remember, interest never sleeps or takes a holiday. Such payments of interest can easily become a tremendous burden, especially when you add to them taxes and cost of repairs.

Do not leave yourself or your family unprotected against financial storms. Forego luxuries, for the time being at least, to build up savings. How wise it is to provide for the future education of children and for old age.

The smaller the family income, the more important it is that every dollar be used wisely. Efficient spending and saving will give the family more security, more opportunities, more education, and a higher standard of living.

As I look back on the establishment of my own home I'm grateful for a companion who, although accustomed to many of the luxuries of life, was willing to start humbly.

Vividly, I recall her doing the washing by hand until we could buy a secondhand washer. There was no overstuffed furniture; there was no carpeting on the floors. As a graduate student on a $70-a-month scholarship, I recall entertaining at dinner the head of the department at the college. He sat down at a card table—which was not used for cards—because there was no dining table. We gathered vegetables from the college experimental plots to cut down on the grocery bill and live within our means. Many have had similar experiences in a determination to make ends meet.

Now, when personal incomes nationally are at the highest level in history, is the time to pay off obligations.

I doubt that there will be soon again a more favorable time for Latter-day Saints generally to get out of debt than now. Let us use the opportunity we have to speed up repayment of mortgages and to set aside provisions for education, possible periods of decreased earning power, and emergencies the future may hold.

Truly, man does not live by bread alone. A good name is still to be preferred to great riches. Especially is it to be preferred to the appearance of riches, acquired with nothing down and nothing to pay for two months.

Stewardship, not conspicuous consumption, is the proper relationship of man to material wealth.

There may never be a more favorable time than now for most people to get their financial house in order so far as debt is concerned.

Yes, let us live within our income. Let us pay as we go. Let us "pay thy debt, and live!"

Cry unto the Lord for strength to heed the counsel of the oracles of God. The prophet Amulek said:

Cry unto him over the crops of your fields, that ye may prosper in them.

Cry over the flocks of your fields, that they may increase. (Alma 34:24-25.)

May I add this to Amulek's counsel: Pray to the Lord over your debts that they may be paid. Pray to him for faith to get out of debt, to live within your means, and to pay as you go.

Yes, "pay thy debt, and live!"

My brothers and sisters—Latter-day Saints—let us heed the counsel of the leadership of the Church. Get out of debt!

Let us pay first our obligations to our Heavenly Father. Then we will more easily pay our debts to our fellow men. Let us heed the counsel of President Brigham Young, who said:

Pay your debts . . . do not run into debt any more. . . . Be prompt in everything, and especially to pay your debts.

President Joseph F. Smith:

. . . In the time of prosperity . . . get out of debt. . . . If you desire to prosper, and to be . . . a free people, first meet your obligations to God and then . . . to your fellow men.

President Heber J. Grant:

Tithing is a law of God . . . be honest with the Lord and I promise them [the Latter-day Saints] that peace, prosperity, and financial success will attend. Let me warn the Latter-day Saints to buy automobiles . . . and the luxuries of life . . . when they have the money to buy them, and not to mortgage their future.

Brothers and sisters, there is a peace and a contentment which comes into the heart when we live within our means.

God grant us the wisdom and the faith to heed the inspired counsel of the priesthood to get out of debt, to live within our means and to pay as we go—in short, to “pay thy debt, and live,” I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Elder Ezra Taft Benson of the Council of the Twelve, Secretary of Agriculture in the Cabinet of the President of the United States, has just concluded speaking. Elder Milton R. Hunter will now address us. Elder Hunter has been ill for some time. We are glad that he is active again, and so if we restrict you now, Elder Hunter, to six or seven minutes it will be in consideration of your health.

ELDER MILTON R. HUNTER

Of the First Council of the Seventy

MY DEAR brethren and sisters, I humbly ask an interest in your faith and prayers and also the guidance of the Spirit of God that I might express a few thoughts and feelings that are in my heart today.

I am happy beyond expression to be here, although it does entail my occupying a few moments' time.

As President David O. McKay suggested, six months ago I was ill; but I listened to the conference over the radio. I heard our beloved prophet, seer, and revelator in his most kind and beautiful way excuse Dr. Ernest L. Wilkinson, president of Brigham Young University, who was also ill, and myself from conference, extend his blessings to us, and ask that the Spirit of God be with us that we might become well. Then I listened to the prayers given by various stake presidents at the conference sessions. They humbly remembered us in their prayers and faithfully pleaded with our Father in heaven to restore us to health. I knew at that time that we would both have a complete restoration of health and strength. I stand here today humbly acknowledging the goodness of God, testifying that he has preserved our lives and restored both of us to health. We are now well and able to go forth and do our assigned tasks.

Never in my life have I had as much gratitude in my heart for the blessings of my Father in heaven as I have at the present time. I thank him for all the blessings that I have received, not only for the restoration of my health and strength, which is most valuable, but also for the gospel, for the privilege I have of being a member of the Church, for the testimony of the gospel which I possess, and for the opportunities that I have to work in the Church. I recognize our Father in heaven as the giver of all gifts and gratefully acknowledge that he has been very, very generous with me.

In deep humility I want to take this special opportunity to thank from the depths of my heart President David O. McKay, his Counselors—Brother Stephen L. Richards and Brother J. Reuben Clark, Jr.,—President Joseph Fielding

Saturday, April 6Second Day

Smith, the Quorum of the Twelve, the Assistants to the Apostles, the First Council of the Seventy—my close colleagues, the Presiding Bishopric, and the Patriarch to the Church for their kindness to me during the past several months, their generosity, and their consideration. Their goodness to me has been beyond what I could ever imagine. I thank them from the depths of my heart. All I can do is merely say, "Thank You."

I have always recognized these brethren, the General Authorities of the Church, as being men of God, prophets called to lead us in the kingdom. I have always loved them, but I can honestly say this morning that I love them more deeply than I ever had the ability to love before. My illness has increased my ability to appreciate.

During the past several months I have received numerous letters from the Saints in which they expressed their appreciation, prayers, and best wishes for the restoration of my health. During the past twelve years I have stayed in the homes of many of the stake presidencies and Saints. I have toured twenty-one missions with many mission presidents and have received the hospitality of many of the Saints throughout the stakes of Zion and the mission fields. For all of these things, I am very, very grateful. Although I have not taken opportunity during the past to express my appreciation, I now desire to express my gratitude to everyone here today who has befriended me. Sister Hunter and I are especially grateful to President Wilkinson and his good wife for their kindness to us. May the Lord continue his blessings on them.

If there is any one thing I have learned in the past few years, I have learned that there are wonderful people all over the Church, real Saints of the Most High.

Last, but not least, I should like to express deep appreciation to my dear wife and my children. They have been most wonderful throughout my illness. They have taken over all the work; in fact, I am not allowed to open a garage door, and that makes me feel very lazy. I feel that the Lord has given no man in the world a better wife than he has given me, and so I express my sincere gratitude and deep love to her and appreciation to our children.

I have had much time to think and meditate during the past several months. I have always thought that I had appreciation in my heart, and gratitude, but I have reached the conclusion that I, and maybe you, accept the numerous blessings which come to us from God more or less for granted, so to speak—the sunshine that we have, the fresh air, the food, and the clothing, and all these things that we have from day to day, the health that we enjoy.

I recognize that the Psalmist is right wherein he declared: "The earth is the Lord's, and the fulness thereof;" (Psalm 24:1.) And as King Benjamin so beautifully taught his people, we are but stewards; we are debtors, debtors to God for all that we possess. He could take these things away from us in the twinkling of an eye.

I hope that we can become very appreciative, because I think that is one of the grand principles of the gospel of Jesus Christ. The principle of gratitude is closely akin to the attribute of love. It is akin to unselfishness. In showing our appreciation, I think possibly the best opportunity we have is to serve each other. In this way we help to build God's kingdom.

So in closing, I want to bear testimony that I know this is the true Church of Jesus Christ, that he is our Savior, our Lord, and our God. As he has said, those who take upon themselves his name, who keep all of his commandments and abide faithfully to the end, through his atoning blood their garments shall be washed white, and they will stand spotless before him at the last day and receive an eternal exaltation.

May God bless you and me as members of the true Church of Jesus Christ that this will be our happy lot, I humbly pray, in Jesus' name. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

You will be pleased to know that two military groups flew in here last evening from Fort Sill, Oklahoma, and the boys in those groups have been in attendance this morning; also, that on the balcony here at our left is a large number of Indians, Hopi and others, faithful members of the Church, the first visit to a Conference for most of them. About forty are here. We welcome our brothers and sisters who are here representing their Lamanite brethren.

We have just listened to Elder Milton R. Hunter of the First Council of Seventy, who is our concluding speaker. The Institute of Religion Chorus from the University of Utah, accompanied by the Bonneville Strings, will now sing, "Hosannah Anthem," by Evan Stephens. Elder Shand, who is conducting, would like the Congregation to join with the Choir at his signal,—"The Spirit of God Like A Fire Is Burning,"—you are acquainted with it. He will direct you. Please join at his signal.

The closing prayer will be offered by Elder Leonard T. Ralphs, president of the American Falls Stake, following which this Conference will stand adjourned until two o'clock this afternoon.

The "Hosannah Anthem" now by the Chorus.

The Institute of Religion Chorus from the University of Utah, the Bonneville Strings, and the congregation rendered the Hosannah Anthem.

President David O. McKay:

PRESIDENT JOSEPH FIELDING SMITH

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

IN HIS REMARKS this morning President Clark stated that there are those who would destroy the Constitution of the United States, and there are those who would destroy the Decalogue, or the Ten Commandments. I would like to speak on the Ten Commandments, if time would permit, but since it will not I shall center on one of them—that of keeping the Sabbath day holy.

These commandments have not been abrogated nor annulled, and they are in force as much today, although not observed, as they were when they were thundered from Mount Sinai. The Sabbath day has become a day of pleasure, of revelry, anything but a day of worship, from one border of the country to the other; and I regret to say that too many—one would be too many—members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints have joined that procession, and the Sabbath day to some members of the Church is looked upon as a day of revelry, of pleasure, rather than one in which we can serve the Lord our God with all our hearts, with all our might, mind, and strength.

The Lord cannot forgive us when we know better and we violate his commandments. He has given unto us a law, a commandment, saying that we are to accept the words of the Lord as he has revealed them unto us. We have no right to transgress this law or any one of the other laws that are so fundamental to our exaltation, and how can the members of the Church expect to receive salvation and exaltation in the celestial kingdom of God, and show contempt for his sacred commandments?

Now, I will hurry as fast as I can, but I want to read to you a condemnation that the Lord pronounced upon Israel because they refused to keep this commandment.

"Wherefore I caused them to go forth out of the land of Egypt, and brought them into the wilderness.

"And I gave them my statutes, and shewed them my judgments, which if a man do, he shall even live in them.

"Moreover also I gave them my sabbaths, to be a sign between me and them, that they might know that I am the Lord that sanctify them.

"But the house of Israel rebelled against me in the wilderness: they walked not in my statutes, and they despised my judgments, which if a man do, he shall even live in them; and my sabbaths they greatly polluted: then I said, I would pour out my fury upon them in the wilderness, to consume them.

"But I wrought for my name's sake, that it should not be polluted before the heathen, in whose sight I brought them out.

"Yet also I lifted up my hand unto them in the wilderness, that I would not bring them into the land which I had given them, flowing with milk and honey, which is the glory of all lands;

"Because they despised my judgments, and walked not in my statutes, but polluted my sabbaths: for their heart went after their idols.

"Nevertheless mine eye spared them from destroying them, neither did I make an end of them in the wilderness.

"But I said unto their children in the wilderness, Walk ye not in the statutes of your fathers, neither observe their judgments, nor defile yourselves with their idols:

"I am the Lord your God; walk in my statutes, and keep my judgments, and do them;

"And hallow my sabbaths; and they shall be a sign between me and you, that ye may know that I am the Lord your God." (Ezek. 20:10-20.)

Those are the words of the Lord to Ezekiel. Notwithstanding all their backsliding and their wickedness and their violation of his commandments, the Lord still pleaded with them; and in the days of Ezekiel, after the greatest number of the tribes of Israel had been carried off because of their rebellion, the Lord pleaded with those who still remained to keep his sabbaths, to walk in his statutes—and even then they refused. Yet he said if they would do these things, it was a covenant with him, and by keeping that covenant he would bless them.

Now, this is the law to the Church today just as it was the law to ancient Israel, and some of our people get rather disturbed because they feel that observing the Sabbath day curtails their activities. So I want to read to you now the commandment the Lord has given to modern Israel, and this we ought to learn to keep.

"Wherefore, I give unto them a commandment, saying thus: Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, with all thy might, mind, and strength; and in the name of Jesus Christ thou shalt serve him.

"Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. Thou shalt not steal; neither commit adultery, nor kill, nor do anything like unto it.

"Thou shalt thank the Lord thy God in all things.

"Thou shalt offer a sacrifice unto the Lord thy God in righteousness, even that of a broken heart and a contrite spirit.

"And that thou mayest more fully keep thyself unspotted from the world, thou shalt go to the house of prayer and offer up thy sacraments upon my holy day;

"For verily this is a day appointed unto you to rest from your labors, and to pay thy devotions unto the Most High;

"Nevertheless thy vows shall be offered up in righteousness on all days and at all times;

"But remember that on this, the Lord's day, thou shalt offer thine oblations and thy sacraments unto the Most High, confessing thy sins unto thy brethren, and before the Lord.

"And on this day thou shalt do none other thing, only let thy food be prepared with singleness of heart that thy fasting may be perfect, or, in other words, that thy joy may be full.

"Verily, this is fasting and prayer, or in other words, rejoicing and prayer.

"And inasmuch as ye do these things with thanksgiving, with cheerful hearts and countenances, not with much laughter, for this is sin, but with a glad heart and a cheerful countenance—

"Verily I say, that inasmuch as ye do this, the fulness of the earth is yours, the beasts of the field and the fowls of the air, and that which climbeth upon the trees and walketh upon the earth;

"Yea, and the herb, and the good things which come of the earth, whether for food or for raiment, or for houses, or for barns, or for orchards, or for gardens, or for vineyards.

"Yea, all things which come of the earth, in the season thereof, are made for the benefit and the use of man, both to please the eye and to gladden the heart;

"Yea, for food and for raiment, for taste and for smell, to strengthen the body and to enliven the soul.

"And it pleaseth God that he hath given all these things unto man; for unto this end were they made to be used, with judgment, not to excess, neither by extortion.

Second Day

"And in nothing doth man offend God, or against none is his wrath kindled, save those who confess not his hand in all things, and obey not his commandments." (D & C 59:5-21.)

Now, my good brethren and sisters, when you go home from this conference, you cannot go home and say, "The Brethren have praised us for our well-doing; they have commended us because we have come into the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints." We cannot say this when we remember our shortcomings in regard to the keeping of some of these commandments which the Lord has given us, and which pertain to his celestial kingdom.

We must stop violating the Sabbath day. We must stop the violation of other commandments, should we be violating them, and I promise you that if you will observe the Sabbath day, you who are opening your stores on the Sabbath day, if you will close them and tend to the duties that the Lord has given to you, and keep his commandments, that you will prosper and he will bless you more abundantly, for he has made that promise, than you will be blessed by showing your contempt for the commandments which he has given unto us.

May the Lord bless you one and all, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President Joseph Fielding Smith, President of the Council of the Twelve, has just concluded speaking. Elder El Ray L. Christiansen, Assistant to the Twelve, will now address us. He will be followed by Elder Antoine R. Ivins.

ELDER EL RAY L. CHRISTIANSEN

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve Apostles

I PRAY HUMBLy that the few things that I might say will be acceptable to my Heavenly Father and that they might be helpful to someone.

We live in a wonderful world, a wonderful era, and I can say in a wonderful area. In this world there are lovely things, and things much to be desired, but along with the desirable there are also those things which are not to be desired. While I would much rather speak of the things which are desirable, I feel impelled to speak of some things that we would rather not recognize as existing.

We are living in a day when prophecy is being fulfilled among the nations of the earth—a time when many things which have long been stable are no longer to be depended upon—a time when the integrity of men and of nations (at least some of the leaders of some of the nations) is too often questioned.

It is as if the words of the Savior (through his prophets) are being fulfilled: Luke speaks of the time when there should be upon the earth "... distress of nations, with perplexity; ..."

(Luke 21:25.) And through the Prophet Joseph Smith the Lord speaks of a time when there shall be

... wars and rumors of wars, and the whole earth shall be in commotion, and men's hearts shall fail them, and they shall say that Christ delayeth his coming until the end of the earth.

And the love of men shall wax cold, and iniquity shall abound. (D & C 45:26-27.)

Rumors of wars and uprisings are a daily diet to the reader and the listener of news. Severe crises the world over are arising one after another, and they come to no satisfactory conclusion. (And, for peculiar reasons, our great nation becomes involved in most of them.)

While tensions and uprisings continue throughout the world there is in our own country, it seems to me, an ever-increasing trend toward lawlessness, and, on the part of some, a seeming disregard and even contempt for the law.

There are many, too, while holding places of trust, who are suspected of collusion or bribery or of making "deals." A constant flow of reports comes of investigations of misconduct of those who are given places of trust throughout the nation. The veracity of sworn witnesses before great tribunals is often questioned, and contempt for the courts of justice is frequently manifested.

In this day of enlightenment, in this day when we have seen almost unbelievable progress and achievement in science and invention, one wonders why so much contention and corruption and evil doings, sin, should exist and, if my judgment is correct, be on the increase. We ask ourselves: "Why cannot these things, these 'cold wars' be brought to a satisfactory conclusion? Why are confusion and uncertainty perpetuated? Why this seeming increased trend toward lawlessness?"

Is not the answer found in the Book of Mormon where we are told:

... there are also secret combinations, [and he was looking into this time, I think, as well] even as in the times of old, according to the combinations of the devil, for he is the foundation of all these things; yea, the foundation of murder, and works of darkness; yea, and he leadeth them by the neck with a flaxen cord, until he bindeth them with his strong cords forever. (2 Nephi 26:22.)

According to the Doctrine and Covenants, "... he goeth up and down, to and fro in the earth, seeking to destroy the souls of men." (D & C 10:27.) And, as Lehi said to his son Jacob, "... he seeketh that all men might be miserable like unto himself." (2 Nephi 2:27.) "Eat, drink, and be merry" is the theme that he plays through his agents.

This enemy of God and of man dwells in the earth! But I fear that too many of us refuse to recognize his actual existence along with those who follow him and those in the flesh who have become enticed and blinded by him, perhaps not with their own knowledge, nevertheless having become his agents. He is a personage of great power. He has knowledge and power sufficient to influence the minds of mortals who "will not hearken unto the counsels of the Lord."

He seeks to darken and mislead the minds of men. He seeks to minimize the seriousness of wrongdoing. Deception and falsehood are his tools. He is a skilful imitator. While he is subject to the will of God and can never overthrow nor overcome God, he continuously and relentlessly keeps his forces at work with individuals and with groups, causing them to pursue selfish ends and to stir up among them trouble and dissension and persuading them to disobey the decrees of the Lord. This is substantiated in the Book of Mormon, where we read:

Wherefore, all things which are good cometh of God; and that which is evil cometh of the devil; for the devil is an enemy unto God, and fighteth against him continually, and inviteth and enticeth to sin, and to do that which is evil continually. (Moroni 7:12.)

Now this condition is not new. It is history repeated and in this wonderful land of ours, America. Speaking of the iniquity amongst the Nephite civilization, the record relates this:

Now the cause of this iniquity of the people was this—Satan had great power, unto the stirring up of the people to do all manner of iniquity, and to the puffing them up with pride, tempting them to seek for power, and authority and riches, and the vain things of the world.

Now they did not sin ignorantly, for they knew the will of God concerning them, for it had been taught unto them; therefore they did wilfully rebel against God. (3 Nephi 6:15, 18.)

I hope, my brothers and sisters that we will not repeat the performance of that former civilization.

Woodrow Wilson, at one critical period, said to his secretary:

... civilization will destroy itself by its own sinfulness, unless decent people rise up and demand that people and nations live by the Golden Rule.

Now, knowing that there is in the world this force of evil organized by Satan, what can be done?

It seems to me that we must first recognize this adversary and his followers for what they are—advocates of sin and wrongdoing, advocates of disobedience.

We must recognize that it is their determination through their agencies to overthrow freedom and liberty, and if it were possible, to thwart the purposes of God.

Saturday, April 6

Second Day

But we are told that "The works, and the designs, and the purposes of God cannot be frustrated, . . ." that only the work of men shall come to naught. (D & C 3:1.)

We must continually seek men for public office whose desire to do good supersedes all things else.

We must sanctify our own individual lives by keeping the commandments of the Lord—as one person prayed, "Oh, Lord, reform the world—beginning with me." We must sanctify our homes and teach our children loyalty, obedience, honesty, respect for law, respect for others, and a love of the Lord.

We must help others to accept Jesus as the Redeemer, the Savior, the God of this world.

To the degree that men acquire these virtues, their strength increases and their power to resist evil becomes greater. Note this promise that has been given in regard to this wonderful land of America.

Wherefore, this land is consecrated unto him whom he shall bring. And if it so be that they shall serve him according to the commandments which he hath given, it shall be a land of liberty unto them; wherefore, they shall never be brought down into captivity; if so, it shall be because of iniquity; for if iniquity shall abound cursed shall be the land for their sakes, but unto the righteous it shall be blessed forever. (2 Nephi 1:7.)

There, my brothers and sisters, is the prescription for peace and security, nationality and individuality.

. . . behold, I say, if the day shall come that they will reject the Holy One of Israel, the true Messiah, their Redeemer and their God, behold, the judgments of him that is just shall rest upon them. (Ibid., 1:10.)

Let us remember that even though God had a foreknowledge of what "would be" under certain conditions, it is not his will nor his desire that vice, injustice, and crime, disobedience and intolerance and bloodshed and war exist in the world. His purposes are to provide a way where men may find happiness and joy, peace, now and forever. Nevertheless, he will not interfere with the agency of men! But fortunately, according to Mormon's teaching: ". . . the Spirit of Christ is given to every man, that he may know good from evil;" and have a "perfect knowledge," whether it is of God or of the devil. (See Moroni 7:16.)

Let each of us build upon the sure foundation recommended by Helaman in the days of the Nephites:

And now, my sons, remember, remember that it is upon the rock of our Redeemer, who is Christ, the Son of God, that ye must build your foundation; that when the devil shall send forth his mighty winds, yea, his shafts in the whirlwind, yea, when all his hail and his mighty storm shall beat upon you, it shall have no power over you to drag you down to the gulf of misery and endless wo, because of the rock upon which ye are built, which is a sure foundation, a foundation whereon if men build they cannot fall. (Helaman 5:12.)

May we always choose the right. May we always defend the right, at home and throughout the land, and seek for peace and serenity and tranquility on the foundation for peace that was laid down by the Lord Jesus Christ, the God of this land, I pray humbly in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER ANTOINE R. IVINS

Of the First Council of the Seventy

PRESIDENT MCKAY, and brethren and sisters, I stand before you this afternoon a very blessed man. I wish to bear testimony to the mercies of our Heavenly Father and the blessings that I have received from him. When next month arrives, I will have lived seventy-six years in this troubled world of ours with only one serious case of sickness, hardly ever having been deprived of the privilege of going about my daily duty. And come the month of June, I will have had forty-five years of companionship with a wonderful wife who has walked side by side with me through the vicissitudes of life.

When we were told today about being careful about going into debt, I was reminded of the way my wife and I started out. We lived for a long while in a 12 by 24, with no door between the bedroom and the dining room, and we know what it is to come up through that road. Through it all, however, we have been blessed with the spirit of unity and love for each other. I have a wife whose major interest is the joy and happiness of other people, and for this I am extremely thankful.

When the month of June comes around, it will be twenty-six years since I read in the newspaper in Honolulu that I was to be one of your servants as one of the General Authorities of the Church. It came as a shock. It came without notice, but was accepted by my wife and me in the spirit of service, and during that time—those twenty-six years—we have tried to acquit ourselves as creditably as possible of the task of serving the people. In all this, we have been devoted to the Church and have let nothing, so far as we could tell, interfere with our service. My experience has given me contact with many peoples in America, in Mexico, where I lived twelve years, and in the Hawaiian Islands, where I spent ten years, some of my friends from Hawaii being here today to attend this conference.

I grew up among the Indians of Southern Utah, and when I married my wife, we became a part of the New Zealand Mission and met many of the Maori people. In that experience, of course, most of my time has been spent for the Church and the members of the Church generally and I have come to believe that perhaps the most important thing for a member of the Church is a testimony to the truth of the gospel.

We heard last night a very interesting testimony of the blessings and benefits that come from accepting the gospel, blessings which were brought to certain people through the missionary service of this Church, and you who know me know that the group to which I belong in the General Authorities is devoted particularly to the missionary work of the Church.

Testimony! I have come to believe that any person who has an honest testimony will strive to the utmost of his ability to live true to the teachings that have come to us from our Heavenly Father through the revelations of Jesus Christ, given to the leadership of this Church.

Testimony! How do we get it? We get it through faith. You who were here last night heard that the testimony which was borne to us came as a result of prayer. Of course, there was instruction. There was study; but our brother told us that he went down on his knees in fervent prayer and arose with a conviction in his heart that the gospel is true. He bore testimony to its wonderful blessings which had come to him with the privileges of membership in this Church.

Testimony! That is the great thing we should strive for, brethren and sisters. We get it through faith and prayer and service. We retain it through faith and prayer and service. Christ told Peter that he had founded his Church upon revelation, the revealed testimony that he was the Son of God. He said the gates of hell would not prevail against it. I wish we were able to testify that the gates of hell can never prevail against the testimony on the part of an individual, and I believe that is true as long as the testimony abides in such strength as to determine the conduct of people. But, unfortunately, it happens with many that, having once had a testimony, they give way to the weaknesses of the flesh. Their testimony begins to dim, and in time, to disappear, and when it disappears, men frequently give themselves over to the powers of the flesh.

Now we should strive, brethren and sisters, to retain ever in our hearts that testimony, and to do it we must serve. The missionary cause is served in many ways. One way is by carrying to the people the message of the restored gospel, as was shown in our meeting last night. Another way was mentioned by President [J. Reuben] Clark last night in our meeting, and that is by living the gospel.

Saturday, April 6

Second Day

So, I feel that the best way we can teach the gospel is first to live it, showing individually and collectively the powers there are in the observance of the teachings of our Savior and in the exercise of the priesthood which God has caused to be restored. I believe honestly, brethren and sisters, that any man who lives worthy of the Melchizedek Priesthood has absolute control over the evil and sins of the world as far as he himself is concerned. He may not be able to control other people, but if he accepts and lives worthy of the Melchizedek Priesthood, he should have absolute power over evil. That is our purpose, brethren and sisters. If we could do that, if we could live that way, we would set before nonmembers and inactive members alike an example of which they could never complain and which must certainly impel them seriously to study the gospel.

We have in the Church as our responsibility for missionary service, a force of men who could be counted in the seventy thousands, men who were born in the Church, men who for one reason or another have not felt inclined to accept the responsibility and exercise the privileges of membership to the extent of receiving the priesthood, or at least the Melchizedek Priesthood. It is one of the largest mission fields we have in the Church, brethren and sisters. There is an effort being made on the part of the leadership of the Church to reach that particular group of people.

Two weeks ago last night Sister Ivins and I sat down at a banquet in Mesa, Arizona, where fifty men with their wives had taken the course that is suggested in this particular school [for senior members of the Aaronic Priesthood] designed to reach this particular group of people. They were a happy group. They had learned through that teaching some of the value, some of the joy, and some of the happiness that comes from study of the gospel and service in this Church. I would that a school of that kind could be established in every stake in the Church and carried through successfully, because I believe, and I think you will admit, that any man who takes the trouble to study seriously the revealed word of God for a reasonable period of time cannot but accept the truth of it, and then, if he can get the testimony of which I speak, he will accept its benefits and blessings.

Now how are people going to effect this? The other night I listened to a song which was written in Spanish and English, "Que Sera, Sera" ("Whatever Will Be, Will Be"), and there is an implication in that song that this mother, talking to her daughter, would lead her to believe that the daughter herself could have no effect upon the future. But that is a false implication. Using the same reasoning, you would say these inactive men are as they are because they are, and maybe that is true. But they are not as they are because they had to be. They themselves, had they felt inclined, could have moved themselves out of this condition and into the full exercise of the privileges of the priesthood. It means honest living, of course, brethren and sisters, but it is worth the effort.

Testimony! Can you help one to gain a testimony that will impel him to service? What greater thing could you do? Are you going to sit by and leave these men to others, or are you going to use your influence with your neighbors, with your friends, in an effort to carry to them this testimony? It must be done in friendship. It must be done in simplicity. It must be done in faith, and with prayer, and God help us to do it, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Elder Antoine R. Ivins of the First Council of Seventy has just concluded speaking. Bishop Thorpe B. Isaacson will now address us,—a member of the Presiding Bishopric.

BISHOP THORPE B. ISAACSON

First Counselor in the Presiding Bishopric

PRESIDENT MCKAY, President Richards, President Clark, my dear brothers and sisters and friends, I think this is the most humbling of all experiences, and I believe it would be for you if you were occupying this position. I deeply and sincerely pray that the Lord will sustain me the few minutes that I shall speak today. I will be most grateful to you for an interest in your faith and prayers and for your patience and your kind understanding.

Conference time is a marvelous time. People all over the world who are listening to the conference on the radio, or who are watching the conference proceedings on television, those who are in attendance and those who are reading of the conference, as well as those who are here that will take these messages back to their respective places of labor will all be blessed and benefited from this conference of worship.

In trying to illustrate conference time, I would like to refer to a statement made the other day in a local newspaper by Brother Jack M. Reed, who is the Tribune Church editor. With his permission may I quote:

"Conference" is sort of a magic word that transforms Salt Lake City . . . thousands of persons converging upon Temple Square—and affect in small measure or large the daily lives of nearly everyone in Utah's capital city.

Personally, I think in a measure that describes the great spiritual uplift and the importance of the general conference of God's true Church on the earth.

It is just ten years ago today that my first assignment came to speak to the general conference of the Church. I would be a very ungrateful person if I did not first publicly thank the Lord for his kindnesses and mercies to me. Time will not permit me to tell you the wonderful blessings that have come to me during these lovely ten years of service. However, I believe I have worked harder during these past ten years than in any other ten years of my life, but likewise this work has given me great joy and happiness for which I am truly grateful, and I am deeply indebted to the Lord and to the Church.

Likewise, I would be ungrateful if I did not publicly thank my wife and my family for their co-operation and assistance. They have helped me a great deal, and I know they have prayed diligently for me in this work. They have taken my responsibilities and assisted me in many ways with my personal chores, and I know it was because they wanted my Church work to come first. I can truly and humbly say that I love my Church work more than any other work that I have done in my life. I have had many fascinating positions, such as teaching, coaching athletics, salesmanship work, and business experiences, but there is nothing that compares with the work and the service in the Church. Nothing will give a person the joy and happiness that he gets from service to his brethren and his fellow men in Church work.

I would like to thank the members of the wards and stakes that I have had the privilege of visiting. Your wonderful loyalty and devotion to the Church has been an inspiration to me. My faith and my testimony have been strengthened because of your glorious example. Your devotion, your loyalty, your love for the Church, and your willingness to take care of all Church assignments are truly a great tribute to you and the Lord will bless you.

Some of the things that I said ten years ago when I first spoke in the general conference of the Church, among other things I said then, I would like to repeat now—at that time I had only been associated with the Brethren of the General Authorities for about three months—I stated then that I had learned to love the General Authorities very much. I also testified to you then that I knew these Brethren are men of God; and today again, I want to re-emphasize to you and testify to you that I love these men very much—every one of them, and I know truly that they are men of God. I know that President David O. McKay is a living prophet of Jesus Christ the same as were the prophets of old, and with him President Richards and President Clark, together with the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles and all of the other General Authorities of the Church—I know they are Prophets and servants of God our Eternal Father. May I also testify to you that I believe they are divinely called of the Lord, and I hope that you believe that. I would like also to testify to you that I know they constantly seek divine guidance, and I also testify to you that they receive divine guidance from our Holy Father.

I trust the Brethren, and especially Apostle Delbert L. Stapley, will forgive me if I tell you of the kind invitation from the First Presidency to all of the General Authorities to a meeting in the temple prior to the commencement of this general conference. I do not have the time nor the ability to describe to you the spirit of that meeting in the temple on Thursday morning. Brother Stapley offered the prayer, and I am certain that we all felt that his prayer ascended to our Father in heaven and that that prayer was answered in our behalf. Truly that sweet spirit which was experienced in that meeting as Brother Stapley was offering that prayer has carried over until now, and it will carry through the entire conference.

Today I intended to say a few things, but I have changed my mind because of the lack of time. However, because of my sincere interest in the rehabilitation of alcoholics, I would like to pay a tribute to those who are trying to overcome this habit or disease, and to overcome the cruel monster of alcohol. I would like to say a word of encouragement to 11,000 alcoholics in the state of Utah and about 5,000,000 alcoholics in the United States, because of an experience that I had with one of them last night following our missionary meeting held in the Tabernacle. I was very proud of this man who has triumphed and who has conquered that cruel monster alcohol. Yes, I want to pay tribute to him to whom I talked last night for his triumph. I want to testify to the others who desire a way to overcome that habit and that disease that, as this wonderful man who had conquered and had triumphed and who had made a wonderful comeback assured me, the only way for him or anyone else to conquer alcohol is to seek the help of God.

May I quote from Jacob, chapter 4, verse 10, from the Book of Mormon. It is the MIA theme:

Wherefore, brethren, seek not to counsel the Lord, but to take counsel from his hand. For behold, ye yourselves know that he counseleth in wisdom, and in justice and in great mercy, over all his works.

That wonderful man who has had a struggle, as all of the alcoholics have, to defeat or conquer that habit testified strongly last night that there is only one way for anyone to overcome that treacherous habit and disease and that is by seeking the counsel of God their Father. I commend that wonderful organization (Alcoholics Anonymous) and the members who believe in God, for they will find great strength when all else seems to fail.

Yes, today we are faced with confusions and uncertainties and threats. We are sometimes tempted to agree with those who say the reason for our great difference today is that our problems are so different from those faced by other generations. But this is not so; the only difference is our forefathers relied on God our Eternal Father for everything. Today there are too many of us that have forgotten God. We feel self-sufficient. Even as strong as we think we are, it is always dangerous to feel or think that we do not need to rely on a Divine Power, and I would like to refer to that Divine Power as the Power of God our Eternal Father.

In closing, may I give you one quick illustration regarding this passage:

... seek not to counsel the Lord, but to take counsel from his hand. For behold, ye yourselves know that he counseleth in wisdom, and in justice, and in great mercy over all his works.

Here is my story:

A few weeks ago a business associate of mine asked me to go with him to make the acquaintance of and visit and talk with eight wonderful young Latter-day Saint practising physicians. He wanted me to go to see these doctors and meet them, wishing that I would agree to write a letter recommending consideration for these doctors so they could successfully get a loan to build a medical clinic. I agreed to go with him.

As we discussed the time for the appointment with these doctors, my friend informed me that it could either be in the morning between 6:30 and 7 o'clock or after 9 o'clock at night. I then decided that it would be better for me to meet them in the morning between 6:30 and 7 o'clock. We left Salt Lake City very early. It was dark because it was in the winter months. We drove to their offices some little way out of Salt Lake City, arriving between 6:30 and 7 a.m.

Soon their individual cars appeared at the office. I was then made acquainted with these wonderful, fine doctors, and we were invited into their office. After all had assembled, and we were comfortably seated, the oldest of these eight doctors—and he himself was a comparatively young man—walked over and shut the door. Then he said, "Would you mind joining us in morning prayer before we discuss our business problems with you?" Then I thought, "... seek not to counsel the Lord but to take counsel. . . ." I was somewhat astounded at this procedure, but I confess I was humbly grateful and proud of these young doctors. The presiding doctor called on one of the other doctors to offer the morning prayer, and he offered a very beautiful, appropriate petition to the Lord and asked for his guidance.

To my recollection, I have never had that experience with professional or businessmen before. I asked the doctors before I left, "Is this your common practice?" "Oh, yes, every morning, six days a week, we meet here between 6:30 and 7, where we lock our door, and before starting our duties of the day, call on God our Eternal Father for his divine guidance. If for any reason one of the doctors has important or urgent surgery or an urgent patient call, we go ahead without him, and each takes his turn offering the morning prayer." Of course these doctors will be successful! I thought they were wonderful.

How many teachers, how many bankers, how many business or professional men, how many of us follow that kind of procedure every morning? These doctors are seeking the divine guidance of God their Eternal Father, and mainly they are men skilled in science, trained in their profession, but not sufficiently so that they can rely upon their own training and their own natural abilities.

God grant that each of us may seek counsel, for we ourselves know that the Lord "counseleth in wisdom, and in justice, and in great mercy," I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Bishop Thorpe B. Isaacson of the Presiding Bishopric of the Church has just concluded speaking. The Chorus from the Institute of Religion at the University of Utah and the Congregation will now join in singing, "Do What Is Right." Richard P. Condie, Assistant Conductor of the Salt Lake Tabernacle Choir, will lead us. Elder John Longden will follow the singing.

The Institute of Religion Chorus and the congregation sang the hymn, "Do What Is Right."

President David O. McKay:

We will now hear from Elder John Longden, Assistant to the Twelve. He will be followed by Elder Eldred G. Smith.

ELDER JOHN LONGDEN

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve Apostles

PRESIDENT MCKAY this morning gave recognition to the servicemen who had traveled many miles to be here, some coming from Texas and Oklahoma. I trust I shall be in order if I ask those servicemen to stand at the present moment, please, wherever you are. [About seventy-five to one hundred stood.] Thank you very much. That is a glorious sight, and I commend you for your evidence of faith in having a desire to mingle here in this great conference where you will receive a spiritual uplift, where the word of the Lord goes forth in truth and in power.

Saturday, April 6

Second Day

The servicemen of this Church are in a position to do great missionary work with their fellow men by just living the gospel, maintaining the standards and ideals of the Master.

Customs may change, but principles do not. On one occasion we are told that the Master ... went up into the temple, and taught. And the Jews marveled, saying, How knoweth this man letters, having never learned?

Jesus answered them, and said, My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me.

If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself. (John 7:14-17.)

The principles the Master taught in the temple almost two thousand years ago are just as true today and important to the welfare of our lives as they were to the people whom he taught. There is a promise that if any man will do the will of the Father he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God. This is evidence to me that a man may receive a positive assurance of truth if he will but humble himself before the Lord and do the will of the Father.

Yes, the gospel of Jesus Christ is positive. Here in the sessions so far, we have heard everyone who has spoken bear witness and testimony regarding the truth which they have spoken. It is a marvelous thing to have a testimony of the gospel of Jesus Christ. It was possible to receive a positive assurance, or testimony, in the days of the Master; so it is possible today, for this is an eternal truth. Many times we hear the statement: "The gospel is true; I know the gospel is true." I have a witness and testify to you also that I know this thing called Mormonism is true, for it embodies the full gospel of Jesus Christ. When individuals have that testimony, though there may be periods of confusion—periods of deliberation—they are always able to come through, provided the roots of their testimony are deep within their hearts.

The Psalmist declared,

Blessed are they that keep his testimonies, and that seek him with the whole heart. (Psalm 119:2.)

I have a witness that this gospel must go to all people and that all people must come to a knowledge of the truths which are taught from this pulpit before they can bend the knee and bow the head and confess that Jesus is the Christ.

Recently I saw the testimony of a young mother manifest as she had her three young sons around her. She had just become a widow, her husband having suffered a dreadful disease for three years. Only the light and knowledge of the gospel had given her hope and courage. Yes, the roots of her testimony were deep.

Through the restoration of the Church and kingdom of God, we understand our responsibility to take the gospel to all the world, working with those who are nonmembers of the true Church. Also we are to labor patiently with members who have become somewhat delinquent and dilatory to their duties, their testimonies having been weakened through inactivity or other reasons. A keen interest is manifest in this reactivation program and much good is being accomplished.

Some months ago it was my privilege to attend what we term a men and wives meeting. On the stand was a husband who had been reactivated. His wife was with him. Their seven children sat with them. The wife was with child. They had a son in Korea, and they had lost a little girl some six years before. The wife stood in the pulpit that morning expressing sweet, humble gratitude that there was now spirituality in their home and happiness because the priesthood was being honored. Truly, happiness was reflected in the faces of those lovely children who sat with them. Then the husband related briefly some of his experiences. He told how he had been born in a little town just north of Logan, Utah, where I should judge ninety-nine percent are members of the Church. His mother passed away when he was six years of age. The children had been farmed out to various relatives, and this boy was with an aunt and uncle until he was thirteen years of age. At twelve he had been ordained a deacon because he had been obedient to the teaching and training received through attending Primary and Sunday School and all the services he could attend. When he became thirteen, his father decided to move into the backwoods of Wyoming, where they were some distance from a Church. There was no transportation, so he didn't attend his meetings. He got out of the habit of going to Church, he said, and took up other habits. Later, he married a lovely woman who had faith, who had a precious spark in her heart and her soul. She continued to yearn for the day when he would see the light and would know this gospel as the Master had taught it.

He said, "I have done many things that I am ashamed of. I smoked, I drank—and stronger than beer on occasion. I am not proud of it. I have not been the father that I should have been to these children. There has not been true happiness in our home; I have not been the husband that I should have been to my good wife; but I stand here today to testify to you that I would not return to that old life for all the gold in Fort Knox. I have not missed a Sacrament meeting from that time to this, which is five years, except when I have been in Salt Lake City attending general conference."

How grateful I am that the gospel can work in the lives of individuals when they have the desire, when they understand the meaning of being doers of the word, referred to in President David O. McKay's message at the opening of this conference.

May we all, I pray, have the desire to demonstrate by our works that we truly are followers of the Master. May our testimonies be cultivated and fed by the spirit of truth to remain strong, regardless of trials or obstacles, that we may be able to rise above them, even as John on the Isle of Patmos, who recognized that he was there because of the word of God and the testimony of Jesus Christ:

I John, who also am your brother, and companion in tribulation, and in the kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ, was in the isle that is called Patmos, for the word of God, and for the testimony of Jesus Christ. (Rev. 1:9.)

Yes, customs may change, but principles do not; for assurance, knowledge, and testimony are eternal principles of the gospel of Jesus Christ today as they were yesterday; I so testify to you in all sobriety. May God bless us to live in accordance with his glorious eternal truths I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ, our Savior. Amen.

We have just listened to Elder John Longden, Assistant to the Twelve. Elder Eldred G. Smith, Patriarch to the Church, will now address us, and he will be followed by Elder Stapley of the Council of the Twelve.

I AS THE OTHERS who have preceded me, seek an interest in your faith and prayers while I take this time.

I have been thankful for this chorus, for the music that they have rendered to us. I am more thankful for that wonderful hosannah anthem they sang at the close of this morning's session. It was a real thrill, and coming on this day it has another and vital importance. Today is the eightieth anniversary of the dedication of the St. George Temple.

Those who have been reading their IMPROVEMENT ERA would know that.

Many people wonder about the difference in the many buildings that we have in the Church. I think we have more variety of buildings than anyone else. We have the temple, which is different from any other building in the world, and people outside the Church, of course, have to be instructed in the difference, and they wonder why until they are taught what is different about our temples.

Second Day

The word temple comes from the Latin templum—which was the equivalent of the Hebrew "beth Elohim," and signified the abode of Deity; hence, as associated with divine worship, it meant literally the "house of the Lord."

Temples have never been regarded as places of ordinary public assembly or public houses of worship, but as sacred enclosures consecrated to the most solemn ceremonials of religion. Whether a house of the Lord be the gift of a man or of a nation, the best, if offered willingly and with pure intent, is always excellent in the sight of God, however poor by other comparison that best may be.

There are always materials and means available to build temples whenever and wherever there are enough Saints worthy to receive the blessings to be had therein. The best way to build temples is to do missionary work and bring souls unto him, and the temples will then be built.

As the children of Israel wandered in the wilderness, the Lord requested a house of the Lord, or a tabernacle, to be built. To the call for material wherewith to build the tabernacle there was such willing and liberal response that the need was more than met. It is recorded:

For the stuff they had was sufficient for all the work to make it, and too much. (Ex. 36:7.)

After Israel had become established in the land of promise, after four decades of wandering in the wilderness, the tabernacle with its sacred contents found a resting place in Shiloh; and thither came the tribes to learn the will and word of God. Afterward it was removed to Gibeon, and yet later to the City of David, or Zion.

David, the second king of Israel, desired and planned to build a house unto the Lord. But the Lord made it plain that to be acceptable to him, it was not enough that the gift alone be appropriate, but that the giver must also be worthy. Nevertheless David was permitted to gather materials for the house of the Lord, which edifice not he, but Solomon, his son, built.

Solomon the king, the man of wisdom, the master-builder, was led astray by the wiles of idolatrous women, and his wayward ways fostered iniquity in Israel. The nation was no longer a unit; there were factions and sects, parties and creeds, some worshiping on the hilltops, others under green trees, each party claiming excellence for its own particular shrine. The temple soon lost its sanctity.

Are we, in this generation, immune to the same disaster? How often have I heard people say that they prefer to commune with their Maker in the canyons, or elsewhere, instead of attending their Sacrament meetings. They prefer the trees and the mountains to their church. As President Smith has told us today, many people are losing the right attitude toward keeping the Sabbath day holy. As a result they lose the desire and the right to go to the temple. Some intend to go later, when it is more convenient. These people lose the blessings of eternity, and to them the temple loses its sanctity.

Solomon's temple was finally destroyed. The temple of Zerubbabel was erected by the Jews 515 years before Christ, again using the best the people could give. Sixteen years B.C. Herod I, king of Judea, reconstructed the run-down temple of Zerubbabel, which was later partially destroyed at the time of the crucifixion of Christ. In 70 A.D. it was utterly destroyed by fire when the Jews became the captives of the Romans under the rule of Titus. The temple of Herod was the last temple or house of the Lord on the Eastern Hemisphere. Since then, many church buildings have been built, but no offer of a sanctuary was made unto the Lord; indeed it appears that no need of such was recognized. The apostate church declared that direct communication from God had ceased, and in place of divine administration, a self-constituted government claimed supreme power.

James Cardinal Gibbons, in explaining the infallibility of the pope in Faith of Our Fathers, says:

1st. The infallibility of the Popes does not signify that they are inspired. The Apostles were endowed with the gift of inspiration, and we accept their writings as the revealed word of God.

No Catholic, on the contrary, claims that the Pope is inspired, or endowed with divine revelation properly so called.

A more complete denial of the power of God could not be made.

Today we have the sacred temples again, not one, but many, today being the eightieth anniversary of the dedication of the first temple to be completed among the mountains of the west—the temple in St. George. And these temples stand as evidence and a witness that the gospel of Jesus Christ is again in the earth, restored by revelation to authorized servants of God.

Anciently, to gain salvation had two requirements: first, to live a righteous life, keeping the commandments of God; second, to accept and participate in the ordinances of the gospel, administered by authorized servants of God.

These requirements have never changed. Today we believe that man may be saved by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the gospel. We believe that man must be called of God to administer in the ordinances thereof.

Jesus said:

Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God. (John 3:5.)

Baptism, then, is a requirement for all, both the living and the dead, for entrance into the kingdom of God, except those who died before the age of eight. How then can the dead be baptized? Many who are dead lived at a time when the gospel was not on the earth. Would it be just to deny them the kingdom of God? Certainly not. The Lord has provided that the living may be baptized by proxy for the dead. A man may be baptized by proxy for a man who has died.

Evidence that such vicarious work was performed in the early Christian Church is found in the words of Paul to the Corinthians:

Else what shall they do which are baptized for the dead, if the dead rise not at all? why are they then baptized for the dead? (I Cor. 15:29.)

Peter tells us:

For this cause was the gospel preached also to them that are dead, that they might be judged according to men in the flesh, but live according to God in the spirit. (I Peter 4:6.)

This scripture is evidence that those who have died will have the opportunity to hear the gospel and accept of the ordinances performed by proxy for them.

The ordinance of baptism for the living may be performed wherever there is sufficient water, but when being done for the dead, this ordinance is so sacred the Lord has required that it be done only within his holy house, the temple.

The Lord has declared that baptism is necessary for entrance into the kingdom of God. He has also said, "In my Father's house are many mansions;" (John 14:2.) Therefore, other ordinances are necessary for advancement within his kingdom. One such ordinance is that of marriage.

In the sight of the Lord, the marriage covenant is so sacred that he has required that it be solemnized in his temple for time and all eternity. Brother McConkie yesterday gave us a very fine talk on the principles of that ordinance of the gospel, which I recommend to all of you to study again. Love is eternal, even as God himself is eternal. And President McKay told us last evening of the eternity of love, and I am sure that I will go on loving my wife and our children after death, as well as here. Your love for your wife and family will also continue. It would not be heaven if it were otherwise.

When the Savior was upon the earth, he told his apostles:

And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven. (Matt. 16:19.)

That same authority to bind on earth that it may be bound in heaven, is the priesthood of God which is now upon the earth again, that husband and wife may be sealed together for time and all eternity; that we may have our loved ones in the next world the same as here. That makes a real heaven.

This ordinance, vital for the living, is also just as vital for all God's children, including those who died without these glorious opportunities. Therefore, the ordinance of marriage and sealing children to parents must also be done vicariously for the dead, and also in the temple. The great genealogical work of the Church is of vital importance.

A temple then, has two main purposes: It is a holy edifice in which the most sacred ordinances of the gospel may be performed for the living and for the dead.

A great responsibility rests upon the living in this day: first, to prepare themselves by so living that they may be found worthy to receive these saving blessings for themselves; second, that they may also be worthy of doing the vicarious work for their kindred dead. Without the living, the dead have no hope, and the earth would be cursed at his coming.

Too many who claim to be Latter-day

Saints do not avail themselves of these eternal blessings. I do not think the Lord will accept their flimsy excuses. Brother Lee told us yesterday how we should be concerned about this situation in the Church.

The steady growth of the Church today is increasing the demands upon the temples. Additional temples are being built, and many more will follow. They stand today as a witness to the world, testifying that the heavens have been opened and the gospel of Jesus Christ is again restored to the earth, with the power and authority to act in his name. This I testify to you in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Elder Eldred G. Smith, Patriarch to the Church, has just concluded speaking. Elder Delbert L. Stapley of the Council of the Twelve will be our concluding speaker.

ELDER DELBERT L. STAPLEY

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

MY BELOVED brothers and sisters, I am indeed grateful for the messages of this conference, starting with the great message of our beloved President yesterday morning. Several have established the springboard that I should like to start from in what I have to say this afternoon.

It is gratifying to witness the leaven of the gospel at work, infused and invigorated by faithful and devoted Church leadership, which is awakening faith, encouraging renewed activity, and promoting an upsurge of spirituality among members whose lives heretofore have not responded fully to the teachings and ordinances of the everlasting gospel covenant, restored in this dispensation of God's providence as a light to the world and as a standard for his people. The results are so pronounced, as evidenced by activity reports, that they can be measured and totaled. It all adds up to a satisfying accomplishment which has brought joy, happiness, peace, and contentment to many families. The wisdom of the present program to reach out and touch the lives of all Church members with the gospel of salvation cannot be gainsaid because the benefits thus far have been most fruitful and stimulating. Many have been motivated to give up bad habits, also indifferent attitudes, and in so doing have prepared, qualified, and made themselves worthy for the choice privileges and sacred blessings of the Church, the priesthood, and the temples of God. Those engaged in this worth-while service also have been blessed and fully recompensed. The Apostle James gave this admonition and promise:

Brethren, if any of you do err from the truth, and one convert him;

Let him know, that he which converteth the sinner from the error of his way, shall save a soul from death, and shall hide a multitude of sins. (James 5:19-20.)

If I understand the plan of exaltation correctly, all eternal blessings are obtained by and through the Holy Priesthood of God. They cannot be obtained in any other way. That being true, then, the Holy Priesthood, which is God's authority and sealing power, is not only of great importance to the man who possesses it, but also to his wife and children, for they cannot enjoy in full measure the blessings, opportunities, and privileges of the gospel unless the husband and father worthily honors and faithfully and righteously functions in his sacred priesthood calling. The husband and wife relationship was planned of God to be an eternal partnership. The family that is united in faithfulness and sealed together by the binding power of the Holy Priesthood can be assured the great privilege of sharing eternal glory together in perfect companionship. No true parent would want to deny loved ones opportunities for blessings both here in mortality and eternally. Our families and the desire for eternal association with them as a family unit in celestial glory are worth all the sacrifice we are required to make to secure such blessings. We cannot afford indifference because life hereafter is too important. The joy and happiness of all our loved ones depends upon our actions and spiritual activities. No man can be saved and exalted in the kingdom of God without the woman, and no woman can reach perfection and exaltation in the kingdom of God alone. There is no union for time and eternity that can be perfected outside the law of God, and the order of his house. An individual may attain a degree of salvation alone, but when they are exalted they will be exalted according to the law of the celestial kingdom. The Apostle Peter exhorted the husbands to,

... dwell with them according to knowledge, giving honour unto the wife, as unto the weaker vessel, and as being heirs together of the grace of life; that your prayers be not hindered. (1 Peter 3:7.)

Having perfect knowledge through ancient and modern revelation concerning the eternity of the marriage relationship, we can understand how husband and wife are heirs together of the grace of life. We also know that individually and separately they cannot attain to the highest glory in the celestial kingdom. No man holding the Holy Priesthood can cast it aside and then wear it as desired and expect to have his bestowed blessings ratified and sealed by the Holy Spirit of Promise. That heavenly sealing power to all covenants, vows, and performances is gained by the righteousness of individuals. The ordinances, endowments, and blessings received are otherwise not efficacious in the eternal celestial mansions of God.

The Prophet Joseph Smith taught that the power, glory, and blessings of the priesthood could not continue with those who received ordination, only as their righteousness continued. The Apostle Peter refers to this authority as a royal priesthood. The right of this power belongs to the Gods and is shared by them with faithful, divinely called men. It is the authority by which the Lord Almighty governs his people, also by which he creates and controls all the works of his hands. Disregard of this authority leads to darkness, sin, and often apostasy, which severs an individual from all rights and privileges of the house of God. Those who receive a bestowal of this divine authority should honor it and be worthy of the gifts, powers, and obligations it confers upon them. Every man who receives the endowment of the Holy Priesthood of God can trace his line of authority in an unbroken chain back to the Savior. The Lord has made it clear that every man who holds this priesthood must learn his duty and act in the office in which he is appointed, in all diligence; and if he is slothful and shows himself not approved, he shall not be counted worthy to stand. (See D & C 107:99-100.)

The Lord also has admonished that he will not command in all things but instructs every man to be anxiously engaged in a good cause and do many things of his own free will and bring to pass much righteousness. He declares that if a man obeys not his commandments, he will not be guiltless before him. (See ibid., 58:26-30.)

These scriptures enjoin faithfulness and devotion of those who receive the authority of God's Holy Priesthood, which permits them to officiate in the sacred ordinances of the true gospel of Christ. In an important revelation on priesthood the Lord has declared:

The power and authority of the higher, or Melchizedek Priesthood, is to hold the

Saturday, April 6

Second Day

keys of all the spiritual blessings of the church—

To have the privilege of receiving the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven, to have the heavens opened unto them, to commune with the general assembly and church of the Firstborn, and to enjoy the communion and presence of God the Father, and Jesus the mediator of the new covenant. (Ibid., 107:18-19.)

Therefore, because of its sacred nature and authority, possessing binding and sealing powers into the eternities, the priesthood is accepted by those who receive its bestowal with an oath and covenant which involves obligations and trusts of the most sacred character. Those who receive it must, like God, abide in it, for they share and enjoy with him the right of his authority and power; therefore, they must not permit themselves to be moved out of the right way nor to fail.

According to a revelation on priesthood recorded in the 84th section of the Doctrine and Covenants, there are two main requirements of this oath and covenant. First is faithfulness, which denotes obedience to the laws of God and connotes true observance of all gospel standards. For better understanding of the oath and covenant of the priesthood, may I propound these questions:

1. Can a man be faithful who does not abide by the first two great commandments, to love the Lord God with all his heart, soul, strength, and mind, and his neighbor as himself?

2. Can a man be faithful who is not honest and truthful in all dealings and relationships with his fellow men?

3. Can a man be faithful who does not honor the Sabbath day and keep it holy, attend the Sacrament and priesthood meetings; also worthily fulfil all other duties in keeping with his callings and obligations that day?

4. Can a man be faithful who does not plan and arrange for daily family prayer in the home?

5. Can a man be faithful who does not teach his children the true principles of the gospel of Christ and then set them a worthy example by living according to those truths?

6. Can a man be faithful who does not observe and keep the Word of Wisdom?

7. Can a man be faithful who does not pay an honest tithing and fast offering?

8. Can a man be faithful who does not obey the law of chastity and is not morally clean in his life and habits?

9. Can a man be faithful who does not, through obedience and sacrifice, prepare himself worthily for the holy temples of God where he can receive his endowments and sealings in the higher ordinances of the gospel and thus bind his family happily and eternally together in love and understanding?

10. Can a man be faithful who does not honor and obey the laws of the land?

Perhaps we could summarize by asking, "Can a man be faithful if he does not keep all the commandments of God?" The Savior counseled the man who came to him and inquired, "Good Master, what good thing shall I do, that I may have eternal life?"—by saying, "... if thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments." (Matt. 19:16-17.) This counsel from the Lord is all inclusive and clearly points the way to joy and happiness.

These enumerated thoughts are just a few requirements associated with faithfulness, but each is important. As you meditate the full meaning of the word, other attributes that are important qualities of faithfulness will also impress and inspire your mind and heart for better understanding and personal resolves.

The second requirement of the oath and covenant of the Holy Priesthood is to magnify one's calling. To magnify is to honor, to exalt and glorify, and cause to be held in greater esteem or respect. It also means to increase the importance of, to enlarge and make greater. Keeping this definition in mind, may I again resort to a few questions for more lucid understanding:

1. Can a man magnify his office and calling without honoring and abiding in the priesthood faithfully and worthily as a devoted and true servant of God?

2. Can a man magnify his calling without giving spiritual and humble dignity to his office?

3. Can a man magnify his calling who refuses to accept positions and responsibilities of trust when called upon to serve by his stake president, bishop, or other constituted authority?

4. Can a man magnify his calling if he is not obedient to gospel standards and requirements, and if he also fails to be amenable to the counsel and direction of righteous men who are properly called and approved by the people as their authorized leaders?

5. Can a man magnify his calling who refuses to sustain by his faith, prayers, and works those whom God has called and ordained to preside over him?

6. Can a man magnify his calling who does not use his priesthood in righteousness for the blessing and benefit of his fellow men?

7. Can a man magnify his calling who does not banish all iniquity from his soul, that he may gain favor with God and thus enjoy power in the use of the priesthood to bless people?

Again, may I summarize by asking, "Can a man magnify his calling who is not willing to sacrifice and consecrate all for the building of God's kingdom in righteousness, truth, and power in the earth?"

Here also by prayerful meditation you can add other important considerations applying to holders of the Holy Priesthood magnifying their callings, but these will suffice for the purpose of this talk.

To be faithful and devoted to priesthood obligations is the only way man can gain favor and power with God and have rightful claim upon him for blessings to himself, his family, and others to whom he may minister. The priesthood will not abide in force and power with him who does not honor it in his life by complying with the requirements of heaven. The Prophet Joseph Smith declared, "A man can do nothing for himself unless God direct him in the right way; and the priesthood is for that purpose." To magnify his calling in the priesthood a man must use it in righteousness and service to his fellow men. If he does so, he will gain power in its use and thus become enlarged in his gifts and abilities to perform greater service. Every man who receives the Holy Priesthood and is ordained according to the gifts and callings of God unto him, and faithfully magnifies his sacred calling, which fulfils the conditions of the oath and covenant, is sanctified by the Spirit unto the renewing of his body. He is then worthy to be numbered among the elect of God, having also received the Father's kingdom. By the power of the Spirit, which is light and truth, and through honoring the Holy Priesthood in faithfulness and obedience, a man develops holiness of life and character; therefore, he is set apart by this regeneration of soul for special and sacred trusts with the glorious promise for having continued in the oath and covenant of the priesthood, that "all that my Father hath shall be given unto him." (See D & C 84:38.)

The Lord is bound to fulfil this promise to those who abide by the conditions of the oath and covenant. If men are not faithful in magnifying their callings, they have no right to expect the blessings of this promise. Now the Lord has affixed a penalty for violating the oath and covenant of the Holy Priesthood by proclaiming,

... whoso breaketh this covenant after he hath received it, and altogether turneth therefrom, shall not have forgiveness of sins in this world nor in the world to come. (Ibid., 84:41.)

This severe penalty for violating altogether the oath and covenant should cause the unfaithful to repent of their actions, sins, and transgressions and do the works of righteousness, that they might obtain forgiveness and gain a renewal of God's promises and blessings to them. If men recommended for the office of elder in the Melchizedek Priesthood thoroughly understood the oath and covenant, also the penalty for its violation, at the time of accepting the priesthood, fewer of them, I feel certain, would transgress its obligations and drift into inactivity and thereby come under condemnation.

Fathers holding this great gift of the Holy Priesthood should set the example they desire their children to follow. The eternal happiness of their families depends upon the father's obedience to God's laws and his faithful performance in the sacred calling of his priesthood office.

It is my hope, my brothers and sisters,

Saturday, April 6

Second Day

that this great and important work among the inactive that has been mentioned in this conference, will not only go forward unabated but will also go forward with renewed and increased devotion and vigor. The compensations are soul-satisfying, and the inactive are given opportunity for rich experiences and choice blessings. It is also my sincere wish and prayer that every father with his family may attain this blessed privilege and exalted state of eternal unity and companionship in the celestial mansions of God.

I bear witness to the truthfulness of these things in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

He who has just concluded speaking is Elder Delbert L. Stapley of the Council of the Twelve. The Institute of Religion Chorus from the University of Utah, accompanied by the Bonneville Strings, will now sing "Hallelujah," conducted by David Austin Shand. The closing prayer will be offered by Elder Vernard L. Beckstrand, president of the San Jose Stake.

In your behalf, I wish to express appreciation for the presence and inspiring singing of these young students from the University. Thank you for the inspiration you have given us. You have rendered a service which has brought credit to the Institute and your school. We thank you for this service today, and your presence here—Dr. Shand and all the students. God bless you as you continue a life of service!

Tonight at 7 o'clock the General Meeting of the Priesthood of the Church will be held in the Salt Lake Tabernacle. Only those holding the Priesthood are invited to be present. Persons not holding the Priesthood will kindly refrain from attempting to enter the building. The Priesthood session will not be broadcast. However, in addition to the overflow meetings in the Assembly Hall and in Barratt Hall, the proceedings of this Priesthood Meeting will be relayed by closed circuit to members of the Priesthood assembled in 96 other Church buildings in Utah, Idaho, Colorado, Washington, Oregon, Arizona, Wyoming, Nevada, Illinois, New Mexico, Maryland, Montana, New York, California, Pennsylvania, and Canada, the largest ever held in the Church, undoubtedly.

The General Session at 10 o'clock Sunday morning will be broadcast over radio stations here in the West in Utah, Idaho, and Nevada. These services will be televised over KSL-TV Channel 5 of this city, and by special arrangement over 21 television stations in the states I have named.

This is important, and we ask your cooperation. The Church of the Air Broadcast over CBS radio network will be released locally by transcription over the Radio Station named from 7:30 a.m. to 8:00 a.m. MST, and again Sunday evening from 9:00 to 9:30 p.m. Elder Marion G. Romney of the Council of the Twelve will be the speaker. The music for the Church of the Air Broadcast will be furnished by the Tabernacle Choir.

Please note: The Tabernacle Choir Broadcast will be from 9:30 to 10:00 a.m. Sunday morning. Those desiring to attend the Tabernacle Choir Broadcast must be in their seats at 9:20. As the 10:00 session will commence immediately following the Tabernacle Choir Broadcast, it will be necessary for everyone attending to be in his or her seat by 9:20 Sunday morning, as there will be no seats held after that hour. Six months ago, you will remember, there was confusion for about five minutes between the broadcast and the commencement of the ten o'clock session. There were no seats, but people crowded in trying to find them. It will be evident that people will be standing at the doorway of this building after the Broadcast, but there will be no room for you, so do not attempt to find seats. We suggest, and earnestly plead, with those thus standing to be courteous and considerate one to another. Avoid pushing or crowding. Courtesy is a great virtue, one we need in driving in Salt Lake City and in Utah. Let us show it one to another here, and especially to our visitors who are within our city gates.

The Chorus will now sing, "Hallelujah." The closing prayer will be offered by Elder Vernard L. Beckstrand, president of the San Jose Stake, and this Conference will be adjourned until 7 o'clock tonight.

"Hallelujah" was sung by the Institute of Religion Chorus.

Vernard L. Beckstrand, president of the San Jose Stake, offered the benediction.

Conference adjourned until 7:00 p.m.

GENERAL PRIESTHOOD MEETING

The General Priesthood Meeting of the Church convened in the Tabernacle at 7:00 p.m., Saturday, April 6, with President David O. McKay presiding and conducting the services.

The singing for this meeting was furnished by the Tabernacle Choir Male Chorus, with Elder J. Spencer Cornwall conducting.

President David O. McKay:

We are pleased to announce that these services are being broadcast in the Assembly Hall and in Barratt Hall, over a public address system, and in addition are being relayed by a closed circuit to members of the Priesthood assembled in 96 other Church buildings in Utah, Idaho, Colorado, Washington, Oregon, Arizona, Wyoming, Nevada, Illinois, New Mexico, Maryland, Montana, New York, California, Pennsylvania, and Canada. It is wonderful to live in this age, and we commend the brethren for taking advantage of inventions that spread the truth.

The singing during this session will be furnished by the Tabernacle Choir Male Chorus, with Elder J. Spencer Cornwall as director, and Elder Alexander Schreiner at the Organ. We shall begin these services by the Tabernacle Choir Male Chorus singing: "Thou Art Repose" conducted by J. Spencer Cornwall. Elder Valdo D. Benson, president of the Blaine Stake, will offer the opening prayer.

Singing by the Tabernacle Choir Male Chorus, "Thou Art Repose."

Elder Valdo D. Benson, president of the Blaine Stake, offered the opening prayer.

President David O. McKay:

The invocation was offered by the president of the Blaine Stake, Elder Valdo D. Benson. The Tabernacle Choir Male Chorus will now sing, "Guide Me To Thee," directed by Elder J. Spencer Cornwall.

The Tabernacle Choir Male Chorus sang "Guide Me To Thee."

President David O. McKay:

We have here a telegram from Louisville, Kentucky from the Servicemen's Group at Fort Knox, "May the Lord continue to bless and sustain you all in this great work," signed by Lt. Harold R. Butler, who is Group Leader. They cannot hear us tonight. They are unable to hear Conference by radio or television, but they are aware of the love and sweet spirit generated by the Saints at this Conference time.

It is most heartening and gratifying to know how well these Servicemen are keeping in close touch with the Church activity by carrying on their meetings in the various groups and camps where they are located. The Lord bless them.

Brethren, believing that the better acquainted we are with the various mission fields we shall likely have more interest in the welfare of these various missions, and that our young men and young women will not feel hesitant about going to any mission to which they may be called, we have asked two of our recently released presidents to tell us something about their respective missions. The first will be Elder Gordon M. Romney, formerly president of the Central American Mission. He was released in 1955, and was the first president of that mission when divided.

ELDER GORDON M. ROMNEY

Former president of the Central American Mission

MY DEAR BRETHREN, I can assure you that I faced many of the Indians in Central America, and not knowing their language, I have never been so uneasy and frightened as I am at present. I also faced the French, when I first went on a mission, not knowing their language, and the Lord came to my help especially after about two weeks after having arrived on my mission, and I was able to address an audience for over ten minutes in their language, so I am sure that if I have faith in him and have your prayers in my behalf, I am sure that he will come to my rescue tonight.

I was called to preside over the Central American Mission in 1952. For three years previous to 1952 my wife and I had a longing to go to Central America, and especially to Guatemala. For three years we got all the books that were obtainable in the library, and also bought others, and read about Central America. We had an urge to go to Central America. The first year we wanted to go, in January my daughter suddenly decided she wanted to be married, and we had to come to Salt Lake; therefore we gave up the trip to Guatemala the first year.

The second year our boy was sick, and the second year we failed to go to Guatemala on a vacation. The third year rolled around, and I received a telephone call one day from President Richards, who said, "We would like you to go to Central America to build some chapels, to build a mission home, and to preside over the mission."

I was dumbfounded, but I want to testify to you this evening that the Lord does operate through and inspire his leaders about things which are to come. On several occasions I have been pleased and almost overwhelmed by sitting in the presence of the General Authorities of our Church and listening to their testimonies, to counsel and advice, and other things while in their company.

I remember once in Europe in the presence of Dr. James E. Talmage—he was a great man, and when he spoke you could never doubt anything that he would say, as it seemed almost perfect. He turned to me one day and said, "Brother Romney, you have a work to do." We were touring the French Mission. I was presiding over it as the president of the mission was absent, and he said, "You have a work to do—a great work—something that you know nothing of at the present time." I have often wondered what that was. I think part of it was probably the work in Central America.

Central America is a great country. It is not what you think it is. It is called the land of eternal springtime. It is called the jewel of the Caribbean. It is spring most of the year down there. Most of the country is about 3000 feet above sea level, and is nice and cool as it is here in the spring and in the fall. However, as you get down toward the coast it of course gets rather warm.

Guatemala is a country of about three million people. About half of them still dress in the Indian costume of a thousand or two thousand years back. They are wonderful people, very simple. They are rather hard to teach the Gospel to as they do not speak our language. I remember standing in a Catholic Church in Panajachel on the shores of Atitlan, one of the most beautiful lakes in Guatemala, almost like those in Switzerland. I went into the Catholic Church when they were holding a "Congreso" of the chiefs to present them with a Book of Mormon. I started to say, "I come to give you a copy of the Book of Mormon, a history of your people," and two chiefs immediately arose on their feet, and I started to say, "You are of the house of Israel," but before I could get it out of my mouth they jumped to their feet and said, "We are of the House of Israel."

Of course I asked why they knew they were of the House of Israel, and they said: "We know we are of the House of Israel because of a legend that has been passed down from Father to Son through the many generations since we arrived from across the sea." They even knew in that part of the country that they did come from Palestine, which I discerned at a later date. So we know that these people, those who have kept themselves aloof from mixture with other peoples, know that they are of the blood of Israel, and through their traditions, know that they were once a highly civilized people, and that they wrote histories of their people upon plates of gold, as the Popul Vu will testify. But in time they lost the Scriptures, or these plates which they had, and where they went they know not, but they say, "They left and we know not where they went."

Down in Panama we have a condition. Of course we have a lot of American people, we also have the San Blas Islands, and the Indians who live upon the islands upon the eastern coast in the Atlantic. I remember when we toured the mission with Brother Spencer W. Kimball and Brother Bruce R. McConkie. These two Elders toured the mission and organized it and turned it over to me after they left. I remember upon leaving Panama the first time, Brother Kimball turned to me and said, "Brother Romney, don't forget the San Blas Indians." I do not know whether he had ever seen the San Blas Indians before or not. I doubt it. But I know that he was inspired to tell me, "Do not forget the San Blas Indians."

On the next trip to Panama, which was about three months later, the first trip after the mission was organized, I asked the brethren to be sure and take some copies of the Book of Mormon and give them to the chiefs of the different islands of the San Blas group, and I remember that the next day Brother Hunsaker came rushing over and said, "Do you have a copy of the Book of Mormon in Spanish? I have found the son of a chief who is going out to one of the islands, and he would like to take a copy of the Book of Mormon."

Fortunately I had one and gave it to him. He took it to the son of the chief, and then a few months later in May—this was in February—I made a trip to the San Blas Islands. They live on little islands in houses with thatched roofs, and just about the level of the ocean. The tide is only about a foot and a half in that region. There were about 1300 on this particular island of Ailigandi, and they live in these thatched houses and they go to the island for all of their drinking water, and to hunt and to obtain bananas and pineapples. We went to that island and this Jose Coleman to whom they had given the Book of Mormon met us and he arranged a "congreso" of the chiefs on that island, and he said, "We will hold a meeting and you can explain the Gospel to them. I have been teaching the chiefs the contents of the Book of Mormon, translating it from the Spanish into our tongue. I have reached Second Nephi, about the Second Chapter."

I remember that during this "Congreso" or, during this little meeting that we held with them for about an hour and a half, that he was interpreting for me from Spanish into their language, and I noticed that he was broadening out, and he was not telling them and interpreting exactly as I was speaking, and I finally called his hand. I said, "Now, you are not telling the people exactly what I am telling you. The language came to me for an instant."

He said, "Yes, I know, but I have a testimony. I know that Lehi was a prophet of God. I know that Nephi was a prophet of God, and that they were our ancestors. I was telling that to my people." He had received in the process of interpreting this little speech that I was attempting to make and was giving them his testimony that had come to him instantaneously, and he knew that it was the truth, and he knew that the Gospel had been restored among the children of men, and he was telling his brethren about it. A few months later he was baptized into the Church.

We ordained him a teacher. We gave him several copies of the Book of Mormon, and the last that I knew he was holding Book of Mormon classes among his people, asking us if we might help build a room in order to teach them the Restored Gospel. He was a fine young man.

I wanted to tell you this to show you that the Lord works mysteriously sometimes, his wonders to perform, but his spirit is poured out upon the people of Central America. I have never felt it so strongly in my life as I have in Central America, in Panama, in Costa Rica,

Saturday, April 6

Second Day

in Honduras, in El Salvador, and in Guatemala.

I remember coming up to Costa Rica with Elders Kimball and McConkie as we were touring the mission to find new places to open. At that time we only had about 150 members speaking Spanish throughout this country. We took them over from the Mexican Mission, and we had about 75 in Panama who spoke English. While in Honduras, we were visiting and spending a couple of days, explaining the Book of Mormon to some of the officials of the government, to the Minister of Religion, and also to the president of the country.

I was impressed by a waiter who was waiting on our table at the hotel, and I turned to Brother Kimball and said, "Brother Kimball, I like this young man. I am going to give him a tract. I think that he might accept the Gospel."

Brother Kimball, turning to me, said, "President Romney, you are now looking at the first elder in Honduras," as we had no members, we had no branch in the country of Honduras. I was astonished, and I said, "I hope you are right, and I believe you are right."

Of course Jose did not know what it was all about, but I gave him a tract and he read it, and before we left I said I would send him a copy of the Book of Mormon. I said, "Jose, I will either send it to you or bring it to you upon my first visit." Brother Kimball did not stop right there. He wrote Jose a letter after he got home, and Jose was very interested and he came running to me when I went down the next time, and he said, "President Romney, Apostle Kimball wrote me a letter." I said, "He did?" He said, "He surely did. Did you bring me that book?" I said, "Yes, here it is."

Here is something else strange on this little episode. That was in November when we first arrived there. We took the elders there in December. In February I returned and we had some baptisms. There were five as I remember, and without me saying a word to the elders, Jose was the first one into the waters of baptism. I did not ask for it, but he was the first one to receive the Aaronic Priesthood. I did not push him. I did not recommend it to the elders. It came about naturally, and when I left he was still a priest, as he had a little difficulty in paying his tithing. But he finally paid his tithing, and I understand that he is now an elder. But he turned out to be one of the best missionaries we ever had in Honduras. He taught the Gospel to his wife, to his wife's sister, to his family, and I think he was responsible for the elders baptizing at least a half dozen or ten members in Tegucigalpa, Honduras.

I want to testify to you that that was astonishing to me, but it came about just as surely and naturally as anything might come about. He was the first to enter the waters of baptism, and he was the first to hold the Priesthood in Honduras. I testify to you that I know that these men here, are men of God, and that they know and are inspired to foretell those things which are to come, and to direct us in the ways of the Lord.

I could tell you many things that happened in Central America. I testify to you that the Lord went forth and sent his servants before the elders, and in many instances the elders were inspired to go to certain houses and the way was prepared for them, and in dreams, and by personal visits by servants of our Father in Heaven, men and women were prepared for the coming of the Gospel, and when the elders came they said, "We knew you were coming, and we know that you have the Gospel of Jesus Christ for us." In many instances the Church was established in branches and in places that we scarcely knew about.

I remember an 88 year young fellow there who joined the Church. He finally became an elder, and he told me, "I have 14 people in the town of San Marcos in northern Guatemala. They have signed a petition that they wanted the missionaries to come and preach the Gospel to them." I immediately took him to San Marcos in my car. We visited the town, and those who had signed the petition, and then we made arrangements to hire a hall the following Saturday. We tracted the town, and the next Saturday I took this 88 year old elder back with me. We went out into the country to visit a schoolteacher to tell her that we were holding a conference that Saturday night, and she was down by the river bathing and washing her clothes. We thought that was unusual, but she said, "I knew that you were coming today." I said, "How did you know?" She said "I saw in a dream or a vision that you and Elder Maldonado were coming today, and that you would hold a conference here in San Marcos tonight. That is why I am here bathing and cleaning in order that I might attend. I saw him coming as a small boy, leading the missionaries here into San Marcos. The Spirit told me that you would bring the elders here and preach the Gospel, and that you would hold a conference here tonight."

Then I knew that the Lord wanted us and our missionaries in San Marcos. It is a thriving branch today. They have also bought a lot on which to build a chapel, and your sons and your daughters have done a wonderful work in Central America. I want to congratulate them. I want to congratulate you on the support that you have given us in Central America, for it was a new mission, and we had to call missionaries from Central America to preach the Gospel, as we were short of missionaries from Zion. I want to thank you for that financial support and that help.

They will still need help and support down there because most of the people are too poor to send their own children on missions. They cannot support them as they do not have the wherewithal. They can help, yes, but they cannot support them wholly. May the Lord bless us. May he inspire us. May we always be fervent in the preaching of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, and may we say, "we are not ashamed of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation unto all they who believe."

May God bless you I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Thank you, Brother Romney. We shall now take a quick trip down to the Tongan Mission. Elder D'Monte W. Coombs, formerly president of the Tongan Mission, will now speak to us. Brother Coombs inherited his interest in his mission from his father, who was also President of Samoa and Tonga. Brother Coombs was released in 1955.

ELDER D'MONTE W. COOMBS

Former president of the Tongan Mission

IN THE SOUTH SEAS I had occasion to precede President McKay on several occasions to the pulpit and I see we are still doing here the same things that we did down there, he would tell me he wanted me to take ten or fifteen minutes and I would tell him that I had only prepared maybe five minutes and he again told me he wanted me to take fifteen minutes tonight but again I plead that I have not prepared that much.

I feel very weak and very humble in this invitation that President McKay has so graciously given me tonight, and I pray that your faith and prayers will be with me so that I can fill this assignment in a manner that will be pleasing to our Father in Heaven. My heart is full as I stand here, because I know that this opportunity is another manifestation of President McKay's and the Brethren's love and interest in our brethren, the Tongans and their kindred, the other Polynesians.

It is difficult for people here at home to realize that Tonga is a tiny kingdom governed by its own Queen and its own Parliament and its own system of hereditary nobles, and that these are responsible to no one or to no other government but themselves for the manner in which they rule. At times very restrictive measures have been passed with our Church in view and even now the number of missionaries that we are allowed to send to Tonga is very highly restricted.

Our people, the members of the Church in Tonga, have always respected and loved their Queen and her nobles and obeyed their edicts and requests perhaps better than the rest of Her Majesty's subjects. This love, however, has not always been reciprocated, because in being Mormons our people were to that extent being rebellious to the Queen by not belonging to the Church of which she is the head.

I should say at this point, however, that many, including the Queen, are beginning to understand and to respect what the Church is trying to do for the Tongan people and she and many of the nobles have expressed their appreciation to us many times for what we are doing. Even though one might think that these restrictive measures have slowed down the growth of the Church in Tonga, it seemed that the Mission has thrived on discrimination. We now have in the neighborhood of 4,000 members of the Church in Tonga as against 750 about thirty years ago.

We found most of the Tongans when we arrived there, loyal and of good morale. We also found, however, that few of the forty branches there established knew much of Church government, and their understanding of the Gospel was hazy. This was due, principally, to the shortage of missionaries and the fact that some of the heads of organizations were new converts that had been converted by native Tongan missionaries whose knowledge of the Gospel was imperfect.

Native Tongans have been used in Tonga for years to make up for the shortage of missionaries from the stakes. Our Tongans are willing workers and they are quite willing to obey the principles of the Gospel once they understand them. It was merely a matter of teaching. They are improving in their payments of tithes and offerings year by year. Most of them are convinced in their hearts that they are of Jacob and that they are entitled to the blessings of Jacob.

Time will not permit my going into the great magnitude of their faith. But I can join in testimony from personal experience with the testimonies of others that have been borne from this pulpit as to their great faith.

When we arrived in Tonga we found completed a beautiful new school, called Liahona. For a staff we had a very competent principal, his wife, one sick missionary and a few Tongans. These Tongans, while loyal and devoted, were themselves in need of instruction in efficient methods of classroom instruction. One year of operation under this staff gave us results that were about on a par with the rest of the schools in the Islands, but we felt that par was not nearly good enough. The government was thereupon persuaded to lift its restrictions against the entry of missionaries into the kingdom and they agreed to allow teachers to enter if they would not engage in missionary activities.

Most of the Tongan Cabinet was against the concession, but the Crown Prince, who was also the Premier and a man who is interested in the advancement of his people, virtually bullied through the Cabinet permission for our teachers to enter Tonga.

The Church on its part obtained for us highly competent teachers to staff our school so that it was not long before teachers that were trained in agriculture, manual training, sewing, home economics, music, and general education were available to staff our school. With such a staff who were not only competent in their fields but who were also devoted to their work with the Tongan people, the climb was soon begun and it was soon obvious to all, both in and out of the Church, that our school was turning out the best students in the kingdom. I just received a note from one of our Tongans that this year, this was a month or so ago, we wrote our best record ever. We assume that next year we will still be better and so on into the future.

In addition to the secular knowledge obtained in our school, and much more important to us, was the change in the lives of our students. For six or seven years of their most impressionable years they were at the school for virtually twenty-four hours a day, ten months out of the year, under a very closely controlled environment. It was gratifying to us to note that after a student had been with us for five or six years, he left the school more refined and more anxious and able to live the commandments of the Gospel.

I had occasion to note the behavior of students who had been with us only two or three years in comparison with those that had been with us five or six years. The difference was remarkable. As an example, the criterion among most Tongans of what makes a good husband is what he possesses, or what rank he holds, even though his possession may be just a home or a plot of land or a horse. I have seen some of our lovely, clean young girls married by her family to someone who by our standards was immoral. His qualification—he had a horse. On the other hand, many of our graduates from Liahona now have the same aims in marriage that our young people in the States do, that is, they insist first of all on moral cleanliness.

I have talked a lot about our young people because that is where our most noticeable growth could be observed. Through Liahona extended programs were initiated for teaching and helping the older folks, particularly in relation to Church government and their understanding of the Gospel. Our mission auxiliaries were officered by Liahona people and much of our lesson material was translated and printed and distributed from the school.

While we were in Tonga we obtained from the Church appropriations that will double our dormitory capacity, provide another school building, build a new mission home, and build about twenty new brick chapels complete with classrooms and recreation halls. These are now under construction. It is expected that all this, in addition to probable new schools in the future, will combine with Liahona to help our Tongan brethren achieve the stature that their Nephite ancestors envisioned that they would achieve.

I feel I must not sit down without telling you a little of the blessing we received from President McKay's visit to our mission. I still become a bit emotional when I think of President McKay entering our school grounds and the natives gazing at their Prophet with tear-filled eyes when they first met him. I can still see persons of low birth and of high birth, not of the Church, and some in the Church, crawling up to him as he sat viewing the ceremonies, to ask a blessing, and he on his turn admonishing me that they must not kneel down to him.

I can still see vividly a scene in Vava'u where President McKay stood silently for a few moments as he gazed upon a packed congregation, and then he finally asked them: "Do you know what I saw today in a vision?" Then he paused for a few seconds, and then he answered his own question: "I saw a temple for these islands." This, his first announcement of a temple in the South Pacific made tears gush from all those present. As you know, a temple is now being erected in New Zealand, and the natives of Tonga and of Samoa and the other South Pacific Islands regard it as their temple.

President McKay's visit has now entered the folk lore of the Tongan people, and should you go down to Tonga now or any time in the future, you would undoubtedly hear the word Palesiteni McKay, which is Tongan for "President McKay" woven in the song and poem and dance as they tell and retell and act out the events of the visit.

It was a never-to-be-forgotten blessing.

Time will not permit but a passing mention of a visit to Tonga by Elder LeGrand Richards to dedicate the school. The Queen attended with many of her nobles. About eleven 300 to 600-pound pigs were slaughtered, called buaka toho, and well on to a thousand young pigs, innumerable fowl and fish were prepared for this occasion.

To me the mission was a glorious experience and I am truly grateful for it.

I should mention my wife, who was a bride of just six months when she arrived in Tonga with me. In addition to being a full-time missionary, and conducting the affairs of the Relief Society, she bore two children, and still found time to keep things going so that I could devote my full time to the work of the mission.

I should like also to mention many devoted missionaries that were sent there from the States, who made it their aim to make Liahona the finest school in the Islands—I think that they succeeded. One, particularly, who was there for so long, Elder Ermal Morton, was there for six years and left us a legacy of translated material. The Book of Mormon was translated by him and he is now translating the Doctrine and Covenants. He has translated liberally of textbooks and Church books, so that now in Tonga we have quite a Tongan literature, because of the work of this man. Also, he is a very able administrator and he saw the school grow from a patch in the woods until it is now the fine institution that it is today.

And all of the rest of the missionaries who were sent out, who labored devotedly and diligently to make our school a fine school, and our mission the finest, they should be acknowledged publicly and given thanks.

And I should not forget the Tongans. They are good people. They give of everything they have, whether they are asked or not, and they expect very little in return. There are many who have served among them who think that they deserve all that the Church has done for them in the past, all that it is doing for them now, and all that the Church can do for them in the future, because we are convinced that they are of Nephi and that they have a great and wonderful future.

May God bless those wonderful people.

I close by leaving with you my testimony that I know that this is the work of the Lord and I do this in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

The Congregation will now sing "Redeemer of Israel," Brother Cornwall conducting. After the singing we will hear from President J. Reuben Clark, Jr.

Singing by the congregation and the Tabernacle Choir Male Chorus, "Redeemer of Israel."

PRESIDENT J. REUBEN CLARK, JR.

Second Counselor in the First Presidency

MY BRETHREN, I have been intensely interested in the accounts of Brother Romney and Brother Coombs and as I sat here there came to me a thought that I have had many times before. I wonder how much our presumed scientific knowledge, so-called, has cost us in faith. I lived among those people myself for four years. I loved them. I loved their innocence of things worldly. I loved the simplicity of their lives. I loved the simplicity of their faith. Some transgressions because of their innocence seem to leave them untouched in faith.

And I wonder how much the little I know about the material gains in physical sciences and the presumed great laws of nature which we do not yet have in their fullness nor fully understand, I wonder how much that is worth to me in terms of faith. I do have a testimony. I do know that God answers prayers. I do know that he can heal. I do know that I have seen his healing. I repeat, I do know that he answers prayers. But I often wonder how much better I might know it if my faith had not been tampered with. Sometimes our faith waits on our presumed knowledge. I hope and I pray that we can bring into our hearts, into our souls the simple principles of the Gospel. Why should we worry about the things that the Lord has not made clear. Why should we worry about the things that he has not revealed, usually relating as they do, to matters that are not of much importance in the way we live. Why not put all extraneous things out of our minds as affecting our faith and just believe not only but come to know the power of faith and what it can do for us.

Brethren, I feel, speaking for myself, that I do not yet appreciate or understand what I might do if my faith were perfect.

I thought tonight that I might say just a word or two, not too much, about what I have thought of as "The Chaste Life." I would like to pay my respects and my congratulations to the tens of thousands of our people and of our young people who are clean and pure, who are enjoying all of the blessings that cleanliness and purity can bring and they are among the richest blessings that our Heavenly Father has to bestow. I honor those, those of clean lives, free from transgression, respected. I pray God to keep them clean and pure and so far as possible innocent. But when I partially realize how much the radio and the television and the play impart into the minds of our youth, who know far more than some of the older of us people about sex, I wish it were possible not to pollute their young minds.

And I think that we, bearers of the Priesthood, should do all in our power to keep them as innocent as we may while at the same time giving such instructions as they should have to help them keep clean, not to teach them how to avoid evidences of uncleanness.

But we have a few, as Brother Joseph Fielding said today, speaking of the Sabbath, too many—one, said he, is too many—we have a few who are not as we would like, and I blame in part for their views, their habits, their thoughts, their transgressions, the teachings that they receive. And one of the worst of the teachings that come to them is that teaching which is becoming too common, that the sex-urge is a natural urge to be gratified like the urge for drink or for food. Satan has not invented any more unrighteous, hideous doctrine than that, and he knows it, and yet, brought up as some of us are brought up, under environments where we do not hear sufficient antidotes for this poison, we hear it, we listen, we believe, we try, and then comes all the woes that attend to unchastity.

You know, when we read in the great law books in the Old Testament, specifically Leviticus, Numbers, and Deuteronomy, we may think that the Lord there is chastising and perhaps prescribing for the sins of Israel, and I thought I would just like to read to you two or three paragraphs taken from the Book of Leviticus, the 18th chapter:

"Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them (this is the command to Moses), I am the Lord your God. (Note this:—)

"After the doings of the land of Egypt, wherein ye dwelt, shall ye not do: and after the doings of the land of Canaan, whither I bring you, shall ye not do: neither shall ye walk in their ordinances.

"Ye shall do my judgments, and keep mine ordinances, to walk therein: I am the Lord your God.

"Ye shall therefore keep my statutes, and my judgments: which if a man do, he shall live in them: I am the Lord." (Lev. 18:2-5)

And following this throughout the Books, there are a series of commandments regarding sex sins. And in order, as it seems to me, to keep the Children of Israel from committing these sins, the Lord proceeds to name them and to prescribe penalties for their commission. I am going to just mention a few of them.

First is incest. I am not enlarging on it. In the law incest included more than we now ascribe to it. It included marriage between people within prohibited relationships. The penalty for incest was death to both parties.

Fornication—sometimes adultery and fornication are used interchangeably. But for certain kinds of fornication, the penalty was death.

For adultery, it was death for both parties.

For homosexuality, it was death to the male and the prescription or penalty for the female I do not know.

For bestiality, it was death for both the man involved and for the woman.

Prostitution was called an abomination.

"Defile not ye yourselves in any of these things: for in all these the nations are defiled which I cast out before you:

"And the land is defiled: therefore I do visit the iniquity thereof upon it, and the land itself vomiteth out her inhabitants.

"Ye shall therefore keep my statutes and my judgments, and shall not commit any of these abominations; neither any of your own nation, nor any stranger that sojourneth among you:

"(For all these abominations have the men of the land done, which were before you, and the land is defiled;)

"That the land spue not you out also, when ye defile it, as it spued out the nations that were before you.

"For whosoever shall commit any of these abominations, even the souls that commit them shall be cut off from among their people.

"Therefore shall ye keep mine ordinance, that ye commit not any one of these abominable customs, which were committed before you, and that ye defile not yourselves therein: I am the Lord your God." (Lev. 18:24-30.)

I wonder if the defilement of the land by abominations still has force and effect, and if it has any significance for us?

That was the way in which the Lord taught the Israelites what they should not do. Death was to be by burning or by stoning. You will remember the story of the woman taken in adultery, found in John 8. You will remember the incident of David and Bathsheba, you will find that in II Samuel, the eleventh chapter and following. And then you will remember the story of Corianton and Isabel. I am going to read that in just a minute. I am mentioning these things merely to show that Israel lived under a code that would not tolerate any such doctrine as that the sex-urge was a natural one and to be gratified just as the urge of thirst and of hunger.

I would like ourselves, the Priesthood, and our youth to understand that sex transgression is tragically serious, not something to be lightly considered, and I would call your attention to a statement, if I can find it, from the Prophet, who said that (this was the idea) wrong always gnaws at the heart of the transgressor. "Those who have done wrong always have that wrong gnawing them." (DHC 6, p. 366.)

Now, I want to read you the story of Corianton as told by Alma, in that Book of Alma, and this tells the transgression sufficiently, as well as the doctrine involved. Alma, speaking to his son Corianton said:

"For thou didst not give so much heed unto my words as did thy brother, among the people of the Zoramites. Now this is what I have against thee; thou didst go on unto boasting in thy strength and thy wisdom.

"And this is not all, my son. Thou didst do that which was grievous unto me; for thou didst forsake the ministry (remember he had been called on a mission), and did go over into the land of Siron, among the borders of the Lamanites, after the harlot Isabel.

"Yea, she did steal away the hearts of many; but this was no excuse for thee, my son. Thou shouldst have tended to the ministry wherewith thou wast entrusted.

"Know ye not, my son, that these things are an abomination in the sight of the Lord; yea, most abominable above all sins save it be the shedding of innocent blood or denying the Holy Ghost? . . ."

And then after a verse on the Holy Ghost, he continues:

"And now, my son, I would to God that ye had not been guilty of so great a crime. I would not dwell upon your crimes, to harrow up your soul, if it were not for your good.

"But behold, ye cannot hide your crimes from God; and except ye repent they will stand as a testimony against you at the last day.

"Now my son, I would that ye should repent and forsake your sins, and go no more after the lusts of your eyes, but cross yourself in all these things; for except ye do this ye can in nowise inherit the kingdom of God. Oh, remember, and take it upon you, and cross yourself in these things." (Alma 39:2-9.)

My purpose in saying what I have said and reading what I have read is to bring home to us the seriousness of these sex transgressions. Everything that we can do, and here the unity of the Priesthood comes again, we should do. Satan had Cain ask the Lord, "Am I my brother's keeper?" That question did not come from the spirit of the Lord. We are our brothers' keepers. It is our duty, each and every one of us, to do all that we possibly can do to restrain our brethren and our sisters, and particularly our young people from committing themselves as some are doing. There is no happiness in it for them here or hereafter. There is grief and sorrow and regret. There usually is an effort to repent but repentance brings an agony of spirit.

Let us all without obtrusion, without offense, in gentleness, in persuasion, and above all, in good example, try as best we can to improve the few who are in or going into transgression and to prevent others from following their course. It is no light thing to transgress sexually; it is a tragedy.

God give us the power and the knowledge to know how to do the things that I am suggesting, namely, help others to keep themselves pure, I humbly pray, in the name of Jesus. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

President Stephen L Richards will now speak to us.

PRESIDENT STEPHEN L RICHARDS

First Counselor in the First Presidency

I COULD WISH that all of the Priesthood assembled in the 96 meeting halls where they are met tonight might have been present last evening in the Tabernacle to have listened to and seen the program of the missionary work of the Church. I think had all been present there, it would have been unnecessary for me thus to bring an item or two of missionary work to your attention.

We have all been deeply impressed by the reports of missions which have come to us, and I am sure they have stirred us to a sense of great responsibility in carrying the Gospel to the world.

I wish to appeal to all of the Priesthood, and to the families of the Church through the Priesthood, for more missionaries at this time. You have heard that we have a considerable force in the field, but I must apprise you of the fact that they who are returning from the field in such large numbers require more replacements than we can furnish from those whom you are recommending to us week by week and month by month. If everyone could realize the problems of a mission president, I am sure that all would be appreciative of the need for missionaries to keep up a more or less standard quota in our missions. As the missionaries extend the work, they usually organize small branches of the Church, Sunday Schools, small groups, which have to be nurtured and cared for by the missionaries.

When a sufficient number of missionary terms expire so that the mission president is not able to keep in those branches the number who are requisite to carry them on, it not infrequently means that a small branch that had a good start must be more or less disorganized because possibly no one of sufficient stature in the Church is there to administer it, and it therefore means something of a loss in the forward motion of our missionary work. We do need more missionaries at the present.

We need, of course, those who are able to carry forward the work, and as we mentioned to the brethren and sisters last night, they must be in good health—preferably younger people who can stand the more strenuous effort. They must be, too, impressed with the necessity and the desirability of missionary work. I am sure we were touched tonight as we heard these mission presidents express their interest in the people where they served. They knew they were blessing their lives, and every missionary should know that, if he would render the best and most effective service.

So, we appeal to you, my brethren of the Priesthood, to attempt to send from the homes of the people those who can meet the needs of the various missions. And may I make a suggestion, too, that may prevent some disappointment. So many of our young folks make up their minds where they would like to serve, and perhaps there is a certain legitimacy to their having a preference, but it can readily be seen that if all preferences were to be observed, that we would fail to meet the needs of the missions as those needs arise. Therefore, they who are called to serve in the missionary field should be impressed with the necessity of answering the calls that come to them with gladness and willingness, wherever the mission might be, in order to carry forward our Father's work for the reclamation of the souls of his children.

Saturday, April 6

I take occasion to mention to the Priesthood, too, that all of our missionaries who come into the field now, or who contemplate coming in the near future, should have their polio inoculation. If they do that in advance of the time when they come to the mission home, considerable time will be saved, and they will be able to have the complete inoculation earlier than if they left their inoculations until they arrived here.

All missionaries who come to the Mission Home should come with temple recommends. We had thought that was clearly understood throughout the Church, and yet there is scarcely a company which comes to the Mission Home in which some temple recommends are not forthcoming, and time is required in order to get those recommends to go to the temple. All of the missionaries who come to the Home go through the temple twice while they are here.

I think I will not take occasion to mention any further items about our missionaries. I scarcely need to impress upon the Priesthood of the Church the necessity of furnishing to the Church those who shall carry forward this great work. One of the most encouraging things to me, following the long journeys that our President has made throughout the world, is the growth of our work in distant lands of the earth, of which you had example this evening. This great Gospel is intended for all men. There is no nation to be favored, if the children of our Father will but open their hearts to the reception of the truth, and there is no one to carry that message excepting you, the great Priesthood of the Church, and the sisters who assist us in missionary labors.

I have been thinking that there is something significant in the vastness of this Priesthood congregation that we have the honor of addressing tonight. You have already been told by the President that there are assembled in 96 different places groups of the Priesthood to hear the messages of this evening, stretched all the way across this Continent from Canada on the north to Mexico on the south. With this wide coverage one might reasonably ask the question, "Why do we not have a general broadcast of these services?"

I think that this most unusual situation in what we call a closed circuit broadcast consists in the unique character of the Holy Priesthood which we have the honor to represent. This great society of men and boys living in different nations of the earth is admittedly an exclusive society, not made so, however, by any prohibitory rules and regulations set up for initiation and membership which we may prescribe, but made so by the Lord himself. He stands at the head of this great order in his Kingdom. He it is who has caused his delegated power and the rights of membership in this order to come to us, his servants. It is he who has made provision for the establishment of this vast exclusive society, with his chosen High Priest at its head. And thus it is that those only who have received and accepted their divine commissions are entitled, so to speak, to a ticket to this great meeting which is held tonight. You do not have to pay for your admission here, or in any of the assemblies where our Priesthood meet. You are invited guests of the President of the Church tonight to a very select and exclusive assembly. We have occasion to feel grateful and proud that we are eligible for this invitation.

It is sometimes thought that when things become widely distributed that they are common and cheap. That is not so with the Priesthood. It is widely distributed among the men and boys of the Church, as you heard from the reports read today, but it is not cheap. It is precious, and it is priceless, and the numbers who bear it, apportioned among the whole population of the world, make it very rare indeed. I one time figured out, some years ago, about how many that would be, and I estimated that there would be one member of the Priesthood to every ten thousand persons in the world. If it were so geographically apportioned, we should certainly feel that we had a rare calling.

The potential power residing in the membership of this great assemblage is so vast and so far-reaching as to defy almost any attempt to measure it. Here among these men of God, old and young alike, is a fund of knowledge—"pure knowledge," the revelations call it—essential and vital to the peace and happiness of mankind. Here upon this great assembly rests the obligation by divine command to disseminate that "pure knowledge" among all the Father's children. In the men gathered in this great congregation is vested the right, the power, and the duty to establish in verity the Kingdom of God, to set up, to man, and to operate the organizations and agencies comprised within the Kingdom, with the express duty to prepare the Kingdom for transfer to the Savior himself when he shall come, as he surely will, to take delivery of it.

I ask you to pause a moment in the thought of this awesome, lofty undertaking—to prepare the Kingdom for delivery to the Master. I said you were an exclusive society. You are, because no other body of men in all this world are authorized and equipped to make that preparation and that delivery except yourselves. Fortunately, we are divinely organized for the achievement of that herculean task. A true representative of the Master stands at our head to guide us and to lead us in this great endeavor. If we follow his leadership, and that of his associates, and adhere to the counsels they give, we shall not fail. In preparing the Kingdom for delivery, however, let one thing never be forgotten: our preparation of the Kingdom proceeds no faster than the preparation of ourselves to enter into the presence of our Lord and partake of the fruits of obedience and righteousness.

I do not believe that the Kingdom can be nurtured in any degree of wickedness and unrighteous dominion. We controvert the age-old assertion that the Kingdom has been preserved over the centuries under wicked and sinful potentates and a perversion of the pure laws of the Christ, who was and is the founder of the Kingdom. It is not our practice, my brethren of the Priesthood, to cast aspersion on others, but we are constrained by the truth to make the assertion I just made—that the Kingdom was lost and is now restored. To prepare the Kingdom for the Master is the most exalted objective that I can think of for the men and boys of the Priesthood of the Church of Christ. It comprehends and entails unity and brotherhood, spirit and endeavor, obedience to law and counsel, example—stimulating, worthy example—as a premise for missionary work among all men, wide and effective teaching of the principles and practices of the Church, loyalty—unswerving loyalty—to principle and to authority.

When the Christ comes to receive his Kingdom, whom will he call to assist him in its administration? I am just as convinced as I am that I stand before you tonight that he will first call upon you—his Priesthood. I expect him to be merciful and kind to all the good and well-intentioned of the world, but I know he will respect and honor the organization he has caused to be set up and the man whom he has entrusted with his divine power, and I confidently expect that when he shall personally take charge there will be perpetuated without great change the organizations and the procedures which have prevailed in the Kingdom of the latter days, organized under the revelations of God. If any word of mine might serve to enlarge your appreciation and your vision of the precious power you hold, my dear brethren, I would be grateful indeed. I have complete confidence, without doubt or wavering, in the account we have of the bestowal of the holy power which we bear, and in its authority as descended to us from those who received it from heavenly messengers.

I know that it is divine. Respect it. Honor it, my brethren. Use it, and employ it for the high purposes for which the Lord gave it. Then if you will magnify it, it will magnify you, and make even the humblest great and mighty in the sight of God and the esteem of men.

The Lord bless you, my associates in the great Priesthood of the Living God, I humbly ask in the name of Jesus. Amen.

PRESIDENT DAVID O. McKAY

THANK YOU BRETHREN who have so ably discharged your duty in ascertaining the attendance this night in 97 houses of worship, including this Tabernacle. It is complete.

Total tonight	37,180

That is the largest attendance in the history of the Church!

We do not favor taking photographs in our meetings, but I do wish that we could get a picture of this assembly tonight. All who can see it as we from the rostrum will never forget it. If anybody have his flashlight camera, he may take a picture, so we may have it enlarged.

I think this is wonderful, it is glorious! What a power assembled tonight in 97 groups, men of the Priesthood—men of God! We just feel in our hearts to say, "O Father," as Christ pleaded with Him, "keep us one as thou, Father, and thy Son are one." Nothing can stay the progress of the kingdom of God as long as this mighty army of Priesthood will keep united.

We heard tonight from two released missionaries—presidents from missions. They represented all mission presidents tonight, first, in their ready response to the call that came to them—one a prominent businessman, another a professional man, and their wives with them. So have all other mission presidents. I happen to know some of the sacrifices that their sweet wives have made in the missions represented. So the other mission presidents' wives make these sacrifices. Do they complain? No. They rejoice in the opportunity. Other mission presidents could tell us of interesting items just as Brother Romney and Brother Coombs gave us tonight.

The world does not realize what this missionary work in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints entails, and what a mighty contribution the members of the Priesthood are making to make it a success. I, too, wish that all had heard that program last evening. One thing they realized was that one of the influential factors in missionary work is personal contact, that is one of the most potent, most effective.

And so it is in the field of activity to which I wish to refer in a few words—our ward teaching.

Especially during the last year, I have been impressed with the realization that we are not reaching those whom the Lord would like us to reach. Now, the ward teachers are doing an excellent work. They visit homes regularly. They have their lessons prepared. And they make their report.

Statistics show that the ward teaching is in good shape. So what I say is not reflecting upon the effort that is made by this group of Priesthood. But tell me, fellow workers, are we doing all that is implied by the Lord's statement that it is the ward teacher's duty to watch over the Church always?

A man who knows about the ills that befall our Government because of criminals wrote recently—I refer to F.B.I. Director J. Edgar Hoover—about the responsibility of parents. He said:

"Criminals are not born with a stamp of criminality affixed to them. They are created by the forces and influences surrounding them. Certainly parental influence is a vital element in determining the direction in which a child will go. The parent who fails his duty by neglecting to provide moral training and essential consistent discipline in the home should be accountable for the delinquencies which emanate from that neglect. I firmly believe that the tide of juvenile crime could be stemmed if neglectful parents were made to face legal and financial responsibility for the criminal acts of their children.

"I am convinced that parental incompetency, parental indifference are at the root of the vast majority of youthful behavior problems.

"Back of the majority of cases of juvenile delinquency lies, in some form or another, the abdication of parental responsibility; broken homes; lack of parental supervision; over-protective parents, drunken parents; over-indulgent mother; overly strict father; parent works nights; poor home conditions; parental neglect; lack of religious training; no discipline; depraved home environment. Nothing is sadder, in my opinion, than those cases in which children lack nothing in material things, and yet parental irresponsibility destroys their potential development as good citizens." (Published in "The Rotarian," October, 1956.)

One cause of delinquency he names is broken homes. I appreciate the statistics sent me every month by the Salt Lake County Sheriff and his associates. I brought two here tonight regarding broken homes.

In November, 1956, 96 criminals were fingerprinted; 4 women among them; 23 repeaters. In December, 1956, there were 95 fingerprinted; 6 women; 22 repeaters. In November, among those 96, 60 were from broken homes; 24, in which the father was dead; 12, the mother was dead; 22, both dead; and 2 were divorced. Among the 95 in December, 1956, 56 broken homes. Note, it is over half of the people, half of the criminals. Father was dead in 16 of the homes; mother was dead in 10; and in 25, both were dead.

Well there are other statistics, but I do not have time to refer to them.

Now, it is the duty of the ward teacher to watch over the Church always, to be with and to strengthen.

I wish we could see tonight how many of those 60 who came from broken homes were on the list of the ward teacher; how many of those 56 offenders last December from broken homes were listed by the ward teacher. Do not go away with the idea that they are not members of the Church. The Sheriff's report gives the number of deacons, the number of teachers, the number of priests, and the number of elders among those who were fingerprinted. As it is the duty of the teacher to "watch over the Church always" every one of the children from these broken homes (members of the Church) should be on the ward teachers' list.

I have a case in mind that will illustrate:

A mother died and left a large family, none of whom were married, and a little baby boy. The father was quite indifferent. He had been born in the Church. We all felt sorry when his wife died and left him with a large family. The oldest girl took care of that family wonderfully well. They are all in the Church. But the young boy grew up and did not attend his school until winter came, and then he left it as soon as spring opened up. He liked to ride horses and he could ride the bucking horse. He learned to shoot. Early in his 'teens he went out to herd sheep, and he made money. But when he came back, he did not go to Sunday School, he did not go to M.I.A. His interest was in activity—a life of activity.

Well, I will not go through the whole story. He was skillful in herding, riding, shooting, and the outdoor life.

I have referred several times to that rhyme given by the Presiding Bishopric to the Aaronic Quorums about the boy who stood alone. . . .

The boy stood at the crossroads all alone,

The sunlight in his face.

He had no thought for the world unknown,

He was set for a manly race.

But the roads stretched east and the roads stretched west,

And the lad knew not which road was best.

So he chose the road that led him down,
And he lost the race and the victor's crown.

He was caught at last in an angry snare,
Because no one stood at the crossroads there

To show him the better road.

That is just what this boy did. While still in his 'teens, he entered a grocery store, bought something, paid with a bill, $10 or $20, and a dispute arose about the change. The merchantman attempted to throw him out. The young boy had his sixshooter and was caught "at last in an angry snare."

Personally, I made inquiry, when that boy went to the penitentiary, as to

Sunday, April 7

Third Day

whether the Sunday School teacher had ever visited him. No. Nor had the Mutual worker nor the ward teacher. I do not know that they could have won him. I think they could have. Personal contact would have won that boy.

It is the teacher's duty to watch over the Church always. That boy's name should have been on some teacher's list.

So it is with these 60 people—let us say there are only 30—half of these who were fingerprinted belong to us—thirty last November, were from broken homes.

Ward teachers, when you go home tonight, make a complete list of all those in your district, every boy, every girl. You may not go to a broken home, you may not find them there. Find out where they are and reach them. God bless you, and bless us all as we watch over the Church always.

For first, Priesthood means service; it is not given just as an honor. I congratulate you and commend you that you are worthy to receive it, but it is given to you for service, and you act as an authorized representative of our Lord Jesus Christ in whatever position you may be assigned.

God bless you that you may serve worthily, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

PRESIDENT STEPHEN L RICHARDS

First Counselor in the First Presidency

ILAY ASIDE the beautiful lei made of baby orchids, presented to us so graciously by our Hawaiian sisters, while I speak, fearing too sharp a contrast between the brilliance of its beauty, and the drabness of what may follow. (Laughter)

My brethren and sisters and friends, I believe that most families or parts of families to whom I have the honor of speaking today are deeply and anxiously concerned about reports that reach us constantly regarding the waywardness of youth. I can think of no milder term than waywardness to characterize what I have in mind. You know of many other harsher terms more frequently used, and I do not say without justification. I use wayward because there is an element in the term which deserves our thoughtful consideration. The word literally means taking one's own way, and the connotation, of course, is in contravention of, or at variance with, an established way or order.

Is there an established way or order? Under the law the answer must be yes—at least to the extent that the law covers the ways of life. The Ten Commandments is not a legal document, but its principles are all incorporated into the law by means of penalties prescribed for infraction of these commandments, at least so far as violations of the commandments may be manifest in social behavior.

Would it not be a great gain in winning respect for the law to make it more clear that the laws of the land in the main have their origin in divine pronouncements, and that in the main they win approval only as they conform to such generally accepted standards of morality and righteousness? Is that not the vital distinction between democracy and communism? The test of democratic law has always been, and will continue to be, is it right in accordance with revealed principles of righteousness? The test of communistic law seems to be, is it effective in the maintenance of controls superimposed by arbitrary authority? It seems to be of no concern that there is no conformity to divine principles of human conduct, and no recognition of divinity as well.

Could we help wayward youth if we confronted each one with wayward tendencies with these forthright questions: "Are you a communist and an anarchist? Is it your purpose to overthrow the government and forfeit all the safeguards, the rights, and liberties derived from our ancestors who fought so valiantly and made so many sacrifices for the free society we now enjoy? Are you an atheist? Do you believe there is no divine source of right and wrong? Would you like to see this country of ours, and other peace-loving democratic countries, turned over to communistic domination and dictatorship? You should know that vice and crime in sufficiently extended proportions can do that without a single foreign bomb being exploded in our territory. Vice and crime are rebellion. They can bring on war as devastating as that between states, and they have able and clever leadership, for their general is the father of lies, the author of clever seductions and enticements, the deceiver, the adversary, the opponent of all that is good and virtuous. That leader is Satan, given power to tempt humanity in mortality that they may develop resistance and strength. They who follow his lead, though they may think themselves tough, are weaklings without resistance. They are without vision. If they had vision, they could see and understand the gravity and the futility of their offenses, and they would be able to see prison walls stronger and more impenetrable than those built of steel and concrete which will separate them from all the finer things of life—family, friends, the love of God and fellow men."

I do not know that such an imaginary conversation and approach would have a deterrent effect upon those with wayward tendencies. I do believe, however, it would be good for those who ask the questions—fathers, mothers, teachers, and other guardians of youth. Such questions might serve to set in the minds of all some fundamental principles concerning respect for authority, loyalty, and duty. Most unfortunately there are many young folk who have no one to ask the questions. What a pity! May the Lord bring repentance to those parents whose selfishness, whose untimely separations, and whose misguided lives have inflicted such tragic conditions on their offspring and on society.

I think it is a mistake for those charged with the custody of children to lose sight of or abandon the principle of reproof. The Lord has used that principle in dealing with his children during all the time of which we have record, and he has never given us any indication that it should be abandoned. No one who advocates love as the most important and potent factor in parent and teacher and child relations can go too far to suit me, but let it never be forgotten that reproof may be, and very often is, an important element in that loving relationship.

The Lord has told us how to reprove. I should like to remind my brethren and sisters, and tell my other friends, what he has said about it. Before I do so, however, I am going to tell you of an incident which occurred on a ship while I was returning from a visit to South America a number of years ago. On this voyage, which included two Sundays, I was asked by those representing the captain of the vessel to conduct what were called "divine services." There was no one on board of our own faith to whom I might appeal for assistance. I had made the acquaintance of a rather elderly man who was a retired minister of another church, so I asked him if he would participate and offer prayer. He gave a very beautiful prayer at one of the services. After the prayer I engaged him in conversation, and among other things we spoke of the care of youth and family responsibility. He recited an impressive incident in his own experience. He said that while he was an active minister there was among his parishioners a very lovely family. They had a promising son who married. He established a home and began to have his own family. Most unfortunately, however, he took up the habit of drinking, and within a comparatively short time reached the stage where he might be classed as an alcoholic. His wife and his family were, of course, greatly distressed. They pleaded with him, and so did this minister, to abandon his wayward course, but seemingly to no avail.

One day my friend, the minister, met this young man coming down the street. He recognized him some little distance before they met. The young man offered his hand in greeting, but the minister rejected the offer, and he said, in substance, to the young man: "John, I rebuke you, and in the authority of my ministry I command you to cease the terrible practices which are ruining your home and bringing such sorrow to your loved ones." With these words the minister left the young man, confused and shocked, standing on the sidewalk. My friend told me that after he had gone a short distance he was tempted to go back and apologize. He said that he had never done such a thing before, and he could not understand how he had come to speak such seemingly cruel words to one of his friends for whom he felt such responsibility.

When he had finished telling me of the incident, I picked up a volume which I had with me, and I read to him these words:

"No power or influence can or ought to be maintained by virtue of the priesthood, only by persuasion, by long-suffering, by gentleness and meekness, and by love unfeigned;

"By kindness, and pure knowledge, which shall greatly enlarge the soul without hypocrisy, and without guile—

"Reproving betimes with sharpness, when moved upon by the Holy Ghost; and then showing forth afterwards an increase of love toward him whom thou hast reproved, lest he esteem thee to be his enemy;

"That he may know that thy faithfulness is stronger than the cords of death." (D & C 121:41-44.)

"That's it, that's it!" the old minister said to me excitedly. "Where did you find that?" I told him that it was part of a revelation concerning the nature of the Holy Priesthood, given to the Prophet Joseph Smith more than a hundred years before this conversation took place. The minister then told me that after he had given the rebuke to the young man, a few weeks passed, and the man came to him and thanked him, and said to him, "All the pleading of my family and friends made me sorrowful but did not bring to me the courage to act. That rebuke which you gave to me that day on the street has given me a strength that I could not acquire before. I have never taken a drink since, and I have the resolution and the faith to believe that I never will again."

It is a kindness to reprove in the spirit of love. It is an unkindness to mitigate the gravity of offenses in those for whose guidance and direction we have responsibility.

Next, I would like to ask this question. Has the word duty come to have anything in the nature of an unpleasant reaction on the part of those undertaking to lay down principles for the guidance of youth? Sometimes I hear so much about uninhibited independence of action and free development of personality that it makes me wonder if the concept of duty has gone out of the picture. Conformity also seems to be a term that has come in for a measure of odium. The only place where I hear duty and conformity spoken of with great acclaim is in the military establishments. Everybody there seems to be most exacting without toleration for any departure or insubordination, and I have never heard of reproof there being administered in any such way as I have described. I suppose it would be shocking to the proponents of the so-called individualistic development theory to assert or assume that discipline is just as necessary for the success of an orderly society as it is for the success of armies and navies.

Why should the inculcation of the principle of duty in the training of youth be regarded in any unfavorable light whatsoever? Do we obtain anything of worth except by conformity to this principle? It is true that the concept of duty may entail some self-denial, but do we not all suffer for success, in the sense, at least, that we discipline ourselves to the conditions of success? In athletics, which often seem so important to youth, no one achieves distinction except by conformity to training, which is duty, and to the governing rules. In business the same is true. There are governing rules and principles which must be observed. Sometimes men think they can gamble and get something for nothing, but in the end they cannot succeed in business by this method, for legitimate business is built upon the principle of exchange of values. There are some who think that in professional and academic life the so-called individualist without conformity may win great success and distinction. In reality, this is not true, for the great researchers and contributors to the welfare of humanity are generally not non-conformists—they are expansionists—building upon the knowledge already acquired for the extension of principles and formulae to good purpose.

I hope I do not labor this point too much, but when I hear occasionally—not often—of teachers, and some parents, too, who decry the old-fashioned concepts of conformity and duty, and place a premium on non-conformity without its alleged abridgment of intellectual freedom, I cannot help feeling grave concern about students and youth who are subjected to such views by those whose scholarly attainments they respect and admire. I wish all who project such teaching might find a way of discovering its relation to deviations in youth which so much plague society today. I am bold enough to say, whether it be wisdom or not, that any teacher taking advantage of the prestige which his position gives him, who advocates or permits the impression to prevail that the traditional standards of morality prevailing in the good homes of his students are not binding on the individuals who make up his class, is untrue to both his constituency and his calling, and remembering that these moral principles and standards have been incorporated into the laws of the land, it may not be going too far to view his teaching as traitorous to the law and the government under which he operates.

Sunday, April 7Third Day

I make these drastic statements not so much by way of indictment, because I am sure there are very, very few who would intentionally mislead their students, but rather by way of caution against a philosophy which could greatly add to this waywardness of youth.

What chances do we take when we teach our youth that there are well-recognized standards of morality incorporated into the very structure of the law of the land? And if a teacher has the mind to give the history of our institutions and our laws, is it objectionable to tell the truth about the source of these moral concepts and principles which have come down to us? Is it an infringement on any personal liberty to reveal the fact that the Ten Commandments furnish the foundation and basis for much of our law? If it is not an infringement, why should not all of our students and our youth know this? I think it would greatly enhance their respect for the laws of our land and bring to them a more clearly defined understanding of duty and obligation in a country governed by such law. They ought to know that they cannot enjoy property, money, and all the advantages they bring without the duty to protect property and rightful owners in the possession thereof. They ought to know that they cannot enjoy personal health and personal freedom of motion without the corresponding duty to protect from assault and molestation. And they ought to be made fully aware of the fact that there can be no happy homes, no contentment and security therein without the duty of everyone to preserve the sanctity of the home, the virtue of womanhood, and manhood, too. He who would disparage the principle of duty, the controlling factor in our living, has a very narrow and constricted view of the purpose of life in the universe, for without hesitation I say: Teach duty, require duty, if need be, in children to bless their lives with proper understanding and practices essential to their happiness.

Now, there are other concepts and principles indispensable to happy living in a good society which are not incorporated as such into the laws of the land. No penalties are provided for their infraction. The Ten Commandments were given largely by way of injunction: "Thou shalt not. . ." The Beatitudes come to us as persuasion and incentive. They are not negative, but positive, in character. All who believe in the standards of righteousness and morality set up by the Ten Commandments know and understand that the gracious persuasion of the Beatitudes and other of the Savior's teachings furnish the highest incentive to yield obedience to the commandments and attain the blessings which are held out as a reward for compliance. It is essential that this be made clear to youth, that they may understand that moral standards and principles are not just prohibitive and negative in character, but that they are the essential foundation to happiness and the attainment of joy. If they could once be persuaded that there is no enduring happiness in sin, but only in goodness, the battle would be won.

I know that a great effort is put forth by millions of good people to hold before youth the advantages and the lasting values emanating from the teachings of our Lord. I rejoice in these efforts, and I am sure that unmeasured good comes from them to countless of our Father's children. If I may make any contribution whatever to this great undertaking of persuasion for the adoption of the Christian principles as a way of life, it is this: to make clear that the kingdom of God is a kingdom of law; that the governing laws are of divine origin; that they are eternally right and do not change—interpretations may vary, but the laws are eternal; that infraction of the law is sin and draws a penalty. We know of the penalty attached to the breaking of these laws when they are incorporated in the laws of the state. We have not been shown the exact nature of the penalties which the Lord imposes, but we do know that no law of his may be broken with impunity.

I want this taught to youth so that they may comprehend it. It is their due and their right to have these things given to them without dilution or apology. This is justice and mercy. Neither shall rob the other. How can it be a kindness to any youth to white-wash and ameliorate the crime and the sin of stealing, of assault to bodily injury, of vandalism, the wanton destruction of property, of malicious scandal, of lying and deceit, and perhaps the greatest of all, that robbery which steals virtue from either woman or man?

Perhaps at this point I should tell those not of the Church something they may not know. Within our society the law of virtue is applicable equally to men as to women, and all are taught that it is better to lose life than virtue. To some these teachings may seem extreme. We believe they are justified and have approval of the Christ whom we follow.

I will repeat a circumstance which came under my observation some years ago, with apologies for its repetition to those who have heard it. I presided over a conference session in one of our older meetinghouses in which there was a relatively small balcony in the rear of the chapel. This balcony was filled with young men and women in their teens. I called upon the president of the stake to speak at the conference. To my surprise, and I think to the surprise of the large congregation in the body of the house, he addressed himself directly and exclusively to the young people in the gallery. Looking straight at them, he said, in substance:

"Young people, in the not too distant future, nearly every one of you will come to me to be interviewed; some for advancement in the priesthood—these will be young men; some for recommendations to go on missions—these will be both young men and young women; and many of you for recommendations to go to the temple for marriage—both men and women. When you come to me for interview separately, I will ask each one to sit down in a chair directly facing me. I will look each one squarely in the eye, and this is the first question I will ask: Are you clean? If you answer yes, you will be happy. If you answer no, you will be sorry. If you lie to me, you will regret it all the days of your life."

That is all that he said to these young people. There was profound silence. I think that no one who was present will ever forget the occasion and the impression made on these young men and women. I think that this man did not overemphasize the moral principle which he impressed on these young people. May it not be that when we come to the final judgment, as all of us will, that may be the first question propounded for each of us? Are you clean?

Washington said that morality and religion were the firmest props of government. I say morality—private morality—is indispensable to a good society founded on happy homes in nations of freedom. One of the disappointments that has come to me in the observation of our political life is that all too frequently our citizens are prone to tolerate private immorality in public office, and that by comity neither side will accuse the other. I do not make this indictment general, but I firmly believe that there are a sufficient number of cases of hypocritical living in public affairs, and a sufficient number of instances of infidelity in the homes of the land, exposed and unexposed, as to have furnished an example for youth which has not been encouraging. The need of the hour is for good example and good teaching, and teaching is very difficult without the fortification of example.

Sunday, April 7

Third Day

You may have observed that I have not used the term delinquency. I chose waywardness for this discussion, because I wanted to give to youth the benefit of all doubt possible. Wayward youth has gone his own way, in large measure because he has not adequately been shown the right way.

I humbly pray that all the forces at our command, the home, the church, the school, the government, and the exemplars of the nation, shall all combine to show wayward youth the right way, which is God's way, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

He to whom you have just listened is President Stephen L. Richards of the First Presidency of the Church. Elder George Q. Morris, a member of the Council of the Twelve, will now address us.

ELDER GEORGE Q. MORRIS

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

MY DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS, I sincerely pray that the Lord will direct me to say that which I should say to you this morning. He has blessed us through this great conference from the inspired and powerful address of President McKay through all the sessions. I sincerely pray that his blessings may be with me, that that Spirit shall be continued.

This is fast day in the Church, the regular monthly fast day, and I should like to dwell with you for a few moments upon its importance and our relation to it.

In the early days of the Church, there were urgent needs to be met, and so the Prophet Joseph Smith, who had a plea made him from Kirtland for help for the poor and the needy, told the Saints to establish a fast day. Each month it was to be observed, and they were to fast for the day and bring to the one in charge the food that they would have consumed so that it might be dispensed to the poor.

What a beautiful, simple, direct, and inspired provision the Lord made through the Prophet Joseph Smith! People were to endure hunger and not partake of food they had but bring that food that others might not endure hunger.

The Lord revealed to Isaiah the true observance of the fast day; after rejecting the methods used by Israel at that time, he then points out the right way that the day should be observed.

Is not this the fast that I have chosen? to loose the bands of wickedness, to undo the heavy burdens, and to let the oppressed go free, and that ye break every yoke?

Is it not to deal thy bread to the hungry, and that you bring the poor that are cast out to thy house? when thou seest the naked, that thou cover him; and that thou hide not thyself from thine own flesh?

Then shall the light break forth as the morning, and thine health shall spring forth speedily; and thy righteousness shall go before thee; the glory of the Lord shall be thy reward.

And if thou draw out thy soul to the hungry, and satisfy the afflicted soul; then shall thy light rise in obscurity, and thy darkness be as the noon day:

And the Lord shall guide thee continually, and satisfy thy soul in drought, and make fat thy bones: and thou shalt be like a watered garden, and like a spring of water, whose waters fail not. (Isaiah 58:6-8, 10-11.)

What a beautiful description of a day that we should follow once a month for the alleviation of suffering, for our own spiritual growth and development, and to carry out the purposes of the Lord that there shall be no want, no suffering, but every attention given to those who are afflicted and in distress.

I was told the other day (I did not learn any more of the details) that a bishop invited some of the members of his ward to a banquet, and as one man had his plate presented to him there was on it a small piece of meat and a small piece of carrot. I do not know what the man's impressions were or what questions arose in his mind, but it was explained to him that that represented the fast offering that he had been giving to the needy. [Laughter.] Now that was surely a very realistic way of pointing out his relation to the fast offering and his obligations. And it reminded me of a sobering statement that the Prophet Joseph Smith made at the funeral of James Adams in 1843, and refers back to the powerful statement and announcement made by President McKay, that it is by doing the will of God that we will attain salvation and accomplish his purpose, and in no other way.

Incidentally, as we build up false hopes on something else, there will be a time of terrible awakening. So the Prophet Joseph Smith declared:

If men will acquire salvation they have got to be subject before they leave this world to certain rules and principles which were fixed by an unalterable decree before the world was.

The disappointment of hopes and of expectations at the resurrection will be indescribably dreadful. (DHC 6:50-51.)

It is for us to avoid that dreadful experience that he refers to and keep the commandments of God and bring to pass the purposes of the Lord. It is not only that we do not obey the Lord as far as we personally are concerned, but it is a serious sin as well that we frustrate the purposes of God, at least for the moment; and a condition that he wishes to bring to pass among his people for the alleviation of suffering, for the comforting of the afflicted, and for the strengthening of his Church, fails because we do not keep his commandments. That is a most serious thing. It seems to me that we must take it into account. The first is, in a way, personal, but the second is rejecting God and blocking his plans and his purposes, by which he means to bless his people.

I think we may not and must not be casual or indifferent regarding this fast day which is so common among us. I am sure we are not giving it the thought that it deserves. Many people seem indifferent. But what a wonderful thing it would be if the stake presidencies and bishoprics of wards and presidents of branches, through the help of the Lord, could instruct the people and inspire them all so that they would give in full to the Lord their free-will fast offering. What a strength and power it would be towards the bringing to pass of the purposes of God among his people and in the earth.

And the way to do that is simple, if the people would understand and accept this principle and obey it. I believe it hinges on the one fact, so far as I am concerned, that it is just as necessary to pay an honest fast offering as it is to pay an honest tithing.

The Lord has told us how we shall pay our tithing and we are able to pay it properly and we call it a full tithing. The Lord has told us what the fast offering shall be, that it shall be the equivalent of the food of which we did not partake.

Great strength and power would come to us, so far as having means in the Church (and the Lord says he wishes to "have meat in his house") to accomplish his purposes. Yesterday we were advised that we are approaching a million and a half people. Let us consider a million people and realize that if we paid a full and honest fast offering, joyfully and gladly before the Lord, there would come into the hands of the servants of God each year, paid by a million people, the value of twenty-four million meals. What a strength that would be to the great welfare movement, what a spiritual blessing would come to all of the Church, for God promises great blessings, and what means would be in hand to bring about the alleviation of the suffering and the needs of the people!

This thing goes right to the heart of the gospel. The Lord found it necessary to charge ancient Israel with robbery, that they had robbed him in their tithes and their offerings, and they were under a curse, but he said,

... prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it. (Mal. 3:10.)

I wish to read some of his words, just a few short selections, to emphasize the need of obeying the law of the fast and giving offerings for the poor and afflicted. They affect our salvation;

Sunday, April 7

they affect the forgiveness of our sins; they affect our souls being saved. We will not be saved, our prayers will not be answered, and the Lord will reject us as his disciples if we do not remember the poor and the afflicted.

These are his words directly through his prophets:

Therefore, if any man shall take of the abundance which I have made, and impart not his portion, according to the law of my gospel, unto the poor and the needy, he shall, with the wicked, lift up his eyes in hell, being in torment. (D & C 104:18.)

And now, for the sake of these things which I have spoken unto you—that is, for the sake of retaining a remission of your sins from day to day, that ye may walk guiltless before God—I would that ye should impart of your substance to the poor, every man according to that which he hath, such as feeding the hungry, clothing the naked, visiting the sick and administering to their relief, both spiritually and temporally, according to their wants. (Mosiah 4:26.)

Yea, and when you do not cry unto the Lord, let your hearts be full, drawn out in prayer unto him continually for your welfare, and also for the welfare of those who are around you.

And now behold, my beloved brethren, I say unto you, do not suppose that this is all; for after ye have done all these things, if ye turn away the needy, and the naked, and visit not the sick and afflicted, and impart of your substance, if ye have, to those who stand in need—I say unto you, if ye do not any of these things, behold, your prayer is vain, and availeth you nothing, and ye are as hypocrites who do deny the faith. (Alma 34:27, 28.)

Wo unto you rich men, that will not give your substance to the poor, for your riches will canker your souls; and this shall be your lamentation in the day of visitation, and of judgment, and of indignation: The harvest is past, the summer is ended, and my soul is not saved! (D & C 56:16.)

And remember in all things the poor and the needy, the sick and the afflicted, for he that doeth not these things, the same is not my disciple. (Ibid., 52:40.)

May the Lord help us to discharge this great obligation in gladness and in joy, with all our hearts, I humbly pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

The Choir and Congregation will now sing, "O Say, What is Truth?" Elder George Q. Morris of the Council of Twelve has just concluded speaking.

The Choir and congregation sang the hymn, "O Say, What Is Truth?"

President David O. McKay:

We shall now hear from Elder Hugh B. Brown, Assistant to the Twelve, who has just returned from an assignment by the First Presidency to officiate at the laying of the cornerstone of the New Zealand Temple.

ELDER HUGH B. BROWN

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve Apostles

I HUMBLY PRAY that I may have the liberty which comes from the possession of the Holy Spirit and that your prayers and mine may be effective to that end.

As mentioned, we have just returned from a tour of the missions in the South Pacific, and we are sure that you parents, friends, and relatives of the missionaries who are laboring there will be interested in knowing that they are well, happy, and doing a wonderful work. They send to you and to all members of the Church their love, greetings, and gratitude. We met 575 of them while there, held meetings with them, listened to their testimonies, discussed with them some of their problems, and were inspired by their faith and devotion.

Everywhere we went the people were living in the afterglow of the recent visit of President David O. and Sister McKay. To thousands it marked the pinnacle of their spiritual experiences. We wish publicly to thank him and his counselors for the priceless privilege of visiting the wonderful people of those islands and for the honor of attending the ceremony of the laying the cornerstone of the New Zealand Temple.

Two other names are immortal among the Polynesians. Their love for Elder and Sister Matthew Cowley borders on devotion. They mention their names in hushed tones and sing special hymns written in remembrance of their years of loving and devoted service.

In addition to these regular missionaries, there are another 500 local labor missionaries and 120 Zion labor supervisors working there under the inspired and able leadership of President Wendell B. Mendenhall.

There are now forty-one chapels under construction, five major college projects, four mission homes, and another thirty chapels will be under construction within the year. I think in all the history of the Church we have never had a more inspiring example of voluntary co-operative effort than we saw in the college and temple projects in New Zealand and Hawaii. Not only do the missionaries and supervisors work on these projects without pay—often singing as they work—but most of them are also housed and fed by the local members of the Church. A representative of the press, after visiting the New Zealand project, expressed amazement and said, "A more completely unselfish work has never come to my attention."

There are now over 59,000 members of the Church in the South Pacific, and as we traveled among them we were reminded of the early missionaries who were there when conditions were quite different. We thought of President Joseph F. Smith, President George Q. Cannon, of my own grandfather, James S. Brown, and others, who endured hardship and privation under those primitive conditions. In fact, some of them were in danger at times of becoming the chief ingredient for an old-fashioned stew. They were mercifully preserved from that. We hope that they who planted those early seeds are sharing with us the joy of a wonderful harvest. We bring you then, from the dignified, humble, faithful Polynesians and others in the South Pacific, who covered us with love and leis, their "Aloha—Kiaora Koutou Katoa," or in other words, "Greetings, and God bless you."

During our tour, many questions were asked concerning the Church and its activities. The one most frequently asked was, "Are the Mormons Christians, and if so, how does the Church differ from other Christian churches?" Now, if to be a Christian means to believe that Jesus of Nazareth was the Son of God, the Redeemer of the world, and to follow his teachings; if being a Christian means to live or try to live the Christian life as he directed, then we answer the first part of that question with a categorical, "Yes, we are Christians."

The answer to the second part of the question is a complex one and cannot be given in a short address. However, perhaps some of our nonmember friends who have honored us with their presence here or in the radio and television audiences would be interested in a brief reference to some of those differences.

The thirteen Articles of Faith, published by the Church in 1842, are roughly the equivalent of creeds in other religious organizations. Therein is set forth a concise and authoritative statement on the teachings of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Of course, to point out the differences between these teachings and others would require an analysis and discussion far beyond the time limits of this occasion and the ability of the speaker. We may, however, refer in passing to some of them. It is worthy of note and doubtless surprising to some that everything we teach or practise is based upon and is in strict harmony with the King James Version of the Holy Bible, which we accept as the word of God.

We believe in other scriptures in addition to the Holy Bible; scriptures that were produced as scriptures have always been produced, by, as Peter said, "holy men of God, [who] spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." (II Peter 1:21.) There is meticulous agreement between the Book of Mormon and the Holy Bible, agreement not only on basic doctrine, but each also has the same central theme, viz: predicting the event, recording the advent, and bearing witness to the import of the life and mission of Jesus the Christ. The fact that these sacred volumes were written on different hemispheres, at times when there was no intercommunication, is not only evidence of divine purpose but also indicates inspired authorship.

Sunday, April 7

Third Day

The Latter-day Saints, like the former-day Saints, believe in the gifts of the Spirit as enumerated by the Apostle Paul: tongues, prophecy, revelation, visions, healings, interpretation of tongues, etc. (See I Cor. 12:7-10.)

We believe that these gifts as enjoyed now are part of the blessings that have come through the restoration of the gospel. We realize that when we say they have been restored to the Church it implies they were taken away or were no longer enjoyed. History, both profane and sacred, confirms that fact. Many candid and devout Christian writers assert and deplore the loss of these gifts and agree with John Wesley that they were not enjoyed beyond the second or third century and were seldom known after "that fatal period when the emperor, Constantine, claimed to be a Christian."

Our observance of the Word of Wisdom, God's law of health, is distinctive and is a physical and spiritual blessing to the people. Reference has been made in this conference to the awful price the world is paying for the use of things which God has said are not good for man.

We practise the law of tithing as it was taught and practised anciently, and, being the Lord's financial law, we find it superior to any man-made economic system. Fast offerings, the welfare program as administered by the priesthood, the Relief Society, and other agencies are an extension of the Church's economic policy, always having in mind the physical as well as the spiritual well-being of the people.

Some complain that we are too materialistic, that our teachings lack spiritual emphasis; they say we should keep the spiritual life free from contamination with the material, which, according to them, is gross and evil. But we are reminded that man's body was made in the image of God, from the dust of the earth. That the Savior did not consider earthly substances as evil is evidenced by the fact that he was baptized in the earthly element of water and pointed to such baptism as the gateway to his kingdom to all who would follow him. Furthermore, he taught the deepest truths about the human spirit by reference to common material things, such as the birds of the air, the lilies of the field, sheep and shepherds, and farmers sowing seed. He chose humble fishermen for his disciples and not only taught them to become fishers of men but also gave them a lesson in fishing for fish. He and his apostles spent much of their time ministering to the poor, healing the sick, moving among the common people as they were engaged in the mundane affairs of life, mending the bodies as well as the souls of men.

We believe that religion should touch the lives of men redemptively here and now, at every point of human experience, that matter is not essentially evil but that its purpose is to serve spirit, while spirit controls and glorifies matter. There is a beneficent and eternal relationship between spirit and element. The Lord, speaking through the Prophet Joseph Smith, declared,

For man is spirit. The elements are eternal, and spirit and element, inseparably connected, receive a fulness of joy;

And when separated, man cannot receive a fulness of joy.

The elements are the tabernacle of God; Yea, man is the tabernacle of God, even temples; . . . (D & C 93:33-35.)

We believe the gospel of Jesus Christ must be preached to all the world, and to this end we have a great and unique missionary system. Young men and women are called, thousands of them each year, to spend two or three years of their life in missionary service, at their own expense. They are willing to interrupt their education, postpone their marriage, or give up their employment in order to perform this service. As we heard yesterday, there are now 13,000 of them at home and abroad, in various phases of missionary activity. These young people are instructed that they are not to attack or cast any aspersions on other churches but to respect every man's right to worship God as he may see fit.

The organization, government, and discipline of the Church have attracted wide and favorable attention. The Church bestows the priesthood upon all worthy male members over twelve years of age. With a total membership of fewer than a million and a half, we have 372,530 men and boys who hold some office in the priesthood. This means a sharing of authority and responsibility and results in widespread interest and activity. Last night, for instance, a general priesthood meeting of the Church was held in this tabernacle and the proceedings carried by closed circuit radio to groups in ninety-six chapels in surrounding cities and states, where a total of 37,180 men holding the priesthood received instructions from the leaders of the Church.

So we might go on, far beyond the limits of time here, in simply listing the distinctive teachings of the Church. But there is one basic and fundamental difference to which we call attention for a moment, namely, the doctrine of Deity. On this transcendently important subject we take sharp but friendly issue with the creeds of men, and we are willing to rest our case upon biblical precedents and divine revelation. We worship the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, the Jehovah of the Old Testament. We believe that Jesus of Nazareth is the Son of God and the Messiah who was expected through the centuries but rejected when he came.

We believe that the Godhead consists of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, generally known as the Holy Trinity, but we believe that they are separate and distinct Personages, that the Father and the Son are personal and material and increasingly comprehensible as men progress and gain understanding; that the Father and Son have bodies composed of parts and possessed of feelings; that the Holy Ghost is a Personage of Spirit.

If Jesus of Nazareth was and is God, as John the Beloved and others declared him to be (See John 1:1-3), then God must be personal and material. It was not an incomprehensible, immaterial essence that came forth from the tomb, but the glorified, resurrected body of Jesus the Christ; it was a body of flesh and bone, as he himself declared, and as Thomas was called upon to verify by touch as well as sight. It was this body which ascended into heaven in the presence of the amazed disciples. It was this body which the attending angels declared should come again when they said,

Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? this same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven. (Acts 1:11.)

When Jesus came and revealed God to men, he held up to them a personal, living ideal and exhorted them to become perfect, even as his Father is perfect. The value of having an ideal is that it inspires emulation. We seek to become like that which we adore. Surely no one aspires to become diffused, immaterial essence, devoid of body, parts, or feeling and without center or circumference. Faith that a living, personal God is the Father of the human spirit encourages men to push back their horizons, to look up instead of down for their source. It enlarges their vista and life takes on new interest and new meaning. It encourages men to live more abundantly, and he said this was one purpose of his coming.

Because the Father called us sons and the Savior called us brothers, we posit for man an exalted Godlike status with almost limitless possibilities. This God-image quality in man, which is the root of his dignity, gives deeper meaning and a higher purpose to life, establishes faith and fortitude, and supplies the necessary valor to realize the vision without which people perish. It renews man's determination to pursue the eternal quest for answers to the whence and why and whither of life.

Again, if God is not comprehensible, then man's salvation is impossible, for Jesus said,

And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent. (John 17:3.)

If, therefore, we cannot know him, then we cannot have life eternal, and if this be so, then the whole plan of salvation fails, the doctrine of the atonement is false and meaningless, and men are left in Dante's deepest hell, "desiring without hope." We agree with Milton that "the end of all learning

Sunday, April 7

is to know God and out of that knowledge to love and emulate Him."

Unfortunately, in the minds of many religious people the term God is ambiguous. But there was nothing ambiguous about the Hebrew prophets' concept of Jehovah. To them he was a living God with whom Moses and others talked. Certainly there was nothing mysterious or hard to understand in Christ's revelation of his Father. He said, "he who hath seen me hath seen the Father." We believe in a living God, a conscious, sentient, intelligent Being with whom we associate the highest attributes of personality in their fullest development.

If this claim of a restoration be true, then we should expect the pristine Church to be a prototype of the restored Church, for not only he but also his teachings are the same, yesterday, today, and forever. It follows then that to outline and delineate the difference between the restored Church and other churches, one needs only to become familiar with the Church as it was organized by Christ and his apostles in the Meridian of Time and then compare the churches of modern times with that pristine Church. Whatever differences appear they are the differences between the churches of men and the restored Church of Jesus Christ.

Also, our faith in the materiality and separate individualities of the Father and the Son sustains faith in the doctrine of the second coming of Christ, when he shall reign during the millennium and we shall have a thousand years of peace. The prophets of old predicted his second coming in no uncertain or mystical terms. We refer to Job, Psalms, Isaiah, Joel, Zachariah, Malachi, and others. He himself promised that he would come in the glory of the Father with his angels. We read in Matthew,

When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory:

And before him shall be gathered all nations; and he shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats. (Matt. 25:31-32.)

Paul, in writing to the Thessalonians, said,

For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first: (I Thess. 4:16.)

We bear witness to the restoration of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. We bear witness that the Church has been organized and that it like its prototype, the primitive Church, is built upon the foundation of apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief cornerstone. Through this restoration men have been given the right to speak and act in the name of God as anciently, and through the endowment and employment of these gifts among men, the truth has been restored, and we humbly proclaim it.

Time will not permit even the mention of other, and there are many other, differences, but we repeat, we are Christians; we believe in the Holy Trinity, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, in the holy scriptures, ancient and modern; we believe in the doctrine of the second coming of the Christ, and we believe that when he comes he will be as the Bible has promised, a glorified, resurrected Being, whose feet shall stand upon the Mount of Olives. We look forward to that coming and pray that God will help us and all men to prepare for it, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Elder Hugh B. Brown, Assistant to the Twelve, has just completed his address. Elder Sterling W. Sill, Assistant to the Twelve, will please come forward.

We received a telegram that a plane load of Servicemen and Air Force officials flying in from Ellington Air Force Base at Houston, Texas developed engine trouble near Denver, and had to return. The fact that they have sent this telegram shows that they returned in safety. They express their disappointment and send love. We are thankful that they returned in safety. The Lord bless them.

Elder Sill will be followed by Elder Mark E. Petersen of the Council of the Twelve.

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve Apostles

EACH year on the second Sunday in May we set aside a very special day which we call Mother's Day. This is a day for honoring our mothers, and is traditionally a day of family unity and happiness. On this day we put on our best clothes and perform our most thoughtful acts to honor and please our mothers.

Two days ago was a kind of special Mother's Day to me, inasmuch as it was my mother's birthday, and though she has long since departed this life, I am very grateful for the privilege which is mine to remember and honor her.

Closely associated with Mother's Day, we set aside another special day on the third Sunday in June which we call Father's Day. The importance of both of these great days was given divine emphasis and approval some 3,400 years ago when God descended in fire upon Mt. Sinai, and to the accompaniment of lightnings and thunders, said—

Honour thy father and thy mother. . . .
(Ex. 20:12.)

As I understand it, the observance of this commandment brings more benefit to the children than to the parents, for when we honor an ideal, our lives are uplifted by it. It has been said that "the sins of the fathers are visited upon the children," but that may also apply to their virtues; for, as the poet said—

When the high heart we magnify
And the sure vision celebrate
And worship greatness passing by,
Ourselves are great.

In President McKay's great book Gospel Ideals, he said, "The other night I dreamed about my mother." And then he said, "I would like to dream about my mother more often." That is, in his dream, his mind went back and relived those important experiences when he learned from his mother the lessons of life that helped to prepare him for his present high place in the world. Each time we relive some sacred experience, that experience is renewed in vitality, and we are able to reabsorb the original good.

It was while trying to relive my own mother's devotion on her birthday, that I selected the title for what I would like to say to you this morning. The title that I think would please her most is "Father's Day." And I don't mean the Father's Day that comes on the third Sunday in June. I mean the Father's Day that comes on the first day of each week, when we try to honor and please our Heavenly Father.

The Apostle Paul has reminded us that . . . we have had fathers of our flesh which corrected us, and we gave them reverence: shall we not much rather be in subjection unto the Father of spirits and live? (Heb. 12:9.)

The relative importance of this great day that we call the Sabbath might be indicated to us by the frequency of its reoccurrence. That is, we have one day to honor Washington, one day to honor Lincoln, one day for Thanksgiving, one day for our nation's birthday. And then our Father in heaven, in his wisdom, has set aside one-seventh of all of the days to honor God. This day is also set aside primarily for our benefit. When one honors a wonderful mother, he tends to make her standards his own, and when one honors God he tends to become like God, and thereby helps to bring about his own eternal exaltation.

These fifty-two Father's Days have also come down to us from that awe-inspiring day on Sinai thirty-four centuries ago when out of the fire God said—

Remember the sabbath day, to keep it holy. (Ex. 20:8.)

In fact, it has been thought that our civilization could never have survived for half a century if it had not been for this one day in seven that we call Sunday. This is the day when we try to reach a pinnacle in our lives by living at our best. This is the day when we pay particular attention to the washing of our bodies. This is the day when we put on our best clothes and think our best thoughts and read our best books. This is the day when we associate with the people we love the most. This is the day for which we usually reserve the best meal of the week. This is the day when we lay aside the cares that usually concern us during the other six days while we go to the house of prayer and let our minds reach upward to try to understand the things of God and eternity. This is the special day when we worship God, and honor Him in our lives. The proper observance of the Sabbath is the process by which we put our lives in harmony with Deity.

Sunday, April 7

Third Day

Because President McKay has loved his mother and tried to please her, she has been enabled to help guide and enrich his life. And because President McKay has honored and loved his Heavenly Father, God has been able to magnify him and make him great.

One thing that greatly disturbs me as I go around a little bit is the consciousness of the great number of people who are losing their opportunities and their blessings by the misuse of the Sabbath day. All of our lives we have heard of the great wonders that can be accomplished by even fifteen minutes a day devoted to well-directed study and concentrated thought. We know of many who have raised themselves to great heights of achievement by this simple means. But think how wonderfully we can upgrade our spirituality by making effective use of "The Lord's Day," which he has set aside especially to enrich our lives.

Alexander Hamilton once gave the secret of his extraordinary success and we can apply his formula to the observance of the Sabbath day. Mr. Hamilton said: "Men give me some credit for genius. But all the genius I have lies in this. When I have a subject in mind I study it profoundly. Day and night it is before me. I explore it in all its bearings. My mind becomes pervaded with it. The result is what some men call the fruits of genius, whereas it is in reality the fruits of study and labor."

It is a thrilling idea to think of the possibility of becoming a "genius" in the things of the spirit, a "genius" in the work of the Lord. This can actually be brought about by devoting our minds and our hearts to the important considerations for which this one day in seven was set aside.

It is still true that, "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he." Everything starts from that one beginning.

Mind is the master power
That molds and makes,
And man is mind.
And evermore he takes the tools of thought
And fashions what he wills,
Bringing forth a thousand joys, a thousand ills.

He thinks in secret, and it comes to pass
Environment is but his looking glass.

James Lane Allen
Morning and Evening Thoughts

Someone has made this challenging proposition: "How would you like to create your own mind?" But isn't that exactly what each of us does? William James said, "The mind is made up by what it feeds upon."

This idea was strikingly illustrated to me sometime ago in conversation with a friend who said, "But I am just not religious," and he shrugged his shoulders as if to say, "There is nothing that I can do about it." With the hope of helping him, I said, "Bill, I am sure that what you say is true, that you are not religious. But have you ever thought about the circumstances that brought that situation about? How could you ever hope to be religious? You don't study religion; you don't read the scriptures; you don't go to church; you don't pray to God; you don't think about him; you don't meditate about religious things. How could you ever hope to be religious?"

Someone once said to a small boy, "Who gave you that black eye?" The boy said, "No one gave me that black eye. I had to fight for it." That is what we must do for every worthwhile thing in our lives. We must fight for them. Certainly we must earn the right to be religious.

I told my friend about a little toy clown that I saw at Christmas time. It was a little plastic figure that had a lead weight in the crown of his head which could always be depended upon to bring him to an upside-down position. If you laid him on his back, he would immediately flip up on his head. If you stood him on his feet, he would quickly reverse his position and light on his head.

But isn't that exactly our own method of response? We can absolutely depend upon this fact, that wherever we place the weights of our interest, that will be the place at which we will more or less automatically respond; for example, my friend was very much interested in athletics; he spent his Sundays and other free time reading about and participating in various kinds of sports. He told me that he could quote the batting averages of every important major league baseball player in the United States, and at the same time, he confessed that he could not quote one single verse from the word of God.

My friend thoroughly understood the importance of taking a vitamin pill every day, but he had no conception of the desirability or the methods for developing spiritual health and vitality. Someone once said, "I never put religion out of mind. I was so open-minded it fell out."

Our spiritual health must always be primarily our own responsibility. A physician judges the health by the appetite, and our spirituality may be judged the same way. It is easy to ruin our appetite for the things of God when we build bars in our homes instead of altars. By the desecration of the Sabbath Day we may become more interested in a horse race than in the celestial kingdom.

William James said, "That which holds our attention determines our action." That rule applies to a prize fight or the celestial kingdom. We ourselves choose the interests that will shape our destiny. But no life can in its final analysis ever really be successful that is primarily concerned with its own shallow pleasures and narrow interests, but can find no time for the author of our lives and our blessings. Someone said—

No time for God,
What fools we are
To clutter up our lives
With worthless things
And leave without the Lord of life
And life itself.

No time for God?
Better to say
No time to eat, to sleep, to live, to die.
Take time for God
Or a poor misshapen thing you'll be
To step into eternity
And say to Him
I had no time for Thee.

Only when we make God and his word central in our lives, can we develop that wonderful religious talent that will lead us back into his presence.

In 1935, Clarence Day, Jr., wrote a play entitled, Life with Father, and I would like to borrow that title this morning to apply to your eternal life. In Section 76 of the Doctrine and Covenants, the Lord names those who will qualify for the celestial kingdom. He says—

These shall dwell in the presence of God and his Christ forever and ever." (D & C 76:62.)

Wherefore, as it is written they are gods, even the sons of God. (D & C 76:58.)

These are they whose bodies are celestial, whose glory is that of the sun, even the glory of God, the highest of all, whose glory the sun in the firmament is written of as being typical. (D & C 76:70.)

Then by way of contrast, I would like to offer for your consideration the prospect of "life without father." Suppose that we should become a part of that innumerable company who will spend eternity in the telestial kingdom, of whom it is said, "Where God and Christ are, they cannot come, worlds without end." (Ibid., 76:112.)

I would just like to point out in passing that that is a very long time to be excluded from association with those we would like most to be with.

One of the most devastating of all human emotions is the sense of being alone, of not being wanted, of being unworthy. Suppose that sometime we find that because we have weighted our interests in the wrong places, that we have become unfit for the presence of God and have therefore lost our greatest blessing. A peculiar thing happens when we stand on our heads so to speak, for then it seems to us that all the world is upside-down, and we are then unable properly to appraise values.

Sunday, April 7

The most valuable thing in life is life itself. The greatest gift of God is eternal life, that is, "Life with Father." Therefore, these fifty-two wonderful days have been set aside especially to help us prepare for that magnificent experience which lies just beyond our mortality. One of our most inspiring hymns says—

We feel it a pleasure to serve Thee,
And love to obey Thy command.

William Fowler

And one of the most important of those commands has to do with our observance of that great day on which we try to please God, the day I like to think of as "Father's Day," the divine command concerning which not only came down to us across the ages from the fires of Sinai, but it has been given anew by the direct command of God in our own day. For God has said again to us in substance, in our own interests,

Remember the sabbath day, to keep it holy. (Ex. 20:8.)

May God help us so to do, I pray in Jesus' name. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Elder Sterling W. Sill, Assistant to the Twelve, has just spoken to us. Elder Mark E. Petersen of the Council of the Twelve, will be our concluding speaker.

ELDER MARK E. PETERSEN

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

SINCE WE LAST met in general conference, we have passed the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of President Heber J. Grant. I call this to your attention because I have great appreciation for that wonderful man, for the remarkable influence he had upon my life, particularly in my younger years.

It was President Grant who gave to me my first real introduction to the Book of Mormon. When I was about ten years of age, he came to the ward in which I lived and spoke in one of our Sacrament meetings. As he has done on other occasions, that day he told of his own first reading of the Book of Mormon and of the great impression made upon him by the life of Nephi. In his address he made Nephi such a reality to me that I had a desire to read about him for myself.

I took my father's Book of Mormon, and I read the story of Nephi, having in mind what President Grant had said. As I read, not only did I learn to appreciate that great prophet of old, but I had come into my soul also a deep love for the Book of Mormon, even as a boy.

You will remember another address that President Grant gave, sometimes repeating, pertaining to the Book of Mormon. I would like to read to you an excerpt from that address. Said President Grant: "When I was a young unmarried man, another young man who had received a doctor's degree ridiculed me for believing in the Book of Mormon. He said he could point out two lies in that book. One was that the people had built their homes out of cement, and they were very skillful in the use of cement. He said there had never been found and never would be found, a house built of cement by the ancient inhabitants of this country, because the people in that early age knew nothing about cement. He said that should be enough to make one disbelieve the book. I said: 'That does not affect my faith one particle. I read the Book of Mormon prayerfully and supplicated God for a testimony in my heart and soul of the divinity of it, and I have accepted it and believe it with all my heart.' I also said to him, 'If my children do not find cement houses, I expect that my grandchildren will.' Now, since that time, houses made of cement and massive structures of the same material have been uncovered.

"Not very far from the City of Mexico there is a monument two hundred and ten feet high, built of cement. . . . My first counselor [Anthony W. Ivins] has stood on that monument. You could put forty tabernacles like this one inside of it. It covers more than ten acres of ground and is two and a half times higher than this building. From the top of that monument one can see small mounds, and as these mounds are being uncovered, they are found to be wonderfully built cement houses, with drain pipes of cement, showing skill and ability, superior almost to anything we have today so far as the use of cement is concerned.

"Another statement that this doctor made," continued President Grant, "was this: that the voice of man can only carry a few hundred feet, and yet the Book of Mormon teaches that . . . Jesus Christ . . . spoke to the people and his voice was heard all over the land. 'That is a lie,' said he, 'and you know it.' I said, 'That is no lie at all. Jesus Christ, under God, was the Creator of this earth, and if he had the power and ability to create the earth I believe that he could arrange for his voice to carry all over the world at one and the same time.'

"The radio is doing what?" asks President Grant. "I read the other day that a song had been heard nine thousand miles away, not only every word of it, but every note. . . . We had four letters from New Zealand or Australia, I have forgotten which, to the effect that people there had heard perfectly the programs that had been broadcast over the radio. . . . In that program the announcement was made that if anybody in a foreign land who heard the program would so indicate there would be sent to him a pound box of candy, and four people wrote for the boxes of candy. It takes the sun eighteen and one half hours to travel that far (with reference to the rotation of the earth), yet the voice carried that distance as quickly as you can snap your finger.

"I said to this man," continued President Grant, 'the voice of the Savior could go all over the world if he so arranged it.' The radio has proved what I said.

"Faith is a gift of God, and I thank God for the faith in and the knowledge of the divinity of the Book of Mormon which I had in my youthful days, and that these two alleged scientific facts, which are now known to be fallacies, did not destroy my faith." (Conference Report, April, 1929:128-130.)

This was very interesting to me because I had an experience similar to it. When I was a young missionary, I came to a professional man and his wife and told them the story of the coming forth of the Book of Mormon, and of its having been translated by Joseph Smith through the power of God from a set of gold plates. This professional man laughed at me and ridiculed the idea that gold plates were ever used as records of the past. "Why," he said, "I have specialized in ancient history, and I know from all my reading there is not one single instance in all of the textbooks where it says that ancient records were inscribed upon gold plates." He said, "If you know anything at all about ancient history, you know that clay tablets were used, and that papyrus was used, but never is there a mention of gold plates."

I was a student at school when I was called on my mission, and I had read some little bit in ancient history. I remembered that there was not any mention in my textbooks, either, about gold plates, although much had been said about the clay tablets. So I had no scholastic answer for this man. But as I stood before him, I remembered President Grant and his testimony that I heard as a ten-year-old boy, and then as I later heard, this declaration that he made which I have read to you.

In my simplicity I bore testimony to this learned man that although I knew little about the history of the past, and I had no scholastic material to present to him about the gold plates, God had given me a testimony that indeed Joseph Smith did have gold plates, and that from them the Book of Mormon was translated, and that I knew it was true.

I used to think a lot about that conversation and wondered about the historians, and why they had said nothing about gold plates. It did not disturb me, however.

But how different are things today! History is no longer silent about the gold plates. Historians not only are vocal, but they are also eloquent in announcing to the world that many sets of plates of precious metal have been found containing many records of the past engraved on their pages by skilful men who knew how to write on plates of metal. Archaeologists have found gold plates and silver plates, copper plates and brass plates and bronze plates. They have found big plates and little plates, thick plates and thin plates. Some of them were found separately and singly, and others had been brought together in book form—many with pages of gold and silver as thin as modern paper, many of them skillfully and beautifully engraved with the record of the civilizations of the past.

Quite as interesting to me as the discovery that there have been many other plates was the manner in which these plates were found. Under the stones of the palace of the Chaldean monarch, Sargon, was found a set of plates, some of gold and some of silver, and do you know how they were deposited? They were placed in a box made of stone carefully put together and buried in the ground. In Iran have been found some plates of King Darius, dating back to 518 B.C. They were gold and silver also, and beautifully engraved. And how had they been preserved? By having been placed in a carefully made box of stone and buried in the ground.

As I read these things, my mind went quickly back to the description of Joseph Smith, pertaining to the manner in which the Book of Mormon plates had been preserved, for Joseph Smith wrote:

Convenient to the village of Manchester, Ontario county, New York, stands a hill of considerable size, and the most elevated of any in the neighborhood. On the west side of this hill, not far from the top, under a stone of considerable size, lay the plates, deposited in a stone box. This stone was thick and rounding in the middle on the upper side, and thinner towards the edges, so that the middle part of it was visible above the ground, but the edge all around was covered with earth.

Having removed the earth, I obtained a lever, which I got fixed under the edge of the stone, and with a little exertion raised it up. I looked in, and there indeed did I behold the plates, the Urim and Thummim, and the breastplate, as stated by the messenger. The box in which they lay was formed by laying stones together in some kind of cement. In the bottom of the box were laid two stones crossways of the box, and on these stones lay the plates and the other things with them. (J. S. 2:51-52.)

When I read the reports of these other plates and remembered the story of Joseph Smith, I said to myself: "Thank the Lord. Surely God moves in a mysterious way, his wonders to perform!"

Plates have been found in many places, in both the Old World and the New. They have been found in Palestine, in Egypt, in Babylonia, ancient Assyria, Rome, ancient Carthage, Portugal, Italy, ancient Phoenicia, India, Pakistan, Arabia, several places in South America and Central America, Mexico, and in the United States. A set was found in the state of Ohio. Many copper plates have been found, including one set of eight in Dunklin County, Missouri. Another set was found near Mound City, Missouri, and still another in the state of Georgia. Five copper and two brass plates were found among the Tuckaubatchee Indians, who have a tradition that these plates were given to them by God.

When I thought about the plates being discovered in Ohio, Georgia, and Missouri, I asked a friend of mine: "Which is more difficult to believe: that plates were found in Georgia and Missouri and Ohio, or that they were found in the state of New York?"

Then he said, "Yes, but you involve an angel with your plates."

I said, "Do you believe the Bible?" And he said, "Yes." I asked him, "Which is more difficult: to believe that an angel came down from heaven and showed Joseph Smith the resting place of a set of plates made by ancient man; or to believe that God would come down from heaven himself and with his hand engrave the Ten Commandments upon two tablets of stone and give them to Moses?"

Then I remembered that we do not receive a testimony from scientific research, nor from argument. I remembered that the only way we get a testimony of the truthfulness of the Book of Mormon is in the way President Grant received it, in a way that I received it, and as a million other Latter-day Saints have received it—the way explained by Mormon when he said:

And when ye shall receive these things, I would exhort you that ye would ask God, the Eternal Father, in the name of Christ, if these things are not true; and if ye shall ask with a sincere heart, with real intent, having faith in Christ, he will manifest the truth of it unto you, by the power of the Holy Ghost. (Moroni 10:4)

With all the fervor of my soul I thank the Almighty that he has given to me a testimony of that book. And what is the testimony? That the Book of Mormon is true, that it is the word of God, a new volume of scripture for this modern world. And I testify to you and all others who listen that if they will but read the Book of Mormon prayerfully with a sincere heart and ask God for a testimony of it, they will receive it, as so many of the others of us have, and this is my testimony, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

He to whom you have just listened is Elder Mark E. Petersen of the Council of the Twelve. You undoubtedly noticed that we rather restricted Elder George Q. Morris in his inspirational sermon. The fact is, that we have done the best we can throughout this service to comply with the requests of some of our television listeners. In one area the television broadcast had to close at 11 o'clock, and the director of that station did not wish to carry the responsibility of interrupting a sermon. It would be all right if we would sing at 11 o'clock, and at 11 o'clock you were singing. We thank Brother Morris for closing.

That explains too, why we did not make reference this morning to the great Priesthood Meeting held last evening in 97 groups, including the Tabernacle here. There were in those 97 groups 37,180 men holding the Priesthood. That is the largest gathering of Priesthood ever held in the Church.

That is why also we did not tell you leaders in the political and educational world that we are very happy indeed to bid you welcome. We have the following present, so far as the Brethren have been able to see, worshipping with us this morning: Senator Arthur V. Watkins; Governor George Dewey Clyde; Secretary of State Lamont Toronto; Mayor Adiel F. Stewart; Ernest L. Wilkinson, president of the Brigham Young University; President A. Ray Olpin of the University of Utah; President Daryl Chase, State University of Agriculture; John L. Clarke, president of Ricks College; Elliott Cameron, director of Snow College; Dr. William P. Miller, president of Weber College; E. Allen Bateman, state superintendent of public instruction; Dr. M. Lynn Benning, superintendent of Salt Lake City Schools, and undoubtedly others. We are glad you have been with us during this spiritual feast.

We have been inspired by the singing of the Tabernacle Choir, led by J. Spencer Cornwall, with Brother Alexander Schreiner at the organ. The closing song by the Choir will be "Lead, Kindly Light." The soloist will be Elder Hulbert Keddington. The closing prayer will be offered by Elder Clarence Neeley, president of the Benson stake.

Following this, this Conference will be adjourned until 2 o'clock this afternoon.

---

The Choir sang the hymn, "Lead Kindly Light."

The benediction was pronounced by Elder Clarence Neeley, president of the Benson Stake.

Conference adjourned until 2 o'clock p.m.

THIRD DAY

AFTERNOON MEETING

The concluding session of the Conference was held at 2:00 p.m., Sunday, April 7.

The singing for this session was by the Tabernacle Choir, J. Spencer Cornwall conducting, Frank W. Asper at the organ.

The meeting commenced promptly at 2 o'clock, by President David O. McKay, who presided and conducted the

Sunday, April 7

Third Day

services, making the following introductory remarks:

President David O. McKay:

The music for this session, the concluding session of our Conference, will be furnished by the Tabernacle Choir, J. Spencer Cornwall conducting, Frank W. Asper at the organ.

We shall begin this service by the Choir singing, "The Lord's Prayer," as arranged by Leroy J. Robertson. The opening prayer will be offered by Dr. Wilford J. Reichmann, president of the St. George Stake.

The Choir sang "The Lord's Prayer," (arranged by LeRoy J. Robertson).

Elder Wilford J. Reichmann, president of the St. George Stake, offered the invocation.

President David O. McKay:

Dr. Wilford J. Reichmann, president of the St. George Stake, offered the invocation. The Tabernacle Choir will now sing "There Is A Green Hill Far Away." Oscar A. Kirkham will be our first speaker following the singing.

Singing by the Choir, "There Is A Green Hill Far Away."

President David O. McKay:

Elder Oscar A. Kirkham of the First Council of Seventy will now speak to us. He will be followed by Elder Adam S. Bennion.

ELDER OSCAR A. KIRKHAM

Of the First Council of the Seventy

PRESIDENT McKAY, I am very grateful for this hour and for this opportunity. Your words have sustained me as have also those of your Counselors which have been spoken. The wisdom and the inspiration of this Church and its teachings have been a great boon in my life.

There are two things that deeply impress me in the Latter-day Saint teachings as I labor with youth. First, you must live worthy that you may go on a mission for the Church—the second I will give later.

In the Doctrine and Covenants, section 68, we read:

Go ye into all the world, preach the gospel to every creature, acting in the authority which I have given you, baptizing in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. (D & C 68:8.)

Then the Lord will be with you and bless you.

Thousands have heard and obeyed this word of the Lord. Now why not you, young men, take this opportunity? There will be something seriously wanting in your life unless you have this experience. Here is one of the finest things you can do for peace, happiness, and personal progress. Plan now, now!

As the thought crosses your mind, let it meet high resolve in your own life. There are thousands who are waiting to hear the word of the Lord. Yes, many are waiting to hear your voice.

My religion is your religion; let us live this great life fully together.

The second thing I suggest to you, my young friends—you must be worthy to be married in a temple of the Lord for time and for eternity.

It may take time for you and your young bride-to-be to understand all that it signifies, it may take a little courage, for it all seems so strange, but it is beautiful and understandable. It will be an answer to your prayer and to mine.

Remember, you said that night as you proposed, "It must be in a temple of God."

It was in an early testimony meeting, after you made that declaration, that I saw you both stand together, and you, young man, courageously spoke for both of you. I was sitting in the audience. My, how you thrilled me. I said, "Now you are on the way. This will be a great life. Joy will fill your hearts. This is the Mormon way of life."

To go on a mission, to be married in the temple of God for time and for eternity!

One father, a nonmember of the Church, said, when his son was ready for departure for his mission: "Son, I am very proud of you. Your life and your conduct have been an inspiration to your mother and me. Son, I want to be your first convert to the Church. Take hold of me. Don't let me turn back. I want to be your first convert."

For these lovely experiences for our youth, I humbly pray. There is much that can be said for the Latter-day Saint Church program. It has been blessed and inspired of the Lord. As you have listened this day, the day before, and the day before that, your meditations have been enriching. The Lord has been talking to you.

I have selected merely these two great teachings, which I feel are especially vital to the lives and happiness of our youth.

In a few days thousands of youth from all parts of the United States will meet at Valley Forge, and then a few days later, thousands more will meet in London, England. They will come from all over the world. They are of many colors and races; I have camped with them; I know these men and boys; and if I may be bold to say, they have faith in God!

May the Lord bless us as we make more and more friends, as we mingle with people that we may give freely that which God has given us so abundantly, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

We have just listened to Elder Oscar A. Kirkham, member of the First Council of Seventy. Elder Adam S. Bennion of the Council of the Twelve will now address us. He will be followed by Elder S. Dilworth Young.

ELDER ADAM S. BENNION

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

FOUR YEARS HAVE come and gone since I was called to this position, and they have been tremendous years: Here with these devoted brethren, out in the stakes and wards with our wonderful people, in representative military camps from Canada to Germany, and in the mission fields with the inspiring devotion of our young men and women and the heart-warming response of the Saints.

Together with these assignments have come opportunities to attend stimulating Religious Emphasis Weeks at representative universities of America. It is an intriguing experience to be invited to be a member of a team made up of a Catholic priest, an Episcopalian minister, a Presbyterian, a Methodist, a Baptist, a Seventh Day Adventist, a Christian Scientist, a Jewish rabbi, and a Mormon elder.

To meet with faculties of those institutions and with students and then to spend the evening in joint sessions of fraternity members and sorority girls, attempting to answer the questions which they ask—and I think I have never been asked so many questions in my life before, and I have never been so grateful for the restored gospel of Jesus Christ and so proud of the program which it carries forward.

One of the most meaningful questions ever put to me was this one in one of the universities: "Mr. Bennion, what has your Church given to America that America didn't already have?" I have been thinking about that question ever since, and one day I hope to have a complete answer.

When it was first put to me, I offered five simple answers. Today I should like to do something I have not done in a conference here before. You good people who sit out there by your radios, I hope you have a pencil handy, because I am going to violate all the rules of psychology. The psychologists say we ought to limit ourselves to three ideas, or to five, at most. I am going to take you to a score of them today, and I am sure you cannot remember them all, but if you will jot them down, my thought is that it is a wonderful thing to get the whole scope of the gospel, to run it through in its entirety as best we can in these few minutes.

Sunday, April 7

Well, I started out with my answer to "What has your Church given to America that America didn't already have?" and I said, first of all A Welfare Plan. A plan to insure against want, an assurance that no man, woman, or child shall ever be left in distress, a plan which is not a dole, a plan which does not involve beggary, a plan involving honest work and mutual helpfulness, a plan inspired of God for the blessing of his children.

Wherever this welfare plan has been explained, men have said, "Certainly that is a contribution to America."

The second thing I named was A Great Pioneer Story. I love to live over again the heroic experiences of our forebears when, driven out of their homes in Nauvoo in the dead of winter, they trudged across three hundred miles of snow and mud and muck to Winter Quarters, then to launch another trek of a thousand miles through an uninhabited wilderness to a haven characterized significantly by their prophet leader, Brigham Young, when he said:

We will go so far that our enemies will not choose to follow us and we will pick so unpromising a place that nobody will covet it. (Brigham Young to President James K. Polk, August 9, 1846.)

We love now to sing the song:

We'll find the place which God for us prepared,
Far away in the West;
Where none shall come to hurt or make afraid;
There the Saints will be blessed.

"Come, Come, Ye Saints."

In that story is a tale to match Plymouth, a tale reminiscent of Israel on her way to the Promised Land. There are courage and devotion and sacrifice and faith triumphant over hardship, and I submit to you, as I have submitted to the universities of this country—there is a contribution.

In the third place, and the men of these universities are impressed with it, we have given to the world and to America A Religious Literature. Try naming a modern church which has given to America anything to match the Book of Mormon, the Doctrine and Covenants, and the Pearl of Great Price.

I love to read to inquirers after truth those masterful and moving and inspired messages such as are found in the Doctrine and Covenants. May I commend to you when you go home from this conference, that you try in your family circle, reading aloud once more, sections 76 and 84 and 88 and 93 and 121 and 130.

The fourth thing we have given to America is A Wonderful Concept of Deity. If you will read representative descriptions of Deity popular a hundred and thirty-five years ago, with all their intangible vagaries, you will be grateful, as I am, for the Prophet Joseph Smith's forthright and simple declaration in his account of his glorious vision:

When the light rested upon me I saw two Personages, whose brightness and glory defy all description, standing above me in the air. One of them spake unto me, calling me by name and said, pointing to the other—This is My Beloved Son. Hear Him! (J. S. 2:17.)

It will stir you to read again his final testimony as recorded in section 76.

The fifth thing that we have given to America is The Priesthood. It was similarly wonderful for the Prophet Joseph not only to announce the personalities of God the Father and the Son, but also to announce the return of John the Baptist to confer the Aaronic Priesthood, and the return of Peter, James, and John, bringing the Melchizedek Priesthood.

We declare to the world that the priesthood, long lost, has been restored in this the last great dispensation, the authority to act in the name of God given us through the laying on of hands by messengers out of heaven. And that is a contribution.

Other inquiries have prompted me to extend my analysis. Over and over again I have been asked throughout America and Europe to name the features that are distinctive of Mormonism. I can only name them here but taken together they set out a pattern which deserves the thoughtful consideration of men everywhere. I leave them with you in the hope that they might heighten your appreciation of a wonderful program. I have given you five, and with a termerity that perhaps exceeds my good judgment, I want to add the list up to twenty-odd. And you will appreciate the fact that all I can do is to name them. You take them and fill them in. They make a wonderful study.

Item 6. The Principle of Free Agency. The glorious privilege of choosing what we shall believe, what we shall do, and what we shall become.

Item 7. The Idea of Eternal Progression. An everlasting becoming! As Professor Rugh once said: "Life can become the achievement of a perpetual triumph." I think the poet Browning had some such idea in mind when he penned the lines: "A man's aim should exceed his grasp—or what's a heaven for."

Item 8. Tithing. The key to the financing of the program of the Church, a returning to God of one-tenth in appreciation for the nine-tenths he so generously gives to us his children.

Item 9. Temples and Temple Ordinances. Try to name the modern church that builds temples for sacred ordinances, that teaches genealogical research, that does vicarious work for the honored dead of other generations.

Item 10. Ward Teaching. This was stressed so beautifully and effectively last night in our General Priesthood meeting by our beloved President. It is heartening to know that every family in the Church may receive an official call each month by a representative of a bishop to inquire in a friendly spirit into the health and well-being of the members of the family and to leave a stimulating gospel message for meditation during the month.

Item 11. Lay Leadership. Leadership inheres in the membership of the Church. Leaders are chosen from the ranks. The door is open for any worthy young man or young woman to enter upon the path that leads to presidency in the various organizations of the Church.

Item 12. A Wonderful Organization. The genius of that organization is reflected in the fact that in a typical ward—and it is interesting to call the roll as we did in this one ward, a ward of 600 members—236 men and women are actually engaged in leadership responsibility, and the channels of activity are perfectly clear.

Item 13. A Work-a-Day Program. Mormonism is not merely a system of belief—it is a gospel of activity. It is not confined to church worship on the Sabbath Day—it reaches into the daily lives of its members every day in the week. As someone said happily in Europe: "The Church doesn't work its members to death—it works them to life."

Item 14. A Philosophy of Grace and Works. So often in discussions men get lost as between faith and grace and works. It is clear that our redemption is made possible by the grace of our Lord and Savior, but it is inconceivable that the greatest gift of God to man can be realized without effort. Such an idea runs counter to the scripture and to every experience we have in life. It squares with reason that when we have done all that we can in and of ourselves, then God sublimates our efforts through his mercy.

Item 15. The Word of Wisdom. In the interest of health and spiritual power, it is good to know that we have section 89 of the Doctrine and Covenants for our guidance.

Item 16. The Great Missionary System. One of the finest evidences of the vitality and selflessness of Mormonism is the fact that regularly some 5,000 of her choice youth, at their own expense, go out into almost all the corners of the globe and for two years devote themselves to proclaiming the truths of the restored gospel for the blessing of their fellow men.

Item 17. A Great Program for Youth. A good friend of mine out of New York recently said he wished he could have his own children to live in Utah, to come under the benedictions of our program for young folk. I feel sure there is no element of boasting in proclaiming that in the matter of a well-rounded program for the development of the talent of youth through recreation, scouting, dramatics, public speaking, athletics, social leadership, and religious study and contemplation, the Church offers some of the finest training in the world.

Sunday, April 7

Third Day

Item 18. Continuing Revelation. It seems so reasonable to believe that the God who created the world and all of us, should still reach out in love toward us and guide our destinies. The thought of retirement for God seems repugnant to an intelligent evaluation of his purposes. Certainly the world is in need of direction quite as much today as it was in the days of Moses.

Item 19. A Precious Fellowship through Service. One of the most satisfying rewards for working in the Church is the privilege of coming to know fully how wonderful a companionship grows out of the mutual devotion to volunteer service in the interest of our fellow men. There is a rare joy in joining hands with friends in the service of our Father in heaven.

Item 20. Intellectual Liberty Coupled with Intellectual Responsibility. The basic belief, "the glory of God is intelligence," puts a premium on the search for truth. Men are encouraged to reach out for enlightenment wherever it is worthily to be found. But they are also charged with the responsibility of proofreading their thinking against good common sense and against the revealed word of God.

Item 21. (I marvel at your patience—I shall run out of numbers soon. But as I turn them through, the gospel seems so complete. I have wanted to do this once.) Dedicated Home Membership. Latter-day Saints honor the home as the foundation of civilization in keeping with two great scriptural declarations:

Lo, children are an heritage of the Lord: . . .

As arrows are in the hand of a mighty man; so are children of the youth.

ELDER S. DILWORTH YOUNG Of the First Council of the Seventy

I CANNOT remember the time when I have not heard the story, quoted by Brother Bennion, concerning the coming of the Father and the Son to the Prophet Joseph Smith. I am convinced as I grow older and become proportionately wiser that if boys and girls in our

Happy is the man that hath his quiver full of them: they shall not be ashamed, but they shall speak with the enemies in the gate. (Psalm 127:3-5.)

And then that wonderful declaration to Latter-day Saint parents everywhere—Doctrine and Covenants 68:25—on our responsibility in the training of children, coupled with the wonderful suggestions offered in this conference; we bid parents accept their full responsibility to the spirits that have been entrusted to their keeping here in mortality.

Item 22. The Anchor of Testimony. The strength of the Church inheres in a mingling of two influences: revelation from God on high and individual testimonies in the hearts of men and women. Testimony is the stability of those people.

And finally, item 23. The Assurance of Eternal Life and Exaltation. Through keeping the faith and through keeping the commandments of God, confidence is born in the reality of a literal resurrection through the atoning sacrifice of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ.

IN HUMBLE gratitude I give you my witness that in these twenty-three distinctive features we have the completest program for life—here and hereafter—that I have been able to discover.

May the Lord inspire us to live worthy of it, I pray in his name. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

You have just listened to Elder Adam S. Bennion, member of the Council of the Twelve. Elder S. Dilworth Young of the First Council of Seventy will now address us.

Church could keep that story uppermost in their hearts, believing it, having a testimony of it, much of the ills of our youth which President Richards so graphically portrayed this morning would not be.

I am concerned however with one item which has recently been called to my attention on this matter. There appears to be going about our communities some writing to the effect that the Prophet Joseph Smith evolved his doctrine from what might have been a vision, in which he is supposed to have said that he saw an angel, instead of the Father and Son. According to this theory, by the time he was inspired to write the occurrence in 1838, he had come to the conclusion that there were two Beings.

This rather shocked me. I can see no reason why the Prophet, with his brilliant mind, would have failed to remember in sharp relief every detail of that eventful day. I can remember quite vividly that in 1915 I had a mere dream, and while the dream was prophetic in its nature, it was not startling. It has been long since fulfilled, but I can remember every detail of it as sharply and clearly as though it had happened yesterday. How then could any man conceive that the Prophet, receiving such a vision as he received, would not remember it and would fail to write it clearly, distinctly, and accurately?

It seems to me, too, that had he evolved such a thing, his enemies would have used it against him. In 1838 there was a crisis in the Church. Men were falling away. It was at that time that Oliver Cowdery became disaffected. If any man in this Church had ever heard that story of the first vision, Oliver Cowdery must have heard it. Yet his reasons for disaffection were never given as an evolution of the first vision. Other men of that time did not use it as their excuse. In 1844, when the final conspiracy was concocted to murder Joseph Smith, the reasons given by those men were not discrepancies in his story of the first vision, but rather other matters far removed from it.

When Joseph wrote the story in 1838, men and women who had known him ever since he had started this work took the story in their stride; that is, it was common enough knowledge from the beginning that no one took an exception to it. Everybody knew it; everybody had heard it; not exactly in the words in which he wrote it—I believe no man will speak extemporaneously in the same manner that he will write something—but essentially the same, and when the Saints read it, it merely confirmed what they had heard over and over again.

His mother should have known something about it. You will remember, he walked into her house that morning and told her that the church to which she had given allegiance was not true. To my way of thinking, he must have told her all about the vision. When she chose to write the story of her son's experience, she did not put it in her own words. I suspect that she must have felt that so nearly was what he had written the way he had described it to her, that she quoted his written statement.

All of these things seem to me to add up to irrefutable evidence, although not said exactly, that Joseph Smith, in 1838, told the correct story of his vision of 1820.

Recently I made some slight investigation, although not enough, trying to find the testimonies of some of those who had heard Joseph say these things before 1838. I did not find much—I did not have time to look far—but I have one, which I should like to give you.

Edward Stevenson told how in 1834 the Prophet came to Pontiac, Michigan, Stevenson's home town, and there held a series of meetings, attended by Brother Stevenson. Brother Stevenson wrote that the following was the Prophet's testimony on that occasion:

"I am witness that there is a God, for I saw him in open day, while praying in a silent grove in the spring of 1820." Then Brother Stevenson wrote: "He further testified that God the Eternal Father, pointing to a separate Personage in the likeness of himself, said, 'This is my beloved Son. Hear Him.'"

I submit this excerpt as enough like the story that the Prophet wrote to bear witness that he wrote it accurately and correctly.

I am of the fifth generation. I can remember the second generation. My grandchildren are of the seventh generation. Likely in their day, they will remember not only my generation, but will see also, before they die, the tenth or the eleventh generation. It is just possible that some of them may be interested enough to want to know what their grandfather thought about these things, and they will investigate the conference reports. I should like them to have in my words what I believe about this great event.

Sunday, April 7

SO WILL you indulge me while I talk a moment to my grandchildren and to my great-great-grandchildren, to Lorraine, to Parkie, to Charlotte, to Annette, and Wendy, and any that may come hereafter. (I hope there will be many of them.) I want you to know that I know that Joseph Smith walked into a grove in 1820, inspired of the Lord to do so, knelt down, as he said, among the silent trees, offered up a prayer, and there he was given a vision in which he saw God the Eternal Father, who in his turn introduced to Joseph his beloved Son. The Son told Joseph many things which would transpire but of which he was not allowed to speak. Beginning with that vision, which gave us our first knowledge since the time of the Savior of the true relationship of our Father and his Son to us, has grown this Church. That is my solemn and humble testimony to those of my house who in the future will want to know what I thought and believed.

In order that they will have no doubt, and that no carping critic may read into my words things that are not there, I should like to repeat for their benefit what the Prophet said when he wrote his vision:

BISHOP JOSEPH L. WIRTHLIN

Presiding Bishop of the Church

PRESIDENT MCKAY, my beloved brethren and sisters, I sincerely trust I may have an interest in your prayers that I might express a few thoughts I have with reference to the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ.

I do not recall ever having attended a more inspirational conference. Our prophet has received revelation for our good and benefit. If I have one thought above another, it is that as we go home and continue to live from day to day, we should remember what President McKay has said to us. If we will live

... I saw a pillar of light exactly over my head, above the brightness of the sun, which descended gradually until it fell upon me.

... when the light rested upon me I saw two Personages, whose brightness and glory defy all description, standing above me in the air. One of them spake unto me, calling me by name and said, pointing to the other—This is My Beloved Son. Hear Him! (Joseph Smith 2:16-17.)

I will stand on that witness and add mine that I know by the Spirit of the Holy Ghost that it is true, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

The Congregation will join with the Choir now in singing "We Thank Thee, O God, for a Prophet." The last speaker, the one to whom we have just listened, is Elder S. Dilworth Young of the First Council of Seventy.

The Choir and congregation joined in singing the hymn, "We Thank Thee, O God, For A Prophet."

President David O. McKay:

Bishop Joseph L. Wirthlin, Presiding Bishop of the Church, will now address us. He will be followed by Elder Marion D. Hanks of the First Council of Seventy.

accordingly day by day, without a doubt the Lord will bless, inspire, and help us in all of our endeavors.

As I think of President McKay, I see him as a prophet and as an apostle of the Lord Jesus Christ. He has always been deeply interested in the young people and children, as well as older individuals. I have made many trips with him and always the children have looked forward to the opportunity of coming in contact with him. He invariably shakes hands with them.

I cannot help recalling Saturday night when, coming to our priesthood meeting here, a group of the Aaronic Priesthood were standing by the door at the rear of the Tabernacle. I approached them and asked if they did not care to come inside and find a seat. They said, yes, they would like to have a seat, but in the meantime they were waiting to shake hands with President McKay. I thought to myself, now, if all of these young people accept our President as a prophet and follow his leadership as he directs them in their lives, they will live the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ and become strong in carrying forward his work here upon the earth.

I also think of President McKay as an apostle of the Lord Jesus Christ, and of what the Savior said in Luke,

But Jesus called them unto him, and said, Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not: for of such is the kingdom of God. (Luke 18:16.)

I am sure that is the attitude and the feeling of our prophet. I am sure that the young people who come in touch with him feel that they are actually shaking hands with a prophet, with an apostle of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Brethren and sisters, I am sure that is the attitude and the feeling of all of us after having attended this grand conference.

Concerning the responsibility of parents to their children, the Lord said to the Prophet Joseph Smith:

But I have commanded you to bring up your children in light and truth. (D & C 93:40.)

In the Lord's words, brethren and sisters, we have great responsibility in seeing that our children are brought up in the light and truth of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ as it has been revealed through the Prophet Joseph, and as it is further revealed from time to time.

I also think of the wonderful opportunities all of our young people enjoy in this great Church, wherein they hear and are taught the gospel truths. We have our great Sunday School organization in which our children, regardless of age, may become acquainted with the teachings and life of Jesus Christ; where they may learn about the establishment of the Church and the fact that the Prophet Joseph actually saw the Father and the Son; where they learn that both the Aaronic and Melchizedek Priesthood were given back to mankind. They are also taught something with reference to the Sacrament, its purpose and what it represents.

We have another great organization—the Primary Association, which is interested in teaching our young children the gospel, teaching them the manner of prayer, what it means to be baptized and to become a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

There is another great organization, the YWMA, where our young women are taught the necessity of living a life so sweet and clean that the day will come when they may enjoy the blessings of motherhood, where they are taught the necessity of attending Sacrament meeting and Sunday School and of taking full advantage of all the training available in the YWMA.

To provide for our young men we have the YMMIA, where our sons may enjoy the opportunities of recreational activities, public speaking, drama, and singing. In the YMMIA our young men are taught to live lives that will be modest and clean that when the time comes, they may become honorable fathers and be in a position to receive divine direction from on high in the care and training of their families.

There is still another great system for the blessing of our youth, one established by the Presidency of the Church: our great seminaries of religious education, where our sons and daughters are taught the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, where their questions are invited and answers given by trained and efficient teachers.

Through it all, brethren and sisters, as we think of what has and is being done by the Church, there is no reason why your sons and daughters, and mine, should not become the kind of people the Lord needs to carry on this great work before the second coming of Jesus the Christ.

After all, our young people have opportunities of rendering service. In most instances, if they have followed all of the advancements they have had, taken advantage of all the opportunities afforded them in these great organizations, and particularly in the seminary schools, they should be able to go forward and meet their Church and family responsibilities.

Sunday, April 7

Third Day

I do not suppose the Lord is looking so much at ages in calling individuals to do his work as he is at whether or not they accept him and live the gospel day by day. I often think of Jesus the Christ—I know you are all familiar with the story when he was in the temple where Joseph and Mary found him. When they came to him, he said:

How is it that ye sought me? wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business? (Luke 2:49.)

At the age of twelve he realized what his assignment was, and he did not hesitate to declare to the world, "... wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?"

Brethren and sisters, I am sure that all our young people who have taken, and who will continue to take advantage of the opportunities afforded in these great institutions that have been prepared for them will say, "... wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?"

With reference to the matter of ages, as I said, the Lord does not worry so much about the age as he does about the loyalty and devotion of those assigned to do his work.

When speaking of youth, I think of the accomplishments of Mormon as recorded in the Book of Mormon. As a young man at the age of fifteen, he desired to ask the Lord a question in prayer, and his answer was the appearance of the Father. Can you imagine God the Father revealing himself to a boy at the age of fifteen? Well, that is exactly what happened in Mormon's experience.

At the age of sixteen, Mormon became the general of the Nephite Army. It is something to think about that at the age of sixteen Mormon was called to be the general of the great army of the Nephite people. It was not so much a matter of age. The thing that counted was the fact that Mormon knew the Lord, and the Lord knew him, and Mormon met his assignment with all of the responsibilities involved therein and was very successful.

Then, of course, we think of the Prophet Joseph Smith who, at the age of fourteen, as has already been indicated here many times during this conference, asked the Lord where the Church of the Lord Jesus Christ might be found. In answer to his prayer, there appeared the Father and the Son, and, of course, he was called upon to establish the Church of the Lord Jesus Christ to which you and I belong.

Then, too, I think of President Joseph F. Smith who, at the age of fifteen, was ordained an elder and sent on a mission into the Hawaiian Islands. Upon arriving there, he found he was among a people whose language he did not understand and who did not understand his language. But having complete faith in God, he made it a matter of prayer and, thereafter, was able to talk with that people. They understood what he said, and he understood what they said. Within one year, at the age of sixteen, he became the president of that mission. It was not a matter of age again, brethren and sisters, it was a matter of understanding the will of the Lord and living the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ.

It is glorious to think of the opportunities that our sons and daughters have in these great organizations within the Church. But I am sure there is also a tremendous responsibility that devolves upon us as fathers and mothers. I think the greatest source of inspiration for young people is found, of course, in the home, where they notice the attitudes and the feelings of the father and the mother. If the father and the mother are living the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ as they should, there is little question but that the children will follow them very closely.

I think it is a wonderful opportunity when we can talk with our children about the matter of prayer. I am so grateful for my dear mother who taught me to pray. I recall at the age long before we children were reading, during the evening hours, she would call us together and say, "Now, we will have prayers." She would then explain to us the existence of God the Father and his Son Jesus Christ. Those teachings became a reality to us, that God lives, that Jesus is the Christ, and those teachings remain with us today. When she talked to us about the Prophet Joseph, there was no question in our minds but that Joseph Smith actually saw the Father and the Son.

Therefore, because of the fact that Mother taught us how to pray, why we should pray, and what to pray for, prayer has always been a great source of comfort and inspiration to me. I always enjoy reading the admonitions of the Prophet Amulek:

Yea, cry unto him for mercy; for he is mighty to save.

Yea, humble yourselves, and continue in prayer unto him.

Cry unto him when ye are in your fields, yea, over all your flocks.

Cry unto him in your houses, yea, over all your household, both morning, mid-day, and evening.

Yea, cry unto him against the power of your enemies.

Yea, cry unto him against the devil, who is an enemy to all righteousness.

Cry unto him over the crops of your fields, that ye may prosper in them.

Cry over the flocks of your fields, that they may increase.

But this is not all; ye must pour out your souls in your closets, and your secret places, and in your wilderness.

Yea, and when you do not cry unto the Lord, let your hearts be full, drawn out in prayer unto him continually for your welfare, and also for the welfare of those who are around you. (Alma 34:18-27.)

I am sure that our sons and daughters will have that same attitude and that same inspiration if we teach them the necessity of prayer, of becoming acquainted with God the Father and with his Son Jesus Christ, and also of remembering that if they will live the right kind of lives, and be sweet and clean, they will enjoy the power and the gift of the Holy Ghost. I am sure they do enjoy these blessings, as a short time ago I attended a fast meeting during which a little girl about twelve years of age stood up and bore her testimony. Among other things, she said, "I know that God lives. I know that Jesus Christ is his Son. I know that Joseph Smith saw the Father and the Son," and she went on and bore her testimony very impressively.

Brethren and sisters, I was convinced as I listened to that little girl that, without a doubt, she had been given the gift and the power of the Holy Ghost.

If our sons and daughters realize the blessings of this great gift, I am sure they are going to live and pray and work to the end that the power and the gift of the Holy Ghost will come to them as they live throughout the years.

It is a wonderful thing, as I said, to teach them to pray. I cannot help thinking of another experience that comes to mind in connection with three children, one boy and two girls, the boy about ten and the daughters about eight and five. It was a Sunday afternoon. The mother was taken suddenly ill. The doctor was called. The sisters of the Relief Society came in to render whatever service they could. The children could not get into the room because it was so small. They walked around the house as they wondered about their mother. Finally, one of them said to the others, "Mother has taught us time and time again to pray if we have difficulty and trouble. Now, Mother has trouble. Mother is sick and ill. Let us pray." So, going around to the rear of the building, they found a little old hut where coal was kept. They knelt down in the coal, and first the son called upon the Lord to bless the mother; secondly, the older sister prayed and asked the Lord to heal their mother. That day before the sun went down, that mother was comparatively well.

Brothers and sisters, that came about because three children had been taught to believe in God. They believed what their mother had told them, that if they had difficulty, or if anyone else in the family had difficulty, to call upon the Lord. As a result of the mother's teachings, the children prayed for her, and she was made well.

There is no question in my mind but what our children believe in God and in his Son, Jesus Christ. If in our homes, we will teach them to pray, to remember that the Lord hears and answers prayers, it will make a great difference to them in the way they will live and the kind of Latter-day Saints they will become.

It is as Brigham Young said upon one occasion:

Whether we are poor or rich, if we neglect our prayers and Sacrament meetings, we neglect the Spirit of the Lord, and the spirit of darkness comes over us.

Sunday, April 7

Third Day

How true it is in the lives of individuals who fail to pray, and how dark is the darkness that comes into their souls.

And again, we must remember this in connection with our children, that we owe something each Sunday to the Lord. The matter of remembering that the Sabbath is a holy day has already been stated by President Joseph Fielding Smith. We should remember that the Sabbath day is the Lord's day—the holy day. Concerning our responsibilities, President Brigham Young said that we should teach our children to attend Sacrament meeting. His statement was, "After the Sunday School is over, let the parents take the pains to bring their children to meeting."

Of course, we all know the meeting President Young had in mind—the Sacrament meeting where our children have the privilege of partaking of the Sacrament and learning of its significance.

I am sure if our sons and daughters have that experience and realize they are partaking of the Sacrament, they will understand its sacred purpose, and out of it there will come a great source of inspiration. I am sure of that.

Now, concerning the Aaronic Priesthood: Fathers and mothers who have sons who are deacons, teachers, or priests, please help them to realize that they have the greatest gift of God to his sons. With that thought in their minds, and living lives that are sweet and clean, and with the encouragement of Father and Mother, without a doubt they will receive the assignments that are given to them from time to time, and the faithful performance of their responsibilities will be a great source of inspiration to live as the servants of the Lord should live.

It is wonderful to know that in a home where probably the father holds the Melchizedek Priesthood, he may have a son who is a deacon, a teacher, or a priest. What an inspiration it must be when the father will say to his sons, "Now, Sons, let's go to our meeting together. Let us be together. We both hold the priesthood. You hold the Aaronic Priesthood, and I hold the Melchizedek Priesthood." By attending their priesthood meetings together, I am sure it must be a great source of inspiration to the father, the mother, and, of course, to the sons who are endeavoring to carry out the assignments that come to them.

In the Church of the Lord Jesus Christ, our people have so many responsibilities, so much that brings to them the sure knowledge that this is the work of the Lord.

In conclusion, if we continue to pray, there is no doubt in my mind but that we will always have divine direction in all of our endeavors. I am sure we will. Should there come a time of difficulty and trouble, we should remember what the Savior said through the Prophet Joseph Smith: "Pray always, that ye may not faint. . . ." That ye may not faint! I am sure, brethren and sisters, that in our lives we have some difficulties perhaps when we do feel faint. To all such, the Savior said:

Pray always, that ye may not faint, until I come. Behold, and lo, I will come quickly, and receive you unto myself. Amen. (D & C 88:126.)

I am sure that if we will all live the gospel as we should, we will enjoy its blessings, and when we have difficulties, through the power of prayer, the Lord will bless and inspire us in our work and in our homes.

Now, may the Lord continue to bless us and so inspire us that each one of our children will be happy and thrilled to follow our attitudes in the matter of living the gospel as it has been restored.

My humble testimony to you is that this is the Church of the Lord Jesus Christ, that he who stands at the head is a prophet, an apostle, who receives from time to time the mind and the will of our Heavenly Father as it should be given to his people for their blessing, for their benefit, and for their inspiration, which I humbly say in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Bishop Joseph L. Wirthlin, Presiding Bishop of the Church, has just concluded speaking. We shall now hear from Elder Marion D. Hanks, member of the First Council of Seventy.

ELDER MARION D. HANKS
Of the First Council of the Seventy

THE SEVENTY ARE traditionally minute-men. I have just been multiplied.

Under the stimulation of the great song we have sung together, I should like to put into the record a story and a statement which I think President McKay probably does not know of, but which I think should be known to him and to all of us.

In the last few years it has been my occasional blessing to take distinguished visitors to our city, who have come to Temple Square, into the offices of the President of the Church to greet him, to be greeted by him, and to feel the strength and stimulation and love which always emanates from him.

A few months ago Brother Evans and I with some others were privileged to attend a conference in the office of President McKay with one of the leading labor leaders in America, possibly as influential and important a man as there is in his field. He was accompanied by his wife and two little daughters, and the experience was a beautiful and impressive one. There was no posturing, no pretense or effort to impress by President McKay—only genuine friendliness, interest, and love. The part of the story I would want remembered and on the record was what occurred when we had left the office. We stood in the halls of the Church Office Building, and this man, who in his employment and administration influences the lives of many millions of men, said to those of us who stood with him, and he said it with a moist eye, "I have lived in many lands. I have been in the presence of kings and presidents and rulers, and I want to say to you men that I do not think our generation will produce another character like that."

This has happened not once, but many times. And for no other purpose than to express my own faith and convictions about President McKay and the office and calling which he holds, I repeat to you who may not have enjoyed such privilege my observation that many men who are good and stalwart and powerful in their own right recognize in him who leads us a great man and an authorized representative of our Heavenly Father.

There have been many things in this conference which have inspired sincere gratitude in me. With no desire to be lengthy I would like to express my appreciation for the return to the measure of health which they enjoy of our two good Brethren in the Council of the Seventy. We have learned to love and respect Brother Kirkham and Brother Hunter and feel for them the esteem and brotherhood which this wonderful service opportunity should engender in us.

I would like humbly to express another feeling of gratitude. There sits in this building today a man who was among the very first to whom I bore testimony of the gospel on these grounds when I came out of the service eleven years ago. He is here today as a bishop of a ward in one of the great new stakes in the Church. Having been touched with the spirit of the gospel on Temple Square, he, through his own earnest efforts, through the effective teaching of good missionaries and the living of the gospel by the members of the Church in his home town, soon came to a knowledge of the truth and accepted it.

It is a privilege also to express gratitude for the magnificent music which we have enjoyed here. The Tabernacle Choir is known to the whole Church as a great missionary organization, and yet perhaps we who work on these grounds are more aware, through our opportunities, of their effectiveness than others could be. I honor them. During this conference we have heard two other groups—a wonderful choir of young singers from Brigham Young University, and a great, and to me thrilling, group of young people from the Institute of Religion at the University of Utah.

I have great love for these young people, and I desire to express publicly my appreciation for the privilege of having been a teacher of some of them. I would like to say how proud I was of the group from the Institute of Religion. They have not had the privilege of singing here before and of being thus excellently represented before the Church. Anything fine that can be said of other young men and women in the Church can properly be said of them, for they are intelligent and loyal and steadfast. Not all of you would understand the pressures that are upon them in their daily learning. I want to express my gratitude and faith and confidence in the good men who teach them, some of whom also taught me, and I express my own appreciation for the great contribution in faith and good lives that has come out of that institute and others like it.

There are a few simple suggestions I would like to make today to these who are young.

Some weeks ago it was my privilege to go into one of the great subterranean caverns in the southwestern part of our land. Thousands upon thousands of people visit it annually. The day I went into it, far below the surface of the earth, I was in the company of a large group, but no one whom I knew personally. The path on which we walked through this great cavern over a period of more than an hour was quite a narrow one, permitting two to walk abreast, if a bit crowded. The trail was lighted in sections as we went and was very clearly marked with white stones at the edges and with signs all along the way. We were accompanied by three forest rangers and met others as we went. I walked near the front and heard some of the comments of the ranger as we were led into the magnificent scenery of this underground wonderland.

As we walked, we passed beneath a huge, high dome. Below it, appropriately named, was a deep hole called "The Bottomless Pit." There was conjecture among the people as to what might have caused this empty place in the earth. Some thought it might have been an early fossil deposit, others an area of highly soluble materials, others the result of an earth movement or some other like occurrence of nature. It was discussed for a time with no conclusion reached. The ranger informed the party that there is divided opinion on the question among the experts.

A little farther along the trail we came into an area where there was another vast vaulted dome, but the debris from that cavity lay below it in a mountainous pile. Again there were comments along the trail. One said: "My, I'll bet there was a tremendous clap of noise when that fell!" An army man replied, "Do you really think there was? After all, there was no one here to hear it!"

They discussed this issue at some length, whether or not in the absence of someone to hear, noise actually occurs. I listened and said nothing, but thought of Bishop Berkeley, Irish philosopher, whose theory was that "to be is to be perceived," that is, that so-called material things exist only in being perceived—if it is not perceived, it does not exist. It is said that a group of the bishop's students at Oxford taught him the true nature of reality one very dark evening when they placed a tree stump on a certain unlighted path where he habitually walked. His perception of the stump was said to be a realistic shock to George Berkeley. (Laughter.)

Well, when we left the cavern, the people were still discussing whether or not when things fall there is a noise in the absence of human ears to hear it.

As I left the cavern, I thought to myself that these may be legitimate fields for inquiry, and it may be that someday someone will discover the answers, though that seems doubtful. But would it not be a most foolish thing to abandon the cave because we do not know the answers? Suppose someone should take it into his mind that all the glory of this wonder-work, God's handiwork, should be abandoned and never enjoyed more because those mysterious questions were not answered. Suppose one with ready access to the place and with personal knowledge of its great beauty should decide that he would never enter more because there were things he did not fully understand about it—or go about seeking to dissuade others from enjoying the majesty of it because it took effort to reach and there were certain (to him, here and now) hard-to-understand problems. Would not this be foolish and tragic?

Do you know that some of our wonderful young people of great potential intelligence and capacity and contribution are abandoning their faith and their way of life in the gospel, with all the strength and beauty of it, because they have come to questions for which they have not learned satisfactory answers?

May I read you a statement from the pen of one of the most learned among us, who left us a legacy of scientific research and useful knowledge, and of great faith. Dr. Widsote, after encouraging "mature examination," said:

"Wise men do not throw the Church overboard because they have not satisfied themselves concerning every principle of the gospel. Under the law of progression every principle may in time find lodgment in the inner consciousness of the seeker."

To abandon the marvelous demonstrable truths of the gospel because there are some questions one cannot satisfactorily resolve would be foolishness in the extreme. As President Clark said the other evening, "A foolish man can ask questions that the wisest cannot answer." It is no reproach to our religion or to us not to be able to answer definitively, categorically, finally, every question that can be asked. I plead with you, and I talk not theoretically but with some of your faces in my mind, not to abandon all that is good in your religion because there are some things you do not understand.

Now, President Clark in his two great sermons in the evening meetings, Brother Evans in his conference address and in this morning's wonderful short sermon, and President Richards this morning, have all alluded in some measure to something I would now like to say. I could not presume to add to what they have said, but I can raise my voice with them and testify as to my own experience and observation. What I say I say humbly, knowing my own limitations, and not from any position of personal arrogance or assumed unusual competence. I would speak to some who influence these young people in causing them to abandon what they believe.

Along the trail down in the cavern, well-marked and defined as it was, with signs and guides to make clear that we were to stay on it, some "boy play" occurred between some young Scouts in uniform who walked the trail just a short distance behind me, supervised by a scoutmaster and several assistants. The boys were jostling and pushing each other all the way along, trying to get some adventurous, "progressive" soul to get off the trail and go out and explore a little. I watched it all and observed the instance I now think of, when a larger boy who had been tantalizing a younger one, pushed him off the trail and into a dimly lighted, muddy area. The boy went near the edge of a crevice, and with an outcry that startled us all and got the rangers quickly to his side, signalized the danger he was in and the possibility that he might have perished in the darkness.

You see, along this trail at periodic intervals the ranger would stop and bend over and turn a switch which was hidden from the view of the rest of us, and an area ahead of us would suddenly become lighted. The ranger at the back, when we were safely through a certain area, would turn off the light. The youngster had gone into a section of the cave where the light did not reach.

I thought, as the lights went on and off, how realistic this experience is to life. We talk of questions, some solvable. We know that the Lord has encouraged us to seek truth, to "knock," "ask," and "search diligently." Yet there come times when we reach the end of our capacity to reason and to understand. We must learn to walk by faith. There has been given us enough light to walk the paths we are here to tread. As the Lord in his wisdom desires that we have more light, we have the assurance that it will be given. I bear my witness that from the beginning of the history of the Church the lights have come on when the need arose. It has always been so; it is so now; it will always be.

When the little boy was brought back on the trail, the ranger was very angry, chastised him severely, declared him banished from the group, and started to send him away, while the real culprit in the case stood silent. He was not going to be punished, just the boy. Then the scoutmaster spoke up and said, "If he goes, this boy ought to go, too." He was a wise man. The ranger talked to them both for a moment, and on promise of good behavior, allowed both of them to stay. Though God and wise men may forgive, there is no happiness to be found in leaving the narrow path of gospel principle to adventure in strange paths and forbidden ways, in the enticement of dark places, in "looking beyond the mark," as Jacob said.

We left the cavern a while later. My teacher's mind and my interest in youth had brought me to some renewed conclusions, and I pass them on earnestly to mature persons who are given to assisting young people off the trail. The dictionary has a word for them: iconoclast. It is defined as, "One who attacks cherished beliefs as shams." What if the cherished beliefs that are attacked along the trail are true? What if they are the very beliefs that make these boys and girls the worthwhile, promising people they are? What if the foundations of their faith are effectively shaken at this crucial period, and they dangle, with no substantial footings to stand on? President McKay in his opening address quoted the economist, Babson, from whose writings I should now like to read a sentence:

"Many of the most important men in America, who are what they are because of what they learned at their mother's knee, now deny their own and other people's children those same blessings, in the name of 'liberalism' or 'progressivism' or 'emancipation.'"

Such men, Babson says, deny others the very blessings that made them what they are.

Do you know that when one who has influence with youth, be he teacher, leader, or parent, seriously weakens the foundations upon which a young person has built, by faith-destroying challenges the youngster is not yet equipped to meet, he fashions a disciple who has been effectively cut loose from fundamentals at a time when he needs most to rely on them? The challenger may himself be a moral, educated, well-meaning person of integrity, doing what he does in the name of honesty and truth. His own character may have been formed in an atmosphere of faith and conviction which through his influence he may now help to destroy in his young follower. "Disenchanted" himself in his mature years, he turns his powers on an immature mind and leaves it ready prey for nostrums and superstitions and behavior he himself would disdain.

Let me ask a question or two, as I hurry to a conclusion. To you who influence this boy, to "emancipate" him, in your way of thinking, may I ask you: Have you really helped him develop his capacity to contribute to the world's useful knowledge and useful work? In which particular is he a better person when you get through with him? In what aspect of life has his ability to serve been strengthened? Does he love God and his fellow men more? Is he a more moral, clean, virtuous, decent man? Is he a more faithful husband, father, or son? Has he learned more gratefully to honor his father and mother? Does he merit their increased respect and esteem as he matures? Is his power for good increased? Has he acquired a greater influence for motivating others to constructive, participating citizenship? Is he a more worthy, admirable person to his younger brothers and sisters? Has he experienced increase of generosity, unselfishness, thoughtfulness for the needs of others through your tutelage? Is he more kind, considerate, gentle, sensitive? Does he have more sympathy, love, and understanding for those who are distressed? Does he live life more courageously, manfully? Will he endure tribulation more patiently and understandingly because of you?

I have answers to these questions. Again I do not talk from theory but with faces and lives in my mind. My experience is that when you get through with him, as fine a man as you are, as much respect as I may have for your education and your brilliance and your effectiveness and your personal integrity, you have not improved him in any of these important ways. He may be, in fact, he often is, cynical, destructively critical, vain, high-minded, impervious to instruction. Quite often he has acquired habits and attitudes toward society and moral behavior which break the hearts of those who love him most and which you yourself would never stoop to. He sneers at his parents, those whom he once respected, and often at God and holy things. It is quite a responsibility you have assumed.

May I commend to you what Richard L. Evans said this morning: "A teacher is responsible for the total effect of his teaching." So is it true of a parent, an official, a leader of youth. What is the total effect of your influence on the young?

I want to mention one other thought that came in the cavern. As we walked in that subterranean beauty, I thought what each of you under like circumstances would have thought. I thought how wonderful it would be if my lovely wife and little girls could be with me; I wanted to share with them the wonder, the inspiration, the nearness to God I felt then. A verse of scripture came to mind. It is recorded in First Nephi:

And it came to pass that I did go forth and partake of the fruit thereof; and I beheld that it was most sweet, above all that I ever before tasted. Yea, and I beheld that the fruit thereof was white, to exceed all the whiteness that I had ever seen.

And as I partook of the fruit thereof it filled my soul with exceeding great joy; wherefore, I began to be desirous that my family should partake of it also; . . . (1 Nephi 8:11-12.)

We should all desire to share the goodness and beauty and truth of the gospel with others of God's children.

In the story of Ammon's missionary work among the Lamanites there is one statement the unusual language of which sometimes evokes mirth in a student when he first hears it, but which to me is one of the most sacred and provocative verses in all the record. The king has been stricken and lies as if he were dead. Ammon is summoned by the queen, his loving, loyal wife. She says:

. . . I would that ye should go in and see my husband, for he has been laid upon his bed for the space of two days and two nights; and some say that he is not dead, but others say that he is dead and that he stinketh, and that he ought to be placed in the sepulchre; but as for myself, to me he doth not stink. (Alma 19:5.)

The love of this faithful wife for her beloved husband seems typical to me of the love which will obtain in the heavenly kingdom and which should here characterize our relationships with those dear to us.

I pray that the Spirit of the Lord will guide the young people of the Church as they seek answers to their questions, for this is encouraged, that they may seek "by study and also by faith"; that they may with dedication and honest effort seek for useful knowledge, for the Lord has said that "to be learned is good," if we hearken to the counsels of God.

I caution those who influence young people, and ask you to look at the total effect of your teaching. I bear my witness as to the truthfulness of the message of the Prophet Joseph in his testimony of the mission of the Lord Jesus Christ, and of the restoration, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

We have just listened to Elder Marion D. Hanks, member of the First Council of Seventy.

There are two other members of the General Authorities from whom we should be pleased to hear, but in consideration of their health we will refrain from calling on them. They are Elder Spencer W. Kimball of the Council of the Twelve, and Elder Thomas E. McKay of the Assistants. We assure them they have, and they know they have, our faith and prayers for the blessings of the Lord to attend them and to give them strength, vitality, wherein they may now be suffering from physical weakness.

PRESIDENT DAVID O. McKAY

AT THE CONCLUSION of this great conference, I am sure you would have me express appreciation to all who have contributed to it, including those who have so inspired us with their uplifting sermons. I shall repeat, of course, some expressions which we have already given directly at the time of service.

You have been blessed by the sight of these beautiful flowers, so profusely displayed before you—the calla lilies from the high priests' quorum of the

Sunday, April 7

Third Day

Oakland-Berkeley Stake; the daffodils from Puyallup Valley Daffodil Festival, Inc., sent here through the Tacoma Stake; the spring flowers here from the Phoenix and the East Phoenix stakes; the bird of paradise flowers from the Los Angeles Temple Grounds. We express appreciation for the thoughtfulness of all who have desired to make pleasant these gatherings through these "messengers of love."

We thank representatives of the public press for their fair and accurate reports throughout the sessions of conference; the city officials, Chief W. Cleon Skousen, and traffic officers for their co-operation in handling the increased traffic here in the city. We express appreciation to the fire department and to the Red Cross for being on hand to render any service that might be needed.

To the Tabernacle ushers, who have rendered service early and late in seating the great audiences!

For assistance rendered by the various radio and television stations, here in our own city and state, and other states named in the various sessions of the conference, we are grateful. This truly has been the means of permitting tens of thousands of people to hear the proceedings of the 127th annual general conference of the Church.

We appreciate the choirs. Never have we had better service than the choral groups have rendered during these three days, beginning Friday with the Brigham Young University combined choruses, with Norman Gulbrandsen and Newell B. Weight conducting; the Institute of Religion chorus from the University of Utah, with David Austin Shand conducting; the Tabernacle Choir male chorus last evening under the direction of J. Spencer Cornwall—all these choir seats filled—a larger group, I think, than we have ever had before. It was appropriate, too, because it was the largest priesthood meeting ever held in the Church. And now, today, we appreciate the singing of the Tabernacle Choir under the direction of Brother Cornwall. We express appreciation, also, to the organists, Alexander Schreiner and Frank W. Asper, and Brother Roy M. Darley, assistant organist.

I should like to say just a word in conclusion.

I do not know how many of you heard Brother Marion G. Romney this morning. I hope all of you listened to his excellent address over the Church-of-the-Air broadcast, speaking about the reality of inspiration from God to individuals. I was reminded of what Peter said. (My fellow workers know that I am rather partial to Peter, the chief Apostle of the Meridian of Times—a practical man, a successful fisherman.) But as I have read his life, I find that he rose from a seeming indifference to religion to the heights of spirituality, and I find confirmation of that in the following reference in his First Epistle General. He refers to an "inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled," and that inheritance the "lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead," a hope that "fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you,

"Who are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation ready to be revealed in the last time.

"Wherein ye greatly rejoice, though now for a season, if need be, ye are in heaviness through manifold temptations:" (See I Peter 1:3-6.)

Then he continues in his Second Epistle, referring to the sacredness of the priesthood, "that by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature; . . ." (II Peter 1:4.)

Happy is the man who has experienced that relationship to his Maker, wherein we are "partakers of the divine nature." That is a reality, and I so testify to you here in this sacred hour.

Then Peter says that we must go on from that . . .

"... giving all diligence, add to your faith virtue; and to virtue knowledge;

"And to knowledge temperance; and to temperance patience; and to patience godliness;

"And to godliness brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness charity." (Ibid., 1:5-7.)

Note those virtues from that practical man who had experienced the relationship, the real relationship to his Creator. And you have had that experience, many, and I hope all may have it. It is glorious. And then the promise:

"For if these things [virtues] be in you, and abound, they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ." (Ibid., 1:8.)

And you have heard in this conference what that knowledge means; to know God and Jesus Christ, his Son, is eternal life. Or, in the exact words, as recorded in the 17th chapter of John:

"And this is life eternal [this is Jesus praying to his Father, two distinct personages], that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent." (John 17:3.)

That, my brothers and sisters, is the highest purpose of life. It has been put in one sentence that the whole purpose of life is "to subdue matter" (conquer everything physical, our passions, enmity, selfishness, and all that), "to subdue matter that we might realize the ideal," and that is the ideal—"life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent."

With all my soul, at the conclusion of this highly spiritual conference, I bless you that you may attain that testimony, that high spiritual state, which will make all who attain it ready to enter through the veil into the presence of God, our Eternal Father.

Thank you, Brethren and our fellow workers of the General Authorities, for the messages you have given during this conference. You have been blessed. Thank you, brethren and sisters, here especially in this great Tabernacle, for your reverent attitude in every session. May you go home now with your children to your neighbors, and radiate that high spirit of love, brotherhood, virtue, integrity, which will lead them to investigate the gospel of Jesus Christ and eventually accept those principles, that they too, someday, may realize what it is to be "partakers of the divine nature," I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

There will be a meeting at four thirty this afternoon of Temple Presidencies in the Salt Lake Temple.

Tonight the Deseret Sunday School Conference will convene in the Salt Lake Tabernacle at seven o'clock. All Sunday School workers should be in attendance. Others are cordially invited. We are informed by the Superintendent that provision will be made for overflow audiences in the Assembly Hall and in Barratt Hall.

The singing for this afternoon, as this morning, has been furnished by the Tabernacle Choir. We have said so often, "thank you," but we say it this afternoon with even greater appreciation. God bless you for the great service you are rendering to this Church and to the nation! I am sure the Lord will bless you individually and collectively.

The Choir will now favor us with "Hallelujah Chorus," under Brother Cornwall, and the closing prayer will be offered by Elder Myron L. Western, president of the West Pocatello Stake, after which this Conference will be adjourned for six months.

The Tabernacle Choir sang the "Hallelujah Chorus."

President Myron L. Western of the West Pocatello Stake offered the closing prayer.

Conference adjourned sine die.

The congregational singing for the Conference was conducted by J. Spencer Cornwall and Richard P. Condie, Conductor and Assistant Conductor respectively, of the Tabernacle Choir.

The choral music for the Friday sessions was furnished by the Brigham Young University Combined Chorus, with Norman Gulbrandsen conducting at the morning meeting, and Newel B. Weight at the afternoon meeting.

The music for the Saturday morning and afternoon meetings was furnished by the Institute of Religion Chorus from the University of Utah, David Austin Shand conducting.

At the General Priesthood Meeting the choral music was furnished by the Tabernacle Choir Male Chorus, J. Spencer Cornwall director.

CHURCH OF THE AIR

Columbia Broadcasting System's Church of the Air was presented at 7:30 a.m., Sunday, April 7, 1957. The program was as follows:

The Tabernacle Choir, under the direction of J. Spencer Cornwall, furnished the music for this service, with Alexander Schreiner at the organ. Richard L. Evans was the announcer.

Music: Organ and humming choir: "Sweet Is the Work."

Announcer: The Church of the Air is presented by CBS Radio so that representatives of many faiths may speak to a nationwide congregation. Today's service, in connection with the Annual General Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, comes to you transcribed from the Mormon Tabernacle on Temple Square, through the facilities of Station KSL in Salt Lake City, Utah. Our speaker is Elder Marion G. Romney, lawyer and distinguished public servant, and Member of the Council of the Twelve Apostles of the Church. Music is by the Tabernacle Choir directed by J. Spencer Cornwall, with Alexander Schreiner at the organ.

The Choir opens with Alexander Kopyloff's setting for these words from the Psalms: "Hear my cry, O God; attend unto my pray'r; Unto Thee, O Lord, do I lift up my soul . . . Hear my cry, O God; Attend unto my pray'r."

(The Choir sang: "Hear My Cry."—Kopyloff.)

Announcer: Now from the Tabernacle Choir we hear one of the hymn tunes of Evan Stephens, with the words of Isaac Watts: "Praise ye the Lord! My heart shall join in work so pleasant, so divine . . ."

(The Choir sang: "Praise Ye the Lord."—Stephens.)

Announcer: We now hear on this Church of the Air Service Elder Marion G. Romney, lawyer, Assistant Manager-Director of the Church Welfare Program, and Member of the Council of the Twelve Apostles of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, frequently referred to as the Mormon Church. Elder Romney has titled today's talk: "The Voice of the Spirit."

ELDER MARION G. ROMNEY

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

Fellow worshippers at Columbia's Church of the Air: What I have in mind to say about "The Voice of the Spirit," our theme for this morning assumes the premise that the Biblical doctrine of revelation, signifying the making known of divine truth by communication from heaven, is in fact a reality.

The great universal and basic truths with respect to God and men, and their relationship to each other, have been revealed and have been recorded in the scriptures in every dispensation. The identity of God and the origin of men was revealed by the Father Himself.

" . . . I, God, created man in mine own image, in the image of mine Only Begotten created I him; male and female created I them." (Moses 2:27.)

" . . . I ascend unto my Father, and your Father; and to my God, and your God," (John 20:17.) said Jesus to the sorrowing Mary.

The Apostle Paul declared:

" . . . in Him [God] we live, and move, and have our being . . . For we are also His offspring." (Acts 17:28.)

The destiny of man, which is to rise from the grave in resurrection to live forever, has also been revealed, as has the fact that as a son of God he is endowed with the potential to reach the perfection of his Heavenly Father, provided he successfully passes the test of mortality.

The scriptures further reveal that God, having placed us in mortality to meet this test, did not leave us in ignorance, confusion and despair to find our way by chance, but that from the very beginning He has made known for our benefit the gospel of Jesus Christ, His divine plan for our salvation and exaltation. These great, basic truths were given by revelation which came "... not in old time by the will of man: but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." (II Peter 1:21.)

Now I am painfully aware that Christianity does not today evidence a uniform understanding of the foregoing basic doctrines. The scores of churches with their varied creeds and different interpretations seem to lead away from, rather than toward, that glorious consummation foreshadowed by Paul when all shall "... come in the unity of the faith, ..." (Eph. 4:13.) This confusion, tragic as it is, does not however, disprove the thesis that the doctrines came by revelation and declare the word of God. What it proves is that the conflicting interpretations of these basic revelations are being made in the feeble, flickering light of man's wisdom. This naturally brings confusion, because the things of God cannot be understood through the learning of men. You will recall how Paul pressed this point.

"... Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him."

That is to say, the things of God cannot be comprehended through the natural senses of man.

"But," he continues, "God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit: for the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God."

"For what man knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of man which is in him? even so the things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God." (I Cor. 2:9-11.)

Now if this doctrine of Paul's be true, and we witness that it is true, there must be personal revelation, that is, revelation to individuals, by which they may understand the basic revelations and receive soul-satisfying confirmation as to their divinity. That there is such a "Voice of the Spirit," the scriptures clearly affirm.

For example:

"When Jesus came into the coasts of Caesarea Philippi, he asked his disciples, saying, Whom do men say that I the Son of man am?

"And they said, Some say that thou art John the Baptist: some, Elias; and others, Jeremias, or one of the prophets."

"He saith unto them, But whom say ye that I am?

"And Simon Peter answered and said, Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God."

"And Jesus answered and said unto him, Blessed art thou, Simon Barjona: for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven." (Matt. 16:13-17.) Here the Redeemer Himself declares that Peter received from His Father in Heaven by revelation the knowledge that Jesus was the Christ, the Son of the living God. Why did not the others know who He was? They who said he was John the Baptist, Elias, Jeremias, or some other of the prophets, why did they not know the identity of Jesus? Obviously, it was because His identity had not been revealed to them by "the Voice of the Spirit" as it had been to Peter. Until it was so revealed they could not know Him, for "... no man can ... [know] that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost." (I Cor. 12:3.)

That this "Voice of the Spirit" is available to all who will receive it, is apparent from the universal call and promise of Jesus.

"Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden," He said, "and I will give you rest." (Matt. 11:28.)

And again:

"Blessed are all they who do hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be filled with the Holy Ghost." (3 Nephi 12:6; Matt. 5:6.)

Since God has revealed all things essential for man's guidance through mortality to his glorious destiny, and has provided that men individually by the "Voice of the Spirit" may receive personal revelation to enlighten their understandings and confirm to them the truth of God's revealed word, the all-important question arises, "How can we individually attune our ears to that Voice, so indispensable to our comprehension and appreciation of these things so vital to our eternal lives?"

From the scriptures we draw the answer: first, prayerfully search the scriptures, and second, obey the commandments therein written.

No principle of the Gospel is more clearly taught than that God will reward the sincere seeker. It was Jesus Himself who, in the following words, gave specific assurance that such reward includes the gift of the Spirit.

"... Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you," He said.

"... For everyone that asketh receiveth; and he that seeketh findeth; and to him that knocketh it shall be opened."

To emphasize this important truth, He put the following question and added the conclusion:

"If a son shall ask bread of any of you that is a father, will he give him a stone? or if he ask a fish, will he for a fish give him a serpent?"

"If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children: how much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him?" (Luke 11:9-11, 13.)

As to searching the scriptures, you will remember that to them who sought His life because He said, "that God was his Father," Jesus declared, "Ye have neither heard his voice ... nor seen His shape. And ye have not his word abiding in you; for whom he hath sent, him ye believe not." Then He told them that if they would learn of Him, they should, "Search the scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life: and they are they which testify of me." Continuing He pointed out that a search of the scriptures would reveal to them that Moses himself, whom they professed to believe, would condemn them for rejecting Him. "For," He concluded, "he wrote of me." (John 5.)

Luke commends the Jews of Berea as being, "... more noble than those in Thessalonica, ... [because they] searched the scriptures daily, ... whether the word of God was so. As a result, 'many of them believed.'" (Acts 17: 10-12.)

If we will add to our prayerful searching of the scriptures, obedience to the commandments therein revealed, we shall assuredly obtain "the Voice of the Spirit." For Jesus said, "... My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me. If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself." (John 7:16-17.) Now there is just one source from which such knowledge can come, and that is from God. And there is just one way in which it can come, and that is by "the Voice of the Spirit."

To the men of Judea and others dwelling at Jerusalem who, pricked in their hearts by the powerful witness borne by the Apostles that Jesus was the Christ, cried out, "... Men and brethren, what shall we do?" Peter answered:

"... Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost.

"For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call." (Acts 2.)

In these two short paragraphs, Peter covered three phases of this important matter. He specified two of the commandments which must be obeyed, i.e. repentance and baptism, He named the chief agent of "the Voice of the Spirit," the Holy Ghost, and he declared the promise to be universal.

Never has the Lord required one of us to rely solely upon the witness of another. This voice of the Spirit enabling each individual to know for himself is as much a part of God's plan for the salvation of men as is the principle of free agency. He has endowed His children with both free agency and "the Voice of the Spirit" and He puts upon each of them the responsibility for the proper use of these endowments. The Lord has always urged His children to obtain a knowledge and witness of the truth for themselves.

In conclusion I give you my own witness. By "the Voice of the Spirit" I have learned and know that the things I have said this day are true. I know that God is a personal being in whose image men are fashioned. I know that He is our Father, that we are His children, that as such we are endowed with the potential to eventually come to Him. I know that mortality is a necessary phase of our development, that according to the Father's divine plan the earth was created for our habitation, that we were sent here to receive physically bodies and to be tested to see if walking by faith we will keep His commandments.

I further know that through prayerfully searching the scriptures and through obeying God's commands as therein written, we may individually be led safely through life by "the Voice of the Spirit" according to the divine and glorious, soul-satisfying promise that:

"... the Spirit giveth light to every man that cometh into the world; and the Spirit enlighteneth every man through the world, that hearkeneth to the voice of the Spirit.

"And [that] every one that hearkeneth to the voice of the Spirit cometh unto God, even the Father." (D. & C. 84:46-47.)

God grant that we may all so hearken and be so enlightened through the world, I humbly pray.

(The Choir sang: "For the Strength of the Hills."—Stephens.)

Announcer: From the hymns of Evan Stephens the Choir has sung: "For the Strength of the Hills we bless Thee, Our God, our Father's God."

And now the Tabernacle Choir closes with Campbell-Tipton's setting for a text from the 9th Psalm: "I will give thanks unto the Lord; with my whole heart will I praise Thee, O God . . . For Thou hast not forsaken them that love Thee—I will give Thanks unto the Lord."

(The Choir sang: "I Will Give Thanks," Campbell-Tipton; and "I'm a Pilgrim, I'm a Stranger," Robertson.)

Music: Organ and humming choir: "Sweet Is the Work."

Announcer: You have been attending CBS Radio's Church of the Air. Today's service, in connection with the Annual General Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, came to you transcribed from the Mormon Tabernacle on Temple Square through the facilities of Station KSL in Salt Lake City, Utah. Our speaker was Elder Marion G. Romney, a Member of the Council of the Twelve Apostles of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Music was by the Tabernacle Choir, directed by J. Spencer Cornwall. Alexander Schreiner was at the organ.

SALT LAKE MORMON TABERNACLE CHOIR AND ORGAN BROADCAST

The following broadcast, written and announced by Richard L. Evans, and originating with Station KSL, Salt Lake City, was presented from 9:30 to 10:00 a.m. Sunday, April 7, 1957, through the courtesy and facilities of the Columbia Broadcasting System's network, throughout the United States, parts of Canada, and through other facilities to several points overseas. The broadcast was as follows:

(The organ played, "As the Dew From Heaven Distilling," and on signal the Choir and organ broke into the hymn, "Gently Raise the Sacred Strain," singing the words to the end of the second line, and humming to end of verse for announcer's background.)

Announcer: Once more we welcome you within these walls with music and the spoken word from the Crossroads of the West.

The CBS Radio Network and its affiliated stations bring you at this hour another presentation from Temple Square in Salt Lake City, with J. Spencer Cornwall conducting the Tabernacle Choir, Alexander Schreiner, Tabernacle Organist, and the spoken word by Richard Evans.

We begin with music from Mendelssohn's "St. Paul" with words selected from scripture: "Rise up arise, rise and shine for thy light comes, and the glory of the Lord doth appear upon thee. Behold now, total darkness covereth the kingdoms, and gross darkness the people. But . . . the glory of the Lord appeareth upon thee."

(The Choir sang: "Rise Up, Arise."—Mendelssohn.)

Announcer: At the Tabernacle Organ on Temple Square today Alexander Schreiner turns to the dramatic and moving "Toccata in C Minor" by Leon Boellman.

(Organ selection: "Toccata in C Minor."—Boellman.)

Announcer: With the Women's Chorus of the Tabernacle Choir we turn now to music from Mendelssohn's Elijah, with the comforting, strengthening words of the 121st Psalm: "Lift thine eyes, O lift thine eyes unto the mountains whence cometh help. My help cometh from the Lord, the maker of Heaven and earth. He will not suffer thy foot to be moved; He that keepeth thee will not slumber." "Lift Thine Eyes, O Lift thine eyes . . ."

(The Women's Chorus of the Choir sang: "Lift Thine Eyes."—Mendelssohn.)

Announcer: The Tabernacle Choir now sings from the 130th Psalm, with the music of John E. West and the pleading, moving words of a prayer for strength for peace—and repentance: "Out of the deep have I called unto Thee, Lord, hear my voice . . . For there is mercy with Thee . . . Out of the Deep have I called unto Thee, O Lord."

(The Choir sang: "Out of the Deep."—West.)

Announcer:

In a single short sentence Thomas Carlyle suggests a searching subject: "Why tell me that a man is a fine speaker," he said, "if it is not the truth that he is speaking?"<sup>1</sup> To paraphrase Carlyle's question: Why tell me that a man is a fine teacher, if it is not the truth that he is teaching? This calls up the question as to the trust of teaching, and also the question as to what makes a good teacher. All of us are well aware that teaching is more than a matter of academic credentials. And most fortunate are they who in a whole long lifetime have found a few great and good and effective teachers to touch and transform their lives. The fact is that "a teacher not only teaches his subject, but he also teaches himself"<sup>2</sup>—by which we mean that what he is inside himself is inevitably mixed with his subject matter and carries over to his students in some measure. Yet often in academic practice and procedure a student registers for a course, not knowing which of several teachers he will be assigned to. And, to put it on a very homely level, it is almost as if he were buying ungraded goods: for all of us, from our own experience, can testify that the teacher teaches not only subjects, but also teaches what he is inside himself. One might think, for example, that such an impersonal subject as mathematics might be taught with about the same result by anyone who has the academic credentials. But the personality, the interest (or lack of it), the sympathetic attitude (or lack of it), and the aptness of explanation make much difference even in seemingly so set a subject as mathematics. And some of us could testify that we have seen even dead languages made to live by the warmth and sincerity and magic touch of a dedicated teacher, whose very life affects every subject he touches, every student he teaches. And often it is not so much subjects about which we need be concerned, but teachers, and what they do in the molding of minds: for the same subject can be taught with a difference between daylight and darkness. And this is true of all teachers, weekdays and Sundays, professional and volunteer teachers, wherever and whenever teachers teach: for teachers have a real responsibility for all ideas and all ideals and for all their impressions upon the pupil. What the student is made to see and feel and sense, and every innuendo, is all part of the teaching process. To be a teacher is a sacred trust, and in a very real sense, the teacher is responsible for the total effect of his teaching.

(Organ selection: "Cradle Song." (Berceuse)—Arensky.)

Announcer: With Dr. Schreiner at the Tabernacle Organ we have heard the quietly moving phrases of a Berceuse, a tender "Cradle Song" by Arensky.

And now the Choir closes with M. Thomas Cousins' moving and dramatic setting for the 57th Psalm: "I will praise Thee, O Lord among the people, I will sing unto Thee among the nations . . . Let Thy glory be above all the earth, Glorious everlasting!"

(The Choir sang: "Glorious Everlasting."—Cousins.)

Announcer: Once more we leave you within the shadows of the everlasting hills. May peace be with you, this day—and always.

This concludes the 1442nd presentation continuing the 28th year of this traditional broadcast from the Mormon Tabernacle on Temple Square, brought to you by CBS Radio and its affiliated stations, originating with Radio Station KSL in Salt Lake City.

J. Spencer Cornwall conducted the Tabernacle Choir with its three-hundred seventy-five voices. Alexander Schreiner was at the organ. The spoken word by Richard Evans.

In another seven days, at this same hour, music and the spoken word will be heard once more from the Crossroads of the West.

FIRST DAY

MORNING MEETING

The opening session of the Conference convened in the great Tabernacle Friday morning, April 4, at 10 o'clock, with President David O. McKay presiding and conducting.

The Brigham Young University Combined Choruses furnished the choral music for this session.

President McKay made the following introductory remarks:

President David O. McKay:

This is the opening session of the One Hundred Twenty-Eighth Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square in Salt Lake City.

All the General Authorities of the Church are in attendance.

Elder Joseph Anderson is Clerk of the Conference.

For the convenience of those who are unable to enter the building, we announce that these services, and all general sessions of the Conference, will be broadcast in the Assembly Hall and in Barratt Hall by television. The general sessions of this Conference will be broadcast as a public service over television and radio stations throughout the West. The names of these stations have already been announced to the television and the radio audience. To the owners and managers of these various stations we express our sincere appreciation for this great public service so generously extended.

To the large audience assembled in the Tabernacle, the overflow gathering in the Assembly Hall and Barratt Hall, and to the untold thousands comprising the television and radio audiences, in behalf of the First Presidency, the Council of the Twelve, and other General Authorities, we bid you a hearty welcome to this, the One Hundred Twenty-Eighth Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

Any important messages or calls that come to us for persons supposed to be in attendance at the sessions of this Conference will be announced at the dismissal of the meetings over the public address system on the grounds.

The Brigham Young University Combined Choruses will furnish the music today and it is a joy to have this group present this morning.

The beautiful daffodils that decorate this building have come from the Puyallup Valley Daffodil Festival, Incorporated, of Tacoma, Washington, in cooperation with the presidency of the Tacoma Stake. We also wish to express heartfelt thanks for these glorious calla lilies which have been sent to us by the High Priests of the Oakland-Berkeley Stake, California. The fragrant sweet peas have been sent by the Indian children of the Fort McDowell, Arizona, Indian Reservation. We express deep appreciation for these beautiful flowers which have been sent voluntarily by these three groups.

The following cable has just been received from the members of the Church in the Southern Far East Mission, Hong Kong, China: "Saints in Hong Kong, Formosa, the Philippine Islands and Guam send greetings at Conference time. We fully realize that there is no barrier to time and space when there is unity of purpose and spiritual communication. We look forward with anticipation to your words of advice. May the Lord bless you." Signed by H. Grant Heaton, President, Southern Far East Mission.

Two plane-loads of Servicemen from Fort Campbell, Kentucky, and Seward Airforce Base, Tennessee, have come by air with the cooperation of the military, to attend these services.

We acknowledge the presence of the following distinguished visitors—there may be others, but these have been handed in, and we extend welcome to you. We are glad to welcome our fellow worker, Elder Ezra Taft Benson, United States Secretary of Agriculture; Arthur V. Watkins, United States Senator; Wallace F. man; Ernest L. Wilkinson, President of the Brigham Young University; President A. Ray Olpin of the University of Utah; J. Elliott Cameron, Director of the Snow College; E. Allen Bateman, State Superintendent of Public Instruction; and perhaps others whom I am sure we may not see. I would like to mention, also, the presence of Mr. Elmaar H. Bakken, Director of the Division of Relationships, National Council, Boy Scouts of America, from New Brunswick, New Jersey.

We received a telegram this morning from Mayor Adiel F. Stewart, who had another appointment and is unable to be present, but who sends his regrets at not being able to be present and his best wishes for a successful Conference.

We also acknowledge the presence of our stake presidencies, bishoprics, temple presidencies, and general auxiliary officers. We have before us, also, our mission presidents from the United States, Mexico, Central America, Canada, and Hawaii.

To all we extend a hearty welcome, and express satisfaction and pleasure in your presence and your cooperative spirit in these sessions. The singing for this morning's session, as already announced, will be furnished by the Brigham Young University Combined Choruses with Elder John R. Halliday conducting, and Elder Alexander Schreiner at the organ.

We shall open this service by the Brigham Young University Combined Choruses singing, "How Beautiful Are The Feet Of Him," to be conducted by Elder Halliday. The opening prayer will be offered by Elder A. Hamer Reiser, formerly president of the British Mission and president of the Sugar House Stake.

Singing by the Brigham Young University Combined Choruses, "How Beautiful Are the Feet of Him."

Elder A. Hamer Reiser, president of the Sugar House Stake, offered the invocation.

President David O. McKay:

The invocation was just offered by Elder A. Hamer Reiser, formerly president of the British Mission and now president of the Sugar House Stake. The Brigham Young University Combined Choruses will now sing, "O My Father," the solo by Sister Janice Bailey, conducted by Elder John R. Halliday.

Selection by the Brigham Young University Combined Choruses, "O My Father."

PRESIDENT DAVID O. MCKAY

May I say to these students that their presence and especially their inspiring singing add much to the sacredness of this assembly. It is glorious to have several hundred students sing with such spirit and devotion. We are proud of them and of the university from which they come. We appreciate the co-operation of President Wilkinson, members of the faculty, and the students in postponing their regular day's work in school to join in this worship.

It is over fifty years since I stood here for the first time as one of the General Authorities of the Church. I remember well then my trembling and humility at facing such an audience and accepting a position as one of the leaders. The passing of a half a century has made it no easier to face this vast audience and to realize the responsibility that one holds in discharging such a responsibility. This morning, as then and during the intervening years, I solicit your sympathy and your prayers.

A year has passed since we met on such an occasion. In behalf of the First Presidency I bid you welcome, not only those who are here in the Tabernacle, the Assembly Hall, and other surrounding halls, but also the vast audience listening in over radio and television. We are very happy indeed that you are taking time out to participate in the general conference of the Church.

We extend welcome especially to the 31,817 converts of the Church during this past year. That group alone will constitute six stakes of five thousand each. We bid you welcome and trust that you, with all others listening in, will realize the added responsibility which is yours as you assume the responsibility of membership in the Church of Christ.

We wish to commend the missionaries in the stakes and in the field who have been instrumental in bringing these added numbers to the Church of Christ—six new stakes, more than that if we limit the number to three thousand each.

"And if it so be that you should labor all your days in crying repentance unto this people, and bring, save it be one soul unto me, how great shall be your joy with him in the kingdom of my Father!" (D & C 18:15.)

And as you bring many souls, how much joy you will experience. We commend those who have been diligent during the past year in carrying the message of glad tidings to so many people.

I shall not take time to report the advance in priesthood work, in auxiliary work, and other phases of the Church, but you may feel gratified indeed with the work of the past year.

It has been difficult for me to put even in outline the message that I have had in my heart for the people of the Church and the people of the world. There is a saying by Paul, that "to be carnally minded is death; but to be spiritually minded is life and peace." (Rom. 8:6.)

Carnal relates, as you know, to the physical. It includes sensual. But we have in mind this morning the physical surroundings and our animal instincts, the anger that comes to us, the unpleasant words that are spoken, making life unpleasant, rather than emphasizing the spiritual side, the real side of our nature.

The text was suggested several weeks ago, particularly emphasized at that time, by a report that came to me of unpleasantness in a home, and I wondered why we cannot emphasize spiritual attitudes in our homes instead of unpleasant attitudes; why, having before us all the admonitions of the Lord, all the opportunities offered by the Church, we cannot express spiritual attitudes every day of our lives. What good is religion if it does not make our daily lives better? Why need there be emphasis put upon the carnal side of our natures? True, that is the natural reaction for all animals. But having in our possession the high principles of the gospel as revealed through Christ, why cannot members of the Church at least in the home, in school, in all their associations, emphasize the spiritual side of their natures instead of the carnal side?

I learned through a letter of a condition which I think, so far as members of the Church are concerned, is absolutely inexcusable. A husband and wife quarreling—the husband demeaning himself to such an extent as to curse his wife, and in a mad fit of anger overturning a table spread with dishes—a creature in the form of a man harboring the nature of an animal! A man in such a mental state that the anger itself does him more harm than the condition which aroused his anger, and in reality, brothers and sisters, he suffers more from the vexation than he does from the acts that aroused that vexation.

I wonder how long it will take us to realize that in matters of temper nothing can bring us damage but ourselves—we are responsible for what helps us and for what injures us—that the harm that each one sustains he carries about with him, and never is he a real sufferer but by his own fault. I think you get that thought, and yet the tendency of each one is to blame somebody else, the wife blaming the husband, the husband blaming the wife, children finding fault with the parents when the fault lies with themselves. If in the dignity of manhood such a man would cease to magnify his troubles; would face things as they really are; recognize blessings that immediately surround him; cease to entertain disparaging wishes for another; how much more of a man he would be, to say nothing about being a better husband and a more worthy father! A man who cannot control his temper is not very likely to control his passion, and no matter what his pretensions in religion, he moves in daily life very close to the animal plane.

Religion is supposed to lift us on a higher level. Religion appeals to the spirit in man, the real person, and yet how often notwithstanding our possessing a testimony of the truth, we yield to the carnal side of our nature. The man who quarrels in his home, banishes from his heart the spirit of religion. A mother in this Church who would light a cigaret in the home is yielding to the carnal side of her nature. How far below the ideal of the Church! Any quarreling in the home is antagonistic to the spirituality which Christ would have us develop within us, and it is in our daily life that these expressions have their effect.

Man is making great progress in science and invention, greater perhaps than ever before, but is not making comparable progress in character and spirituality.

I read awhile ago of a remark of General Omar N. Bradley, formerly Army's Chief of Staff, who on one occasion said: "With the monstrous weapons man already has, humanity is in danger of being trapped in this world by its moral adolescence. Our knowledge of science has clearly outstripped our capacity to control it.

"We have too many men of science; too few men of God. We have grasped the mystery of the atom and rejected the Sermon on the Mount. Man is stumbling blindly through a spiritual darkness while toying with the precarious secrets of life and death.

"The world has achieved brilliance without wisdom, power without conscience. Ours is a world of nuclear giants and ethical infants. We know more about war than we know about peace, more about killing than we know about living."

Our living comes hourly and daily in the home, in our association in business affairs, in our meeting strangers. It is the attitude of the person during the daily contacts by which we show whether we are appealing to the carnal or to the spiritual within us and within those with whom we associate. It is a daily matter. I do not know whether we can get the thought over or not. And it is within the power of each one, especially members of the Church who make such pretensions. You cannot imagine a real, true Christian, and especially a member of the Mormon Church, swearing at his wife. Why, it is inconceivable that such a thing as that could be in a home and especially with children around. How can anyone justify parents quarreling in front of children! In the instance to which I have referred the man (I should say the brute) even struck his wife. Such a thing should never be. That is out of the life of Church members.

Christ has asked us to develop the spiritual within us.

Man's earthly existence is but a test as to whether he will concentrate his efforts, his mind, his soul upon things which contribute to the comfort and gratification of his physical nature or whether he will make as his life's purpose the acquisition of spiritual qualities.

"Every noble impulse, every unselfish expression of love, every brave suffering for the right; every surrender of self to something higher than self; every loyalty to an ideal; every unselfish devotion to principle; every helpfulness to humanity; every act of self-control; every fine courage of the soul, undefeated by pretence or policy, but by being, doing, and living of good for the very good's sake—that is spirituality."

The spiritual road has Christ as its ideal—not the gratification of the physical, for he that will save his life, yielding to that first gratification of a seeming need, will lose his life, lose his happiness, the pleasure of living at this present time. If he would seek the real purpose of life, the individual must live for something higher than self. He hears the Savior's voice, saying: "I am the way, the truth, and the life." (John 14:6.) Following that voice he soon learns that there is no one great thing which he can do to attain happiness or eternal life. He learns that "life is made up not of great sacrifices or duties, but of little things in which smiles and kindness and small obligations given habitually are what win and preserve the heart and secure comfort."

Spirituality, our true aim, is the consciousness of victory over self, and of communion with the Infinite. Spirituality impels one to conquer difficulties and acquire more and more strength. To feel one's faculties unfolding, and truth expanding in the soul, is one of life's sublimest experiences.

"The thing a man does practically lay to heart," says Carlyle, "and know for certain concerning his vital relations to this mysterious Universe, and his duty and destiny there, that is in all cases the primary thing for him, and creatively determines all the rest. . . . And, I say, if you tell me what that is, you tell me to a very great extent what the man is, what the kind of things he will do is."

The man who sets his heart upon the things of the world, who does not hesitate to cheat his brother, who will lie for gain, who will steal from his neighbor, or, who, by slander, will rob another of his reputation, lives on a low, animal plane of existence, and either stifles his spirituality or permits it to lie dormant. To be thus carnally minded is to be spiritually dead.

On the other hand, keeping in mind our daily vocations, the man who tills the soil, garners his fruit, increases his flocks and his herds, having in mind making better the world in which he lives, desiring to contribute to the happiness of his family and his fellows, and who does all things for the glory of God, will, to the extent that he denies himself for these ideals, develop his spirituality. Indeed, only to the extent that he does this will he rise above the plane of the animal world.

Years ago we read in school the following from Rudolph Eucken:

"I cannot," he says, "conceive of the development of a powerful personality, a deep-rooted, profound mind, of a character rising above this world, without his having experienced a divinity in life above, beyond the world of sensible reality, and as surely as we create in ourselves a life in contrast to pure nature, growing by degrees and extending to the heights of the true, the good, and the beautiful, we may have the same assurance of that religion called universal."

Paul, you will remember, expresses it more specifically:

"But if ye bite and devour one another, take heed that ye be not consumed one of another.

"This I say then, Walk in the Spirit, and ye shall not fulfil the lust of the flesh.

"For the flesh lusteth against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh: and these are contrary the one to the other: so that ye cannot do the things that ye would.

"But if ye be led of the Spirit, ye are not under the law.

"Now the works of the flesh," he says, "are manifest, which are these; Adultery. . . ."

The young man who leaves his home at night having in mind anything that would injure either the character or the life or the reputation of a young woman with whose company he is entrusted, is carnal-minded instead of spiritual-minded.

". . . fornication, uncleanness, . . .

". . . hatred, variance, emulations . . . strife, seditions. . . .

"Envyings . . . drunkenness, revellings, and such like: of the which I tell you before, as I have also told you in time past, that they which do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God.

"But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith,

"Meekness, temperance: against such there is no law.

"And they that are Christ's have crucified the flesh with the affections and lusts.

"If we live in the Spirit, let us also walk in the Spirit," daily, hourly. (Gal. 5:15-25.)

It can be done, and it should be done in every home of the Latter-day Saint Church.

With all our boasted civilization there never was a time when spiritual awakening and spiritual ideals were more needed. Civilization has grown too complex for the human mind to visualize or to control. Unless mankind come to a speedy realization that the higher and not the baser qualities of man must be developed, the present status of civilization is in jeopardy. Life on the animal plane has as its ideal the survival of the fittest, crush or be crushed, mangle or be mangled, kill or be killed. For man, with his intelligence, this is a sure road to anguish and death.

About fifty years ago, Lord Balfour,

Friday, April 4

First Day

Prime Minister of Great Britain, delivered a lecture in the McEwen Hall of the University of Edinburgh on the subject, "The Moral Values Which Unite the Nations." In an interesting and convincing manner, the gentleman presented four fundamental ties that unite the different nations of the world: (1) "Common Knowledge"; (2) "Common Commercial Interests"; (3) "The Inter-course of Diplomatic Relationship"; (4) "The Bonds of Human Friendship." The audience greeted his masterful address with a great outburst of applause.

As the presiding officer arose to express his appreciation and that of the audience, a Japanese student who was doing graduate work at the University stood up, and leaning over the balcony, said, "But, Mr. Balfour, what about Jesus Christ?"

Mr. Robin E. Spear, to whom Professor Lang related this incident, writes:

"One could have heard a pin drop in the hall. Everyone felt at once the justice of the rebuke. The leading statesman of the greatest Christian empire in the world had been dealing with the different ties that are to unite mankind, and had omitted the one fundamental and essential bond. And everyone felt, too, the dramatic element in the situation—that the reminder of his forgetfulness had come from a Japanese student from a far-away non-Christian land."

Life, brethren and sisters, is an ever-flowing river on which one embarks at birth and sails, or is rowed, for fifty, seventy, eighty, or more years. Every year that passes goes into an eternity, never to return; yet each carries with it into the past no personal weakness, no bodily ailment, no sorrow, no laughter, no thought, no noble aspirations, no hope, no ambition: all these with every trait of character, every inclination, every tendency remain with each individual. In other words, our lives are made up of daily thoughts and actions. We may resolve to let all our sorrows and weaknesses go with the passing time, but we know that every thought, every inclination has left its indelible impression upon our souls, and we shall have to deal with it today.

So live, then, that each day will find you conscious of having wilfully made no person unhappy. No one who has lived a well-spent day will have a sleepless night because of a stricken conscience. Daniel Webster once said that the greatest thought that had ever occupied his mind was the realization of the fact that, and I quote, "there is no evil we cannot face or flee from but the consequences of duty disregarded. A sense of obligation pursues us ever. It is omnipresent like the Deity. If we take to ourselves the wings of the morning and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea, duty performed, or duty violated is still with us, for our happiness or our misery. If we say that night shall cover us, in the darkness as in the light, our obligations are yet with us. We cannot escape their power nor fly from their presence. They are with us in this life, will be with us at its close, and in that scene of inconceivable solemnity which lies yet farther on, we shall find ourselves followed by the consciousness of duty—to pain us forever if it has been violated, and to console us so far as God has given us grace to perform it. Weighed against conscience the world itself is but a bubble. For God himself is in conscience lending it authority."

Mankind needs a spiritual awakening, brethren and sisters; the carnal minded are causing heartaches and threatening the extinction of the race.

But the sun of hope is rising. Thinking men and women are recognizing the need of man's looking up towards the heavens instead of groveling in response to the animal instinct. One man, commenting upon this, said that if all the destroyers of civilization could be eliminated, and the traits of the rest of us that come from destructive strains could be eliminated, an approach to the millennium some hundred years hence is by no means inconceivable.

"Can you imagine," he continues, "what this country would be like if ten or twenty billion dollars a year" (that is the amount expended to take care of our criminals) "were added to our national income? That would mean five hundred dollars, or one thousand dollars per family; but the average today, even if we include Henry Ford, is only twenty-five hundred, or three thousand dollars. What would happen if that sum were increased by twenty or even forty percent all around? Even if you cannot imagine the result, do you realize what it would be like to feel no need of locking doors and windows, no fear of leaving your car unprotected, no danger that your wife or daughter would be insulted, or you yourself sandbagged if you went out at night, no fear that you would have any uncollectable bills except through accident or unpreventable misfortune, no fear that in political election there would be any bribery, or in politics any graft, and no fear that anyone anywhere was trying to 'do you'—can you imagine all that? It would almost be heaven on earth. Of course, it cannot happen" (someday it will have to happen) "... and yet if all the destroyers of civilization could be eliminated, and if the traits of the rest of us that come from destructive strains could be eliminated, an approach to such a state some hundred years hence is by no means inconceivable."

Spiritual awakening in the hearts of millions of men and women would bring about a changed world. I am hopeful, my brethren and sisters, that the dawning of that day is not far distant. I am conscious, as I hope all of you are, that the responsibility to try to bring about such a day rests upon the priesthood of the Church of Jesus Christ and upon the membership and upon husbands and wives and upon children in Mormon homes.

May that message be felt throughout the conference that we are now holding. We cannot just come and meet and talk about good things and then go home and express our feelings, the feelings of our carnal nature.

My faith in the ultimate triumph of the gospel of Jesus Christ assures me that a spiritual awakening must come. It will come through the acceptance of Jesus Christ and obedience to his gospel and in no other way completely. I believe there never was a time in the history of the world when there was such a need for a united, determined stand to uphold Christ and the restoration of the gospel through the Prophet Joseph Smith as there is today.

God bless you here assembled that we may sense as never before the efficacy of the restored gospel and that we hold as a duty our application of spiritual traits in our daily association with one another in home, in business, in society, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Elder Sterling W. Sill, Assistant to the Twelve, will now speak to us. He will be followed by Elder Spencer W. Kimball.

ELDER STERLING W. SILL

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve Apostles

Since the last general conference it has been my privilege, in company with President and Sister Henry A. Smith, to tour the Central Atlantic States Mission. Our travels took us to Jamestown, Virginia, where during this past year some $25,000,000 has been spent to commemorate the 350th anniversary of the establishment of the first English settlement in America. During this 350 years, there has been built upon this continent the greatest nation, having the highest standard of living, ever known in the world. I have thought many times, what a wonderful investment this $25,000,000 would be if it could help us to understand the source of our blessings and what we might do to preserve them.

As I stood at Jamestown thinking of the wonderful advantages of living in this land of freedom and opportunity, my mind went back to make a comparison with the ancient Hebrews being established in their promised land. Before they crossed the Jordan, God said to them,

Thou shalt inhabit cities which thou didst not build, and thou shalt eat from vines which thou hast not planted, and

Friday, April 4

First Day

thou shalt drink from wells which thou digst not dig. (See Deut. 6:10-11.)

Every American is in that same situation. Certainly there is no one within the sound of my voice who doesn't eat from vines which he did not plant.

Then the Lord said something to the Hebrews that is particularly appropriate to us. He said, "But when thou hast eaten and are full, beware lest thou forget the Lord, thy God." (See ibid., 6:11-12.)

There is a stimulating power derived from remembering our blessings and the source from which they come. Nations, like individuals, in the past have fallen when they have forgotten God. Certainly the greatest danger facing America as we pass this important milestone in our history, is not inferior armaments, and it is not a lagging industrial production, and it is not an inadequate food supply. In fact, it has been said that our national problem is surplus; our national disease is overweight; our national sin is forgetfulness. And the greatest need of our lives is to remember the source of our blessings.

To help ancient Israel remember, the Lord instituted among them the custom of wearing phylacteries. That is, they were required to write out the most important passages of their scripture upon pieces of parchment and then bind them across their foreheads and between their eyes and upon their wrists and around their necks, so that no matter where they were, or what they were doing, these passages would always be in their sight, and consequently in their thoughts.

One of these phylactery passages is recorded in the sixth chapter of Deuteronomy, wherein the Lord pointed out their need by saying:

And thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thine heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy might.

And then he added:

And these words, which I command thee this day, shall be in thine heart:

And thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up.

And thou shalt bind them for a sign upon thine hand, and they shall be as frontlets between thine eyes. (Deut. 6:5-8.)

I suppose that a modern adaptation of this idea would be one that is familiar to some of you husbands. When your wife has wanted you to remember some particular thing, she may have tied a red string on your finger, with a bow on the top so that no matter where you went, or what you were doing, you would always be conscious of the string on your finger and be reminded of the particular thing to be done. We need to make some of our own adaptations of this idea to help us remember God and what he requires at our hands. Our eternal lives depend upon it.

Kipling once wrote what might be called a phylactery prayer, entitled, "The Recessional," in which he repeated over and over this important phrase,

"Lord God of hosts, be with us yet, Lest we forget, lest we forget."

That is, there are certain things that we must remember if our lives are to be successful. One of these is that man's greatest need is for God. And for that reason God made our relationship with him the subject of the first and the greatest of all the commandments. And if we would retain our national and our individual blessings, we should make every day of the year a Memorial Day. To help us understand, and to help us remember, the Lord in our day has given us three great volumes of new scripture. One of these has particularly to do with our land and those who have occupied it before us. In this great American volume of scripture, we learn of the decrees of God which have governed this land and which must always govern the lives of those who occupy it. Without this important information, we are largely strangers in our own land, not being aware of the laws governing our own welfare.

George Washington is often referred to as the "Father of his country." But I would like to suggest the name of another man who might qualify in a more real sense as the "Father of America." After the flood waters had receded from off the face of this land, a little group of people were led by the Lord from the confusion of tongues at Babel, back to this land of promise, to repeople and to restock America with plant and animal life. The Lord said to the brother of Jared, who, under his direction, led this little colony to this new beginning,

... I will go before thee into a land which is choice above all the lands of the earth. (Ether 1:42.)

The Lord gave to the Jaredites many divine decrees concerning this land: that it should be preserved forever as a sanctuary of freedom, that there should be no kings upon this land, that he would be the God of this land, and that whatsoever nation should possess it, from that time henceforth and forever, should serve him, the only true God, or they should be swept off when the fulness of his wrath should come upon them. The Lord said that the fulness of his wrath would come upon them when they were "ripened in iniquity." (See ibid., 2:8-9.)

I would just like to note in passing, that these decrees have never been revoked.

The Jaredites became a great nation and flourished upon this land for approximately nineteen hundred years, or almost the exact length of time that has elapsed since the birth of Jesus to our own day. It was also more than five times the length of the period from the beginnings at Jamestown to the present. The Jaredites loved this land and enjoyed its blessings, as we have done. The Lord promised them that there should be no greater nation on the earth than the one which he should raise up for them upon this land. The Jaredites lived contemporaneously with Babylon, Assyria, China, and the other great nations of that day.

But after they had eaten and were full, they forgot God, and they were destroyed. Other cultures upon this land followed the same pattern and met the same end.

As I stood at Jamestown, I thought how grateful we ought to be in America for this new beginning, this last chance to serve the God of this land, and how carefully we ought to study the divine decrees that control our blessings and destiny. Certainly no one can be familiar with the history of our great nation to date without being acutely aware of the special providential favor which has attended this land from the very beginning. Abraham Lincoln pointed out this remarkable fact in his Thanksgiving Day Proclamation of 1863, which sounds as if it had been dictated by one of the great Book of Mormon prophets who knew, even better than Lincoln, of the special relationship existing between God and this land. President Lincoln said:

We have been the recipients of the choicest bounties of heaven. We have been preserved these many years in peace and prosperity. We have grown in numbers, wealth and power as no other nation has ever grown.

Then he indicated our perennial problem, and he said,

But we have forgotten God. We have forgotten the gracious hand that preserved us in peace and multiplied and enriched and strengthened us, and we have vainly imagined in the deceitfulness of our hearts that all of these blessings were produced by some superior wisdom or virtue of our own. Intoxicated with unbroken success, we have become too self-sufficient to feel the necessity of redeeming and preserving grace, too proud to pray to the God who made us. It behooves us then to humble ourselves before the offended power, to confess our national sins and to pray for clemency and forgiveness.

But in spite of our many weaknesses, and in spite of the mild chastenings that God has administered from time to time in the interests of our reformation, he has still blessed us with the highest standard of living ever known in the world. It is said that in the United States, with some 6 percent of the world's population, we have approximately 50 percent of the telephones, the radios, the automobiles, the television sets, and the other devices of civilization.

But the crowning event in the blessing of America came in the early spring of 1820, when God the Father and his Son, Jesus Christ, reappeared upon this continent in what is probably the greatest divine manifestation ever given in the world. They came to re-establish among men a belief in the God of Genesis, a belief in the God of this land. They came to establish the gospel on this earth for the last time, and to let us know that these timeless decrees of God still govern in this land which we presently possess.

What an important beginning. What an inspiring way to open this age of wonders and enlightenment and opportunity and abundance and freedom, which we know as the Dispensation of the Fulness of Times! Most of the conflicting religions of the present day have been imported into America. They have been brought from Italy and England and Switzerland and Scandinavia and Scotland, Arabia and China and Japan and India. But the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints was born in this chosen land of America to open the greatest and the last of all the dispensations.

But America was a divinely favored land before Columbus and before Jamestown and before the Mormon pioneers. We know, by means of divine revelation, that the Garden of Eden was established in this land. This was the home of many of the greatest prophets who have ever lived. But the greatness of America is not all in the past. This will also be the place of the new Jerusalem. The tenth Article of Faith says that ". . . Zion will be built upon this [the American] continent; that Christ will reign personally upon the earth; . . ." with one of his capitals in this western land, "... that the earth will be renewed and receive its paradisiacal glory." This earth will eventually become the celestial kingdom of God. (See D & C 88:25-26.)

Then even those who have lived here but who have forgotten God, must be cast out; they must live some other place. But those who are entitled to live upon this earth when it is celestialized will then not only enjoy the highest standard of living, but also the highest standard of happiness ever known by man. But all of this is based upon our ability to remember and serve God.

On this important anniversary, we need to remember that we are not the first but the fifth culture that has lived upon this land, each of the other four having been destroyed because they have forgotten God. We must forever keep in mind that our national as well as our individual welfare has been put in our hands, and the law governing our welfare has been clearly stated to us.

We not only have the greatest blessings, but we also have the greatest responsibilities. We have the responsibility to carry the message of the gospel to "every nation and kindred and tongue and people." We have the responsibility of putting the gospel in force in our own lives. We must exercise a kind of leadership corresponding to our opportunities and our blessings. Certainly we must not be content to dwell in the house built by the Pilgrims and the Pioneers. We must make history ourselves. The highest standard of living is important, but it is far more important to have the highest standard of honor and the highest standard of obedience and the highest standard of "remembering." Then our country will be safe and our freedom and our happiness will be secure. Then we may earn the right to live forever in this favored land upon this celestialized earth.

I close with the inspiring poem of Henry Carey,

"America"

My country! 'tis of thee,
Sweet land of liberty,
Of thee I sing;
Land where my fathers died,
Land of the pilgrim's pride,
From every mountain side,
Let freedom ring.

My native country, thee,
Land of the noble, free,
Thy name I love;
I love thy rocks and rills,
Thy woods and templed hills;
My heart with rapture thrills
Like that above.

Let music swell the breeze,
And ring from all the trees,
Sweet freedom's song;
Let mortal tongues awake,
Let all that breathe partake,
Let rocks their silence break,
The sound prolong.

Our father's God! to thee,
Author of liberty,
To thee we sing;
Long may our land be bright
With freedom's holy light,
Protect us by thy might,
Great God, our king!

That we may always remember the source of our blessings, and that we may prove ourselves worthy of him who is their Author, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

We shall now hear from Elder Spencer W. Kimball of the Council of the Twelve. He will be followed by Elder John Longden.

ELDER SPENCER W. KIMBALL

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

My beloved brothers and sisters, first I should like to acknowledge the goodness of the Lord to me.

As I heard the President speak of the converts of the past year, I tried to visualize four huge tabernacles, or one twice as wide and long, as this one, full of all new converts from last year only.

I am conscious this morning of three empty places among our Brethren. I am thinking today of Brother Oscar Kirkham, a great man who has influenced youth tremendously and has given a long life of service. I am remembering Elder Thomas Evans McKay as one like Nathanael, a man without guile. And my mind returns to Elder Adam S. Bennion, our very close colleague, and I think of the scripture which says, "And the child grew, and waxed strong in spirit, filled with wisdom: and the grace of God was upon him." (Luke 2:40.) And then when they went down to Nazareth, it was said of the Lord, again, "And Jesus increased in wisdom and stature, and in favour with God." (Ibid., 2:52.) An already great man, Elder Bennion increased in wisdom, greatness, spirituality. We express to the families of these three men our affection and our sympathy.

In the moments allotted to me may I address my remarks to any here and in the radio and television audience who have not experienced the glow, the warmth, the peace which come to those who see the eternal path clearly and know positively of its correctness, and who are courageously toiling toward those eternal goals.

In experiences of mortality we sometimes suffer from optical illusions; we hear noises that do not exist; we experience nocturnal adventures quite unreal, and distorted; but in the spiritual realm one can have positive certainty, for the Lord has repeated numerous times the definite promise here expressed:

If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself. (John 7:17. Italics added.)

In courts of law the witness is asked to take an oath that the information he is about to give is "the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth," and the statements made are called his "testimony." In spiritual matters, we may likewise have a testimony. This sureness of the spiritual is unique and pertains to the realness of a personal God; the continued active life of the Christ, separate from but like his Father; the divinity of the restoration of the organization and doctrines of God's Church on the earth and the power of the divine, authoritative priesthood given to men, through revelations from God. These can be known as surely as that the sun shines, by every responsible person, and to fail to attain this knowledge is to admit that one has not paid the price. Like academic degrees it is obtained by intense strivings. That soul who is clean through repentance and the ordinances receives it if he desires and reaches for it, investigates conscientiously, studies, and prays faithfully.

A sure knowledge of the spiritual is an open door to rewards attainable and joys unspeakable. To ignore the testimony is to grope in caves of impenetrable darkness; to creep along in fog over hazardous highways. That person is to be pitied who may still be walking in darkness at noonday, who is tripping over obstacles which can be removed and who dwells in the dim flickering candlelight of insecurity and skepticism. The testimony is the electric light illuminating the cavern; the wind and sun dissipating the fog; the power equipment removing boulders from the road. It is the mansion on the hill replacing the shack in the marshes; the harvester shelving the sickle and cradle; the tractor, train, automobile, and plane displacing the ox team. It is the rich nourishing kernels of corn instead of the husks in the trough. It is much more than all else, for—

... this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent. (Ibid., 17:3.)

Eternal life is the greatest gift. To obtain it is not easy. The price is high.

Nicodemus of old inquired the price. The answer perplexed him. Let us interview that good man who came so near and yet evidently missed the mark.

Your name is Nicodemus? You are a member of the powerful sect of the Pharisees? You are a member of the Jewish Sanhedrin? You knew the person from Nazareth called Jesus Christ? You heard his sermons and witnessed his miracles? You looked into his eyes and heard his voice?

You are a good man, Nicodemus, honorable and just, for you will yet defend our Lord before your colleagues, asking he be not condemned without a hearing. You are also generous, for you will yet bring one hundred weight of aloes and myrrh to his burial. You have at least some faith, but have you courage enough to face criticism? You are identified as one who came under cover of darkness. In your senatorial seat you and your colleagues have impressive powers, making laws and controlling destinies.

It is night now. You have not been seen. You are addressing our Lord:

Rabbi, we know that thou art a teacher come from God: for no man can do these miracles that thou doest, except God be with him. (Ibid., 3:2.)

His ready answer wrinkles your brow. This is the simple total answer to the weightiest of all questions.

Verily, verily I say unto thee, Except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God. (Ibid., 3:3.)

You are well versed in the law, Nicodemus, but what of the gospel? To gain eternal life there must be a rebirth, a transformation, and an unburdening self of pride, weaknesses, and prejudice. You must begin as a little child, clean, teachable. You seem not to understand.

"How can a man be born when he is old?" (Ibid., 3:4.) Your question is strange for a learned man. Must you reduce all to human logic? Must everything be rational to your finite, materialistic mind?

He says:

Come unto me, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and . . . ye shall find rest unto your souls. (Matt. 11:28-29.)

He expects you to divest yourself of every foreign thought, act, and inclination, and accept him and live his plan. And the "rest," which is exaltation, will be your glory.

But you still do not seem to understand, Mr. Pharisee. Is it so complex? Are you afraid of what your brother Pharisees may think of you, fearful of losing your exalted place in the Sanhedrin? Or, do you not see? Certainly a little glimpse has been given you. You acknowledged the miracle worker must be sent from God, but the curtain so slightly opened will close again if you do not act upon the new knowledge being offered you.

You are highly educated, my good man. Many sit at your feet to learn. Does your superior training blind you? Must a prophet or a God be measured in the test tubes of a physical laboratory? Can you not accept anything you cannot prove by the rules of the schools in which you studied?

You are not accepting it. The Lord is postulating again the necessary requirements:

Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God. (John 3:3; italics added.)

That total answer came in one sentence of thirteen small words. You are wondering, weighing, Mr. Rationalizer. You seem impressed, but you are bound. How much you do not realize! Did you expect it in eloquent, impressive words? Is it frustrating in its simplicity? You are rationalizing, Sir. You cannot weigh this on the scales of your secular knowledge and training. They are too crude, mundane. You need finer mechanism.

Your question about returning to the mother's womb for rebirth—was it intended as a question, Mr. Intellectual, or to prove your superior logic; or to point out that Christ was irrational; or was it mere perplexity? He knows your professional background and culture and the analytical training you have had. He is so kind and patient. He will explain further in eighty-nine words, sixty-five of which are one-syllable ones:

Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God.

That which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit.

Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again.

The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth; so is every one that is born of the Spirit. (Ibid., 3:5-8.)

How beautiful—how forceful—how positive! Is there excuse to question, to hesitate, to reject? O Nicodemus, this moment of crisis cannot last long. You are on a perilous summit. Your decision can mean the difference between exaltation and a deprivation greater than you know. You had a spark of desire. Why did you extinguish it?

What made you refer to our Master as "a teacher come from God"? Do you not believe in prophets? Have you not all your life waited for a Redeemer? After all his sermons, testimonies, and miracles, is he still only an inspired teacher to you? Could he not be the long-awaited Christ? Have you tried to believe and accept, or are you bound down with fetters of tradition, chains of materialism, and handcuffs of losable prestige? O timid one, awaken, exert yourself, draw back the curtains your training and background have hung over the windows of your soul! You are speaking to no ordinary man, no common philosopher, no mere prophet. You are in the presence of the real Messiah, the great physician, the master psychiatrist, the very Christ. You are questioning the maker of heaven and earth, the Son of God.

Open the curtains, my skeptic brother. Rid yourself of your intellectual conservatism. This is a crucial moment. You are being offered a gift priceless beyond your imagination. Will you let it pass? Talking with Christ, you should be awed to a tremble, quaking in shoeless feet on such holy ground, and on your knees in reverent humility. This is your Lord, your Savior, your Redeemer. Can't you understand, O ye of little faith? Can't you feel his love and kindness and see the sadness and disappointment in those penetrating eyes as he notes your withdrawal? He is saying:

Set aside your pride and arrogance. Cast from you all worldly burdens. Repent of your transgressions, purify your hands, and mind, and heart, believe that I am the bread of life, the waters from the pure spring. Accept me and my gospel; go down into the waters in proper baptism.

Can you envision the cleanliness as one emerges from the watery grave, washed, and the freedom and joy and glory of it? But after all this you still ask, "How can these things be?" Your question astonishes us and brings from the Master this chastisement:

Art thou a master of Israel, and knowest not these things? (John 3:10.)

O my brother, opportunity's doors are closing. Why can't you understand? Too many materialistic obstacles? He knows your influence, wealth, erudition, your exalted place in community, in government, in the powerful church group.

Friday, April 4

First Day

He offers you not a dependent, decaying kingdom like your doomed and dying Judah. He invites you to rule, not as emperor of a temporary world power like Rome, which is destined to crumble as clay, but is offering you citizenship in the kingdom of heaven, eventually to rise in stature and authority until you are a king in your own right with a dominion greater than the combined empires of all the earth.

Your decision seems weighted with earthly treasures and the plaudits of men and the conveniences of affluence. My heart weeps for you, friend Nicodemus. You seem such a good man, philanthropic, kind, generous. You could have been such a power in the Lord's kingdom. You had a spark of desire. It could have been kindled into a living flame. You might have been one of his seventies, to proselyte as an advance agent, or an apostle, or even the President of his Church. You might have filled the vacancy when Matthias was called or have been an apostle to the gentiles with Paul and suffered with him in his perils of the sea, among robbers, in prisons, in his beatings and stonings, and even in his death. How little we realize the doors of opportunity which we oft close with one wrong decision. But the price was too high, wasn't it, man of wealth?

Unwilling that you slip back in your darkness without having every opportunity, Christ will bear you his testimony again. He will not leave you guiltless. You cannot escape the condemnation of this testimony, Mr. Rationalizer. Hear him:

If I have told you earthly things, and ye believe not, how shall ye believe, if I tell you of heavenly things?

For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through him might be saved.

Verily, verily, I say unto thee, We speak that we do know, and testify that we have seen; and ye receive not our witness. (Ibid., 3:12, 17, 11; italics added.)

O Nicodemus, why did you receive not his witness? Why did you not open your heart to understanding? Why did you hesitate when the Redeemer of the world so condescended? Had you humbly taken the first step of repentance and then proper baptism, then would have come to you the Holy Ghost through the laying on of hands by one of his apostles, or he himself might have done it.

The Holy Ghost would have abided with you so long as you merited and would have whispered to you so that you, too, could have exclaimed with your Redeemer,

We speak that [which] we do know, and testify that [which] we have seen. (Ibid., 3:11; italics added.)

And John wrote:

... what he hath seen and heard, that he testifieth; and no man receiveth his testimony. (Ibid., 3:32.)

O my disbeliever brother, the New Testament could have recorded your name countless times instead of thrice. You could have lived forever in the minds and hearts of countless millions. Because of your many abilities you might have been one chosen to walk up the slopes of the Holy Mount of Transfiguration, to have unspeakable revelations, to join others in martyrdom, and rule eternally with Christ.

You might have walked where Jesus walked and stayed where he was staying;
You might have eaten bread and sop and knelt where he was praying;
He might have washed your weary feet and wiped them with his dryer;
He might have laid his precious hands upon your head with Fire.

You might have eased his weary way and wiped away his bleeding;
You might have helped in his defense when he was sorely needing;
Most disappointing words are oft expressed by tongue and writing;
The saddest words, "It might have been" are always the most biting.

Now, my beloved, listening friends, you too are generous and kind. You too are prayerful and religious. But are you also like Nicodemus, burdened down with preconceived and prejudiced notions? Do you think that no good thing can come out of Nazareth, or Palmyra, or Salt Lake City? Are you too biased to accept new truth? Too wealthy and fettered with the cares of this world to accept the difficult demands of Christ's Church? Are you so influential as to fear to prejudice your position or local influence? Are you too weak to accept and carry a load of service? Are you too busy to study and pray and learn of Christ and his program? Are you too materialistically trained to accept the miracles, visions, prophets, and revelations?

If any of you, my listeners, is a modern Nicodemus, I beg of you to grasp the new world of truths. Your Lord Jesus Christ pleads with you:

My true Church is restored to earth with my saving doctrines.

I have placed in authoritative positions apostles and others divinely called, and in leadership a prophet who today receives my divine revelations.

Churches are many, but they are churches of men, not mine.

Credo's are numerous, but they are not of my authorship.

Organizations are everywhere, but they are not organized nor accepted by me.

Pretended and usurping representatives are legion, but I called them not; nor do I recognize their ordinances.

My second coming is near at hand.

... I stand at the door, and knock: if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me.

To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne. . . .

He that hath an ear let him hear. (Rev. 3:20-22.)

This testimony I bear, in the name of Jesus Christ our Master. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Elder Spencer W. Kimball has just spoken to us. He was preceded by Elder Sterling W. Sill, Assistant to the Twelve. We shall now hear Elder John Longden, Assistant to the Twelve.

ELDER JOHN LONGDEN

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve Apostles

Much has been said this morning regarding the Spirit, and I feel that we have felt the Spirit of the Lord here this morning. In order to feel the Spirit of the Lord we must understand God; he must be known to us, and not unknown.

I should like to draw from Holy Writ two experiences, one in the life of the Apostle Paul on Mars' hill and the other in the life of Moses.

You will recall that when Paul visited Mars' hill he said:

For as I passed by, and beheld your devotions, I found an altar with this inscription, TO THE UNKNOWN GOD. Whom therefore ye ignorantly worship, him declare I unto you. (Acts 17:23.)

The following experience in the life of Moses is recorded in Exodus 32:1-8. Moses delayed in coming down from the mount. The children of Israel became restless and said unto Aaron, "Make us gods which shall go before us; this Moses, we know not where he is." So Aaron persuaded them to bring their jewelry, and he fashioned it with a graving tool and made a molten calf.

"These be thy Gods!" And so Aaron built an altar and proclaimed, "We feast, drink and play."

Then the Lord said unto Moses,

Go, get thee down; for thy people, which thou broughtest out of the land of Egypt, have corrupted themselves:

They have turned aside quickly out of the way which I commanded them: [they have made them a "golden calf."] (Exodus 32:7-8.)

From both these experiences—the prophet Moses, and the Apostle Paul on Mars' hill—we learn these lessons: The people had their devotions, built altars, worshiped an unknown God, and worshiped in ignorance. In each case, as today, authorized servants taught the true and living God.

We have heard this morning about the spiritual and the carnal. May I say that the golden calf is the carnal or the carnal may be likened unto the worship of the golden calf, or the material things of life—feasting, drinking, and playing, and forgetting the spirit?

It is essential to know God and to worship him in truth, for Jesus said:

Friday, April 4

First Day

And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent. (John 17:3.)

We cannot serve both God and mammon. It is necessary to know to whom we pray and to pay our devotions so that such may be done in spirit and in truth. We have heard the mouth-piece of our Heavenly Father, President David O. McKay, this morning from this pulpit draw conclusively to our attention the need to develop the spirit within us, to understand God, and then to have these things apply in our lives.

The Apostle Paul further declared:

Forasmuch then as we are the offspring of God, we ought not to think that the God-head is like unto gold, or silver, or stone, graven by art and man's device. (Acts 17:29.)

We can be influenced by man's device today which is contrary to enjoying the spirit; "... for the letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life." (II Cor. 3:6.)

Are we worshipping God in the full spirit of truth or are there any golden calves or idols in our lives? Do we on occasion worship the gods of hate, bitterness, vanity, deceit, profanity, dishonesty, disloyalty, immorality, apostasy, money, gold, silver, uranium (to bring us up-to-date), power, clothes, passions, styles, a broken Sabbath, new cars with higher speed, in fact, all material things? The New Testament poses a very important question:

Is not the life more than meat, and the body than raiment? (Matt. 6:25.)

It is easy to follow the world and think in a material or physical vein. I am reminded of an experience which happened as we toured the Western States Mission four years ago with President and Sister A. Lewis Elggren. As we journeyed through the state of Nebraska, we saw road signs, "Do not fail to see the Pioneer Village and the Progress of Man." As I am always interested in the pioneers and the progress of man, I was anxious to see what progress man had made. When we finally arrived, we found, a new, very modern building. In it were the various styles of automobiles, beginning with one of the first ones produced up to and including the new high-powered, streamlined, most modern car. And this was supposed to represent the progress of man! Yes, it is easy to follow the world and think of the material, the carnal, rather than the spiritual.

Do we worship these carnal or material things in preference to the spiritual? We do need a balance. We may prefer to worship the movies, movie stars, television, radio, and all forms of recreation. Do these things take us from our quorum meetings, Sunday School, and Sacrament meetings? If so, these are just some of the modern golden calves which can come into our lives, and we worship them in preference to developing our spiritual lives.

In the days of Moses the children of Israel merely gave material things to make their golden calf. Today we are giving our precious time. Material things can be replaced, but time cannot be called back, and time is allotted to each of us on an equal basis—twenty-four golden hours each day.

What are we doing with them? Are we using them to the best advantage?

Now is the time to do something about it! We all no doubt have approached a railroad crossing and have been exposed to the sign which reads, "Stop! Look! Listen!"

May we sincerely take this to heart. What if Paul should pass by today as he passed Mars' hill? What if Jesus should appear today (and no man knoweth the hour of his coming)? Are we as ready to meet him as we can be? I trust we will banish from our lives any worship of golden calves, and worship our Father in spirit and in truth.

It is my privilege to know many young couples on the campuses of the universities in this and other areas who are getting their education and at the same time having their babies, raising their families, and finding time to serve the true and living God. I thrill at their devotion.

Then I think of the couple who went to the bank and placed a mortgage on their home in order to finance their sixth son on his mission. They wanted all their sons to have this privilege and honor. They had a witness of the true and living God and were worshipping him and assisting in this great work.

As I toured the Southwest Indian Mission last fall, I met a Lamanite brother. I learned he was eighty-four years of age. A few years ago in this little branch where he lived, there were but a few members of the Church. Several times when he went to priesthood meeting, he was the only one present, but he didn't leave; he would sing a hymn and pray. His witness had come to him through worship of the true and living God.

Then I think of the parents who are humbly proud of their sons and daughters receiving all the awards and achievements possible through constant Church activity and participation. These are the homes where joy and happiness prevail because they are worshipping the true and living God. This is the type of home President McKay has spoken of this morning.

Now as to idols, they were prevalent in the days of Moses, of Paul, and are among us today. Paul's words to the Thessalonian saints, First Thessalonians, the first chapter and the ninth verse—" . . . and how ye turned to God from idols to serve the living and true God," would indicate that they had seen the error of their ways and had turned to the worship of God.

So if there need be repentance in any of our hearts today, let us exercise the courage and fortitude necessary to turn from our idols to worship and serve the true and living God. If anyone within the sound of my voice has not yet been blessed with membership in the true Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, I pray that the Spirit of the Lord will prevail upon him to receive the witness that the words spoken from this pulpit are divine and for the benefit of our spiritual and eternal lives.

It is our individual responsibility to see that our spiritual lives are in tune with the teachings of the Master, who said, ". . . seek ye first the kingdom of God, . . ." I testify to you that the material and physical things which we need to sustain life will be granted us. I testify further that God is our Heavenly Father. He is not a mystery but can be known if we desire to know him. This is my witness and testimony to you, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Elder Joseph Anderson has just read the statistical data, financial expenditures, etc., relating to the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints for 1957. Elder Orval W. Adams will now read the report of the Church Auditing Committee, after which we shall hear from President Joseph Fielding Smith.

Elder Orval W. Adams of the Church Auditing Committee read the following report:

Salt Lake City, Utah
March 31, 1958

President David O. McKay and Counselors, Salt Lake City, Utah.

Dear Brethren:

We have reviewed the Report of the Income and Expenditures of the Corporation of the President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints for the year 1957. The record keeping shows evidence of great care and the reports prepared are clear and concise. An adequate system of internal audit control has been maintained. Expenditures are well within the income of the Church and it is indicated that expenses have been held below the figures budgeted. We have been assured that the Church is free from debt.

Respectfully submitted,

Orval W. Adams
Harold H. Bennett Church Auditing Committee.

President David O. McKay:

We shall now hear from President Joseph Fielding Smith, President of the Council of the Twelve Apostles. He will be followed by Elder S. Dilworth Young.

PRESIDENT JOSEPH FIELDING SMITH

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

I will address my remarks, if I may have the right inspiration, to the fathers and mothers of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, likewise to those who are engaged in the organizations of the Church looking after the youth of Israel.

Some few months ago I read in the paper that the majority of crimes committed in the United States were committed by those who were of teen ages. That was a shock to me and I think to thousands of others, many thousands throughout this land, for it seemed to be so unusual and a trend that boded only evil for this country. We have been troubled even in our own city, and this trouble has existed in all parts of the land, with vandalism, the wanton destruction of property, crimes by children and teen-agers, which show a tendency that will lead only to serious trouble within the borders of our country in years to come.

So I appeal to you, my dear brethren and sisters, husbands and wives, fathers and mothers, to take advantage of every opportunity the Church affords to have your children trained in the various organizations provided for them by the revelations of the Lord: the Primary, the Sunday School, the Mutual Improvement organizations, and the quorums of the Lesser Priesthood under the direction of our bishoprics.

I hope that you are teaching your children in your homes to pray. I hope that you are having family prayers, morning and evening, that your children are taught by example and by precept to observe the commandments that are so precious and so sacred and mean so much to our salvation in the kingdom of God.

The Lord said in a revelation given to the Church in 1831:

And again, inasmuch as parents have children in Zion, or in any of her stakes which are organized, that teach them not to understand the doctrine of repentance, faith in Christ the Son of the living God, and of baptism and the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of the hands, when eight years old, the sin be upon the heads of the parents.

For this shall be a law unto the in-

Friday, April 4

First Day

habitants of Zion, or in any of her stakes which are organized. (D & C 68:25-26.)

And I think I could add with equal truth in any branch of the Church in any mission or any other place outside of the stakes of Zion. The Lord requires this at our hands. I am reminded of a statement that was made in a discourse by President Brigham Young one time which I am not able to quote correctly, but the substance of it is this:

You say this is my wife. You say these are my children. That all depends upon your keeping the commandments of God.

That is the substance of it. In other words, the Lord can take away from you this wife. He can take away from you these children. He has not relinquished his claim upon any of the children that have been entrusted to our care.

So I make this appeal because the tendency in this country today, as you all know who read the papers, is towards nuclear energy, traveling to the moon, getting off the earth, and going somewhere else. But people have forgotten God. We cannot afford to do that.

Let us as members of the Church, no matter what else we may think about space travel, keep our feet on the ground, spiritually and in the home.

One thing, too, that I would like to call attention to—young people, when they marry, are not satisfied to begin with a little and humbly, but they want to receive just about as much as their parents have at the time they, the children, get married. They must have an automobile; they have to have a television set, a radio, all kinds of conveniences, many of which, of course, are very helpful. But they want to start out with every convenience under the sun to make them comfortable. I think this is a mistake. I think they should begin humbly, putting their faith in the Lord, building here a little and there a little as they can, accumulating piecemeal, until they can reach a position of prosperity such as they wish to have.

Now this condition of wanting everything leads to this great trouble: Both the mother and the father find employment. That means that children are left either to run the streets or somebody has to be called in to take care of them in the absence of the parents, and generally, it is my opinion that these children are left to wander the streets, to get into mischief, and they do not have the proper attention that ought to be given to them by the mother in the home.

Now, let us try humbly to keep our families intact, to keep them under the influence of the Spirit of the Lord, trained in the principles of the gospel that they may grow up in righteousness and truth. I think the Lord requires that at our hands. He has said, as I have read to you here, that he will hold the parents responsible for the acts of the children and they are given unto us that we might train them in the ways of life, eternal life, that they might come back again into the presence of God, their Father.

Now, some may think I am a little extreme but I think that the training of the children, the watching care over the children in the home by the mother, is worth far more than to have her seek employment, even if it is a matter of pinching a little in order to keep going in the home.

Again, we have throughout the Church, wherever it is possible for us to have this opportunity, seminaries and institutes which our children who are old enough to go to the public schools or even to the colleges may attend. Brethren and sisters, send your children to these seminaries. Those who are going to college will be old enough, if they have the proper training in their youth, to attend the institutes of the Church. They are old enough to take care of themselves. But help your children in every way you can to grow up with a knowledge of the gospel of Jesus Christ. Teach them to pray. Teach them to observe the Word of Wisdom, to walk faithfully and humbly before the Lord so that when they grow up to manhood and womanhood they can thank you for what you have done for them and look back over their lives with grateful hearts and with love for their parents for the manner in which those parents cared for them and trained them in the gospel of Jesus Christ.

And so I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

He to whom we have just listened is President Joseph Fielding Smith of the Council of the Twelve Apostles.

We shall now hear from Elder S. Dilworth Young of the First Council of Seventy. He will be followed by the Patriarch to the Church.

ELDER S. DILWORTH YOUNG

Of the First Council of the Seventy

I echo the words of President McKay this morning and of President Smith this afternoon expressing an anxiety we should have for our children. In that connection I also remember that the day after tomorrow is the anniversary of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus Christ. I think, too, that April 6 is as near the anniversary of the actual day that it took place as we shall ever be able to ascertain.

I believe, too, that the Lord himself did not consider that the resurrection was his greatest gift to man. I do not attempt to defend the statement. I believe that he knew that we could not understand all of his purposes but that as humans we might understand what it meant to lay down a body and take it up again. I believe his highest purpose is that his children who will support and sustain him will be given exaltation in his presence. That, I think, is what he had in mind when he came to the earth in the first place. I think he taught it to those who could understand the doctrine, and I believe that he has restored it to us in this last day with the purpose now of bringing it to a fulfillment.

If that be true, then the family is probably the greatest element in our lives today. Without the family we shall not attain exaltation, as I understand exaltation to be. And of course without children the family would not be very much.

But if we lose our children in the process of attaining exaltation, I think it is a little vain to assume that we are going to have very much happiness. Therefore I would raise my voice in asking that we give special attention to the children. Too, in 1958, we should begin to take steps which will correct the abuses which affect their lives in many places.

It so happens that much of my life has been spent working with children. This gives me some right to mention three needs which I think I can draw from that experience. I could name a dozen, but I have chosen these three because of associations I have had with three men. Each of these men is associated in my experience with children. In one case, one taught me as a youth. In the other two cases, in my work with children, I had dealings with them. I think in the things they told me and in the things they did themselves are found possibly some bases upon which we can begin our work. Here, then, are lessons from the three.

Dr. Adam S. Bennion would not have said, "Make things easy for youth." Rather he would have them develop honor by means of sharp competition. On the playing court he would have applied the lessons which would be their strength in manhood. He wanted keen, sharp, hard play; to win hard, fair, and square; to lose gracefully. But let some man try to use these fields of action to win illegitimately, to use an unfair tactic to further his own ends, to make the end justify foul means, and Adam Bennion became at once a hornet and a cudgel to drive him away.

At some point in their lives all children must be protected from the designs of conspiring men. Adam Bennion was one who was fearless, outspoken, their protector. Youth needs that protection by adults.

Oscar A. Kirkham could lift boys and girls out of themselves, to aspire to high things. In his hands they rode on the wings of eagles; they acquired the rugged strength of the mighty oak. He pointed the way to show that the greatest adventures are those in fields of morality, honor, and integrity. When he left them, the embers of the campfire dying down, somehow each one knew that the message was the echo of his own unformed ideals leaping into high resolve. We need more of that, too.

Friday, April 4

Thomas E. McKay was a stake president. I was a member of his stake for many years. Thomas E. McKay was for children. When help was needed, his weight and his influence were applied with full force and without reservation, and it was no mean force. He made only one stipulation to me when I was working with children. The man operating the program must not let the parents or the Church down. The principles of salvation and the testimonies of leaders must be the guiding factors.

These three elements were part of the living souls of the three men of whom I speak, whom I loved and revered.

Now, may I summarize what I have just said as to what our children might need and which we should be alert to give them:

Teach youth to play fair and square, to play hard and to win modestly, to lose gracefully, but, above all things, protect them from evil men until they are old enough to protect themselves. That is a vital thing.

Fire each child with the desire to reach the heights of happy achievement.

Unless the spark kindles the flame, an inner flame, it will not warm the soul. This is vital, too.

Finally, keep always in mind the ultimate goal, exaltation in the presence of the Father and the Son. Do nothing to cloud this goal in the minds of children, my brethren. Do everything to keep its guiding light brightly shining.

I believe that if these three things, plus others which could be mentioned in handling children, can be applied, somehow our eternities will be sure. In this group here before me is the power to lead our children into righteousness, if we will but apply the principles.

My testimony is that God lives and that Jesus Christ the Lord lives and watches over us and desires us to come into his presence if we will but obey. I say it in his Holy Name. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Elder S. Dilworth Young of the First Council of the Seventy has just spoken to us. Now we shall hear from Elder Eldred G. Smith, Patriarch to the Church.

ELDER ELDRED G. SMITH

Patriarch to the Church

I pray that I shall have an interest in your faith and prayers while I take this precious time. We have heard of the successes of the missionary work and the other activities of the Church. The growth of the Church is glorious in all its activities. The success of man and the Church can be measured, I think, in the answer to the question, "How near to God are you?"

Every one of us came from a pre-earthly existence. We always existed. Before coming to this earth we lived with our heavenly parents. We were their children. Challenging Job, the Lord said:

Where wast thou when I laid the foundations of the earth? declare, if thou hast understanding.

When the morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy? (Job 38:4, 7.)

And again Abraham said:

Now the Lord had shown unto me, Abraham, the intelligences that were organized before the world was; and among all these there were many of the noble and great ones;

And God saw these souls that they were good, and he stood in the midst of them, and he said: These I will make my rulers; for he stood among those that were spirits, and he saw that they were good; and he said unto me: Abraham, thou art one of them; thou wast chosen before thou wast born. (Abraham 3:22-23.)

We are all children of our heavenly parents. We lived with them in the celestial kingdom. We walked by sight. We knew what the celestial glory was. As spirits only, we could not partake of the fulness thereof. We knew how our Heavenly Father came to his exaltation. Was it any wonder, then, that we shouted for joy when it was made known unto us that we could come to earth? We knew this was the step necessary and the opportunity for us to gain that glory which we there knew so well. We were promised that if we were faithful in all things we would have the opportunity to return unto our Father in heaven. We knew we would come here, having forgotten all, and be tried and tested. This was to be an opportunity where we would learn from our own experience. We were to learn good from evil, right from wrong. We would learn obedience.

To prove our obedience, among other things, there was a gospel plan given. This plan made necessary a Savior. Jesus Christ, the Only Begotten of the Father in the flesh, came in the Meridian of Time, and through his atoning sacrifice broke the bonds of death and opened the gates of the resurrection.

This Sunday all Christians celebrate the anniversary of this great day. Through him all shall have a glorious resurrection. We were promised the right and opportunity to return to our Father in heaven. Jesus Christ was our Elder Brother in that pre-earthly existence. He was, however, the Only Begotten of the Father in the flesh. It was he who created this earth. Thus, as a God, begotten of the Father in the flesh, he had power over life and death. No power could take his life unless he gave it. He could have lived forever. But no, he chose to do the will of the Father and give his life that all might live. Thus he broke the bonds of death and opened the doors of the resurrection, giving all mankind, all God's children, the opportunity to be resurrected and come unto him.

Through Christ we shall all be resurrected, but not all to the same glory. In Corinthians we read:

There are also celestial bodies, and bodies terrestrial: but the glory of the celestial is one, and the glory of the terrestrial is another.

There is one glory of the sun, and another glory of the moon, and another glory of the stars: for one star differeth from another star in glory.

So also is the resurrection of the dead. . . . (I Cor. 15:40-42.)

The highest glory is the celestial, and naturally, the abode of our Father in heaven. To attain this glory there are special requirements. For this purpose is the gospel given to man. How well we, individually, accept and fulfil the laws of the gospel determines how near to God we will come.

How near to God are you? The Lord has said:

Come unto me all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. (Matt. 11:28.)

Brother Kimball reminded us this morning, and I have often heard him say, "Rest is not relaxation and lounging. It is exaltation."

Christ has given us the gospel as a way of life that will lead us, if we will live it fully, to exaltation. He has not left us to stumble blindly in the dark. It is there for us to follow and obey. Christ said to Nicodemus:

Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God.

Nicodemus did not understand, and the Lord added,

Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God. (John 3:3, 5.)

How near to God are you? If you have not entered the waters of baptism yet, I suggest that you seek God in prayer and ask for understanding that you also may come nearer to him. Through prayer and wholehearted desire we may come near enough to him to receive extra added strength, to keep his commandments, to overcome evil, to change from bad habits to good habits.

Johnson said "bad men excuse their faults; good men leave them." Have you placed a barrier between you and God through misdeeds, neglect, omissions, or habits displeasing to God which keep you from coming nearer to him? How near to God are you? Repentance is a very difficult task, yet we all have plenty of it to do. Prayer is needed to help us repent. The feeling of guilt ties our tongues so that we cannot speak to him or approach him, yet God is always there to help. The door is never completely closed. Adversity is often the tool used to humble us and bring us closer to our Heavenly Father.

Friday, April 4

How near to God are you? Do you have the strength to repent? Yes, you may even be given added physical strength if you live near enough to God. I recall the experience of the Prophet Joseph Smith when he received the plates from which the Book of Mormon was translated. Before bringing them directly home he secreted them in a grove of trees, and upon returning for them he found them safe, and as he started homeward he was encountered by a man who tried to force them from him. He fought this man off, knocking him down, then in going farther the Prophet met another man whom he likewise knocked down. He continued again, and met a third man with the same result, then ran the rest of approximately three miles to his home. I think the Lord gave that experience to show him that he could receive extra added physical strength, because though he had the plates in his possession which would handicap or hinder him physically, he was still able to overcome the physical powers that were forced upon him.

Yes, how near to God are you? To be exalted with God in the celestial kingdom requires both righteous living and fulfilling the ordinances of the gospel. There are those who live a good life, but do not accept the ordinances of the gospel. On the other hand there are those who think that because they have been baptized, ordained, endowed, and sealed, that is enough. Yet they do not live righteous lives. Both righteous living and fulfilling the ordinances of the gospel are necessary to come unto God. Jesus Christ said to the Prophet Joseph Smith in the Sacred Grove in that greatest of all visions:

... they draw near to me with their lips, but their hearts are far from me, they teach for doctrines the commandments of men, having a form of godliness, but they deny the power thereof.

I wonder how many of us who are members of the Church draw near to him with our lips, but our hearts are far from him. Are we near enough to pay a full tithing? Are we near enough to keep the Word of Wisdom? Do we attend our Sacrament meetings? Do we do our ward teaching? Do we partake of the Sacrament and covenant to keep his commandments, and then keep them? Do we go to the temple to be sealed as husband and wife for time and eternity? Do we have peace, love, and harmony in our homes? Or are we like the ten virgins the Lord referred to of whom only fifty percent would measure up to come into his presence?

Patriarchal blessings are given to help us to return unto God, to be exalted in his kingdom. The blessings of the Lord are given to all who will come unto him. Seek his guidance in prayer and faith and humility, that the blessings of the Lord shall be unto you as you draw near to him with your hearts, is my prayer in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER EL RAY L. CHRISTIANSEN

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve Apostles

I had had a desire to discuss a few truths of the gospel, having in mind particularly those Saints who are in somewhat of a quandary as to what it is all about, particularly those young people who have asked us such questions as: "Why worry so much about us?" "What difference does it make?" "Why is it necessary that we do this?"

For a wise and glorious purpose
Thou hast placed me here on earth,
And withheld the recollection
Of my former friends and birth.
Yet oftentimes a secret something
Whispered, "You're a stranger here."
And I felt that I had wandered
From a more exalted sphere.

So sang the poetess, Eliza R. Snow. Since the Lord has seen fit to open again the windows of heaven and reveal his mind and will to his servants, the prophets, beginning with the Prophet Joseph Smith, greater understanding and knowledge has come to man in relation to his origin, his place on earth, and his relationship to God. As we have already heard, this earth was organized for a special, definite, and divinely designed purpose—that we might live here and by following the plan of the gospel of Jesus Christ work out our destiny, our future, our salvation.

Every one of us will die. All of us will be resurrected, and all of us will live forever—somewhere. Where we shall live in the hereafter is left entirely to each one of us as an individual. It is possible for us to rise to exaltation in the celestial world, or, if we are dilatory or disobedient or indifferent, it is possible for us to remain with those of that category.

There are varying degrees of salvation, of happiness, of joy, and the frightening thing to me is that it is left to me to determine where I will fit in, in that life to come. There is nothing, certainly, that I would like more than to find myself with my family, with those I love, with my friends, and with my Brethren, but I know that in order to merit that, I must conform to certain principles, accept all the laws and ordinances of the gospel. I must yield valiant service in the cause of righteousness, in helping to build up the kingdom, and I must, of course, have accepted baptism by immersion by proper authority in order to become a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Those ordinances are indispensable and essential for all of us. I hope that those boys and girls who have talked to me about this, and others who may be in the same frame of mind, who are seeking for happiness, will begin by conforming their lives to the principles of this glorious gospel, which is a gospel of happiness, a gospel of joy, a gospel that will bring us peace, even the peace that passeth understanding.

The Prophet Joseph Smith once made this statement, which is wonderful to contemplate:

Happiness is the object and design of our existence, and will be the end thereof, if we pursue the path that leads to it, and this path is virtue, uprightness, faithfulness, holiness, and in keeping all of the commandments of God. (Teachings of the Prophet Joseph Smith, pages 255-6.)

That is a simple prescription and it is just as easy to follow as it is to follow the compass once we set our course and get our directions.

Now, I am sure that we must have been faithful, even valiant, in that pre-existent world because we have graduated, so to speak, with some degree of honor into this state of our existence, which was necessary in order to continue the next phase and rise to the heights of joy and happiness and receive all that the Lord desires us to receive. It is here, now, that we determine where and what we will be in that life which follows this one upon the earth. The precious right to direct the life that has been given to us by our Father should be cherished by each individual, for each may determine for himself whether he will perfect his life by keeping the commandments of God or whether he will follow his own inclinations and wayward ways. All of us, however, will be rewarded according to our works, and our salvation will be graded accordingly. In the gospel of Jesus Christ we have the perfect plan for the happiness that we may achieve.

Friday, April 4

There is no need for any of us to get lost in the wilderness of doubt and uncertainty, and of foolish doctrines, because the way is clearly defined.

It was Emerson who said: "Man has two creators—his God and himself." Having this life given us to live and to plan and direct, it is a tremendous responsibility that rests upon us. We must constantly segregate the things which endure from the things which are transitory. Split-second decisions, which all of us sometimes have to make, can be more safely made if there have been set up beforehand some "musts" and some "must nots." In this day of glamor, enticement, pressure, new temptations, in this day of moral laxity when more and more are feeling less and less the individual and personal responsibility for wrongdoing, it is imperative that each of us develops a firm desire to choose the right regardless of the circumstances.

Someone has aptly said: "Good character is determined by what you stand for, not by what you fall for." Why does the Lord, through his servants, constantly admonish us to choose the right and to keep his commandments? Simply because he is our Father, and he wishes us to be led into eternal happiness. He wants us to be free by avoiding the bondage of sin and of wrongdoing. His commandments are given to help us, not to hinder us. He would impose nothing upon us except it be for our good. He wishes to assist us through these commandments, which are principles by which we must learn to keep in order to find joy and peace, rather than regret and remorse.

"Be faithful and diligent in keeping my commandments and I will encircle thee in my arms of love," the Lord tells us. Why are your parents so deeply concerned over you, their boys and girls, hoping and praying constantly for your welfare? Because they love you; because they realize that there is in the world a force of evil just as certain as there is being directed a work of righteousness, and that between those two forces there is an eternal conflict with a human soul as the stake.

The Prophet Mormon had this in mind when he wrote these marvelous words:

Wherefore, all things which are good cometh of God; and that which is evil cometh of the devil; for the devil is an enemy unto God, and fighteth against him continually, and inviteth and enticeth to sin, and to do that which is evil continually.

But behold, that which is of God inviteth and enticeth to do good continually; wherefore, every thing which inviteth and enticeth to do good, and to love God, and to serve him, is inspired of God. (Moroni 7:12-13.)

My, what a revelation that is! Only when the spirit yields to the body has the devil power to overcome the spirit and prevail. The Adversary lives! He is not dead! He is active. He is powerful, even though his power is limited. I noted last night a statement of President Brigham Young that I would like to read in regard to this:

The adversary presents his principles and arguments in the most approved style, and in the most winning tone, attended with the most graceful attitudes; and he is very careful to ingratiate himself into the favor of the powerful and influential of mankind, uniting himself with popular parties, floating into offices of trust and emolument by pandering to popular feeling, though it should seriously wrong and oppress the innocent. (Discourses of Brigham Young, page 69.)

Satan is cunning. I will never forget what Brother Thomas E. McKay said in an address from this pulpit, "We do not lose our faith by a blowout—just by slow leaks." That is the way the Adversary works. The Book of Mormon makes the statement that he ensnares us, and if we do not repent, he "leads us carefully down to hell." He never jerks, just rather eases us along, unless we turn from the path of wrongdoing.

Your parents, my young brothers and sisters, do not wish their association with you to end with this life, but they realize that now is the time and the place and the opportunity to prepare for that grand reunion beyond the grave. A week or so ago a young couple came to the temple and received their endowments and were sealed in holy matrimony. In the group that met with them in the sealing room were represented three generations on each side. That, it seems to me, is as it should be. Families should participate as families in holy places. If we expect to be together as families in the next life, and it seems to me that is the center and the objective of the whole, then it is best and well that we get together as families in these holy temples under such circumstances as that.

The overwhelming desire that should be in the mind of every young boy and every young girl as he or she moves into young manhood and womanhood is to prepare himself or herself each day that he or she lives to be worthy of entering into the house of the Lord, and there receive the fabulous blessings that the Lord extends to those who desire them. How glorious is the doctrine that man was in the beginning with God! How glorious is the doctrine that families may be perpetuated forever! Of all the people upon the earth today the Latter-day Saints should manifest the greatest faith in God—not because we are a more gifted people or a better race, but because through the goodness of God we have received evidence upon evidence of our divine origin, and the knowledge that we are indeed his children.

ELDER GEORGE Q. MORRIS

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

My dear brethren and sisters, I sincerely pray that the Lord will direct me by his spirit to say what I should say today. I had been thinking along lines similar to what the last two brethren have been speaking of. We have avoided a head-on collision, but we have been pretty close to it.

I have had in mind a statement of Job: "Man that is born of a woman is of few days, and full of trouble." (Job 14:1.) I suppose at times we all may have that feeling ourselves. That leads to the matter of troubles and evils and sins and adversity which have been referred to today. I rejoice greatly in the revelations that God has given us so that we will understand life, and if we

Not only the Bible but also modern scriptures have revealed to us great and fundamental truths which are not generally understood as to the origin and destiny of man. In addition, appearances of the Lord himself and appearances of his heavenly messengers have added to the faith and knowledge of this people. I pray, brothers and sisters, that all of us, especially those who are coming into manhood and womanhood, may give sober thought to these glorious principles and be able to build our lives upon the sure foundation of the gospel of Jesus Christ, "whereon if men build they cannot fall."

I testify that he is real, he is the Savior. He was resurrected and he lives, and this is his plan for happiness and exaltation, and I do it humbly in the name of Jesus Christ, the Lord. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Elder ElRay L. Christiansen has just spoken to us. He is Assistant to the Council of the Twelve, and also president of the Salt Lake Temple. Elder George Q. Morris of the Council of the Twelve will now speak to us, and he will be followed by Elder LeGrand Richards.

can get the right relation to sin and adversity and its opposites we can intelligently understand life. There has always been a debate through the centuries as to what sin is, and more particularly why there should be so much sin in the world. Some who believe in God think that it is only an illusion. Some faiths are based on the belief that there is no sin—that it is only an idea in the mind. Others who believe in a God think that perhaps he did not quite make a perfect job of the creation, and there are other various ideas advanced as the reasons for sin. The sin and suffering in the world, says the atheist, proves there is no God.

It has been a great satisfaction to me just to look over the Lord's explanation of why there is sin, and I want to bring to you the few short sentences in which he explains why sin is in the world. I think it will be enlightening to us and enable us to have the right understanding regarding this matter.

First Day

He said to his disciples:

Woe unto the world because of offences! for it must needs be that offences come; but woe to that man by whom the offence cometh! (Matt. 18:7.)

This is a very definite and clear declaration so far as we are concerned that in the world there must be offenses. There must be sin in the world, but the Lord blocks any illogical reasoning that because there is sin we cannot be blamed for having partaken of it with his statement: "but woe to that man by whom the offence cometh!"

He also says, in the Doctrine and Covenants, 29:39, "And it must needs be that the devil should tempt the children of men, . . ." That is a necessary situation in our lives. Then we are told what happened when transgression occurred. Because of Adam's transgression, the Lord said: ". . . cursed shall be the ground for thy sake; in sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life." (Moses 4:23.) I think we should bear in mind that the Lord said for the sake of Adam he would curse the land, and he followed this by saying,

By the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, until thou shalt return unto the ground—for thou shalt surely die—for out of it wast thou taken: for dust thou wast, and unto dust shalt thou return. (Ibid., 4:25.)

Now this seems to paint a very gloomy picture, and some people do not go much farther than this, and try to blame Adam for the sins and troubles that come into their lives. I just want to say here in passing that I hope none of us—no member of this Church—will speak lightly of Adam, an august and glorious personage close to the throne of God, the father of our race, and identified as Michael, the great archangel. We should think of him and speak of him with love and with reverence, and not tolerate any other attitude in our presence.

That gloomy picture does look serious, and life is serious, but the Lord explains further:

And it must needs be that the devil should tempt the children of men, or they could not be agents unto themselves; for if they never should have bitter they could not know the sweet— (D & C 29:39.)

This is a clear and definite statement that I think we must accept literally.

Further, the Lord said, after Adam had transgressed: "And I, the Lord God, said unto mine Only Begotten: Behold, the man is become as one of us to know good and evil;" (Moses 4:28) testifying that through his transgression Adam had attained a knowledge of good and evil which he did not have before.

Then the Father gives further instructions to Adam:

And the Lord spake unto Adam, saying: Inasmuch as thy children are conceived in sin, even so when they begin to grow up, sin conceiveth in their hearts, and they taste the bitter, that they may know to prize the good. (Ibid., 6:55.)

This being "conceived in sin," as I understand it, is only that they are in the midst of sin. They come into the world where sin is prevalent, and it will enter into their hearts, but it will lead them "to taste the bitter, that they may know to prize the good." And then with further emphasis on the matter of agency, the Lord says, ". . . it is given to them to know good from evil; wherefore they are agents unto themselves. (Ibid., 6:56.)

This matter of agency is the very essence of our existence. The Lord said unto Enoch:

Behold these thy brethren; they are the workmanship of mine own hands, and I gave unto them their knowledge, in the day I created them; and in the Garden of Eden, gave I unto man his agency. (Ibid., 7:32.)

Also the revelation in the 93rd section of the Doctrine and Covenants emphasizes again this matter of agency. We are intelligences, and the Lord says,

All truth is independent in that sphere in which God has placed it, to act for itself, as all intelligence also; otherwise there is no existence. (D & C 93:30.)

If we take away their free agency we nullify the purpose of the existence of mankind in the world. Satan attempted to do that.

By these revelations we see why sin is in the world and adversities and evils of various kinds. We can picture the plight of Adam and Eve. They had been condemned to sorrows, woes, troubles, and labor and they were cast out from the presence of God, and death had been declared to be their fate. A pathetic picture, indeed. But now a most important thing happened. Adam and Eve had explained to them the gospel of Jesus Christ. What would be their reaction? When the Lord explained this to them, that a redemption should come through Jesus Christ, the Only Begotten of the Father, Adam exclaimed:

Blessed be the name of God, for because of my transgression my eyes are opened, and in this life I shall have joy, and again in the flesh shall I see God. (Moses 5:10.)

And what was the response of Eve, his wife. She heard all of these things, and was glad, saying: Were it not for our transgression we never should have had seed, and never should have known good and evil, and the joy of our redemption, and . . . eternal life. (Ibid., 5:11.)

There is the key to the question of evil. If we cannot be good, except as we resist and overcome evil, then evil must be present to be resisted.

So this earth life is set up according to true principles, and these conditions that followed the transgression were not, in the usual sense, penalties that were inflicted upon us. All these that I have named to you that seem to be sad afflictions of punishment, sorrow, and trouble are in the end not that. They are blessings. We have attained a knowledge of good and evil, the power to prize the sweet, to become agents unto ourselves, the power to obtain redemption and eternal life. These things had their origin in this transgression. The Lord has set the earth up so we have to labor if we are going to live, which preserves us from the curse of idleness and indolence; and though the Lord condemns us to death—mortal death—it is one of the greatest blessings that comes to us here because it is the doorway to immortality, and we can never attain immortality without dying.

So these are all real blessings. We come to the earth with all these conditions arranged as they are so that we have to struggle constantly against evil, struggle to preserve our lives, struggle for everything of true value—that is the thing for us to understand—this is the course of life that is most desirable, and for our good. We have no need to find fault with these conditions. The Lord has ordained them all for our welfare and happiness. The truth as I understand and feel about it is simply that circumstances placed Adam in a position where by a technical transgression he could come into mortal life, moving out of immortality into these earth conditions for his blessing, for the blessing of the race, without which no immortality and eternal life and exaltation could ever come. And in doing this, also, of course, his body, taken from the earth, was made mortal—an absolute essential. There is no salvation or exaltation except through the possession of a body of flesh and blood.

In conclusion I want to give this inspired declaration by the Prophet Lehi.

For it must needs be, that there is an opposition in all things. If not so, . . . righteousness could not be brought to pass, neither wickedness, neither holiness nor misery, neither good nor bad. Wherefore, all things must needs be a compound in one; . . .

And now, behold, if Adam had not transgressed he would not have fallen, but he would have remained in the garden of Eden. And all things which were created must have remained in the same state in which they were after they were created; and they must have remained forever, and had no end.

And they would have had no children; therefore they would have remained in a state of innocence, having no joy, for they knew no misery; doing no good, for they knew no sin.

But behold, all things have been done in the wisdom of him who knoweth all things.

Adam fell that men might be; and men are, that they might have joy. (2 Nephi 2:11, 22-25.)

First Day

The answer to all the problems in the world is the gospel of Jesus Christ, which enables us to overcome all adversities, sin, and death, and go back into the presence of God fit to dwell in his presence, through the Lord Jesus Christ, our Redeemer.

I bear this humble witness that this is the Church of Jesus Christ, organized by him personally; that President David O. McKay is conducting the affairs of this Church as the Lord Jesus Christ directs him, and I bear this witness in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

He to whom we have just listened is Elder George Q. Morris, member of the Council of the Twelve. Our concluding speaker will be Elder LeGrand Richards of the same Council.

ELDER LEGRAND RICHARDS

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

I rejoice, my brothers and sisters, in the privilege of attending this conference with you and with my Brethren here on this stand. I love them, I love the Saints.

I thought when we listened to the report of the growth of the Church, how your hearts must rejoice! When I think of our visits to your stakes and your missions and what you and your families are contributing to the growth of the Church, surely that is what we labor for with all our hearts and souls and that is what we pray for! The Lord is blessing the efforts of the Saints throughout the world. May he continue to do so.

I thought that in the few moments I have here today I would like to make a few comments on a question that was asked me in a letter I received a few weeks ago from a nonmember of the Church whom I met on one of my visits in the Church. The question was this: "Please, sir, tell me why you think Joseph Smith was a prophet of God." I have preached on that subject for fifty years, and the more I do the more my heart is made to rejoice. I make these comments:

I believe the Bible to be the word of God. I believe, as has already been stated here today, that God had a plan when he created this earth, when he placed man upon it, just as definitely as any architect ever draws a plan for a building before it is constructed.

I believe the words of Isaiah when he said that the Lord declared the end from the beginning. I think it is our duty to understand that plan, to study it, that we might know and understand the purposes of the Lord in the creation of this world and what is yet to transpire before the coming of Christ, our Lord, to rule and reign as King of kings and Lord of lords, as he and the prophets have declared.

I believe the words of the Apostle Peter when he said that

We have also a more sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day star arise in your hearts:

Knowing this first, that no prophecy of the scripture is of any private interpretation.

For the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man: but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost. (II Peter 1:19-21.)

I believe that the word of prophecy is a more sure word than anything else we have in this world.

I like the words of the Savior on that same subject as he walked beside his disciples on the way to Emmaus when he said:

... O fools, and slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have spoken. (Luke 24:25.)

And then beginning with Moses and the prophets, he showed them how that in all things they testified of him.

Then opened he their understanding, that they might understand the scriptures. (Ibid., 24:45.)

Just as the prophets of old declared the coming of Christ in the Meridian of Time and gave the signs that would accompany his coming, even to the casting of lots for his raiment when he was crucified, so have the prophets looked forward to the latter days when he would come in the clouds of heaven, and so have they proclaimed the events that would precede his coming. When he was here upon this earth, he was always looking forward to his final coming when he would come in power to reign among the children of men as King of kings and Lord of lords, and we should know something of the events that are to transpire to prepare the way for his coming.

I like the words of the prophet Amos in which he said,

Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets. (Amos 3:7.)

Never has there been a dispensation of God's truth in the earth without a prophet at its head except for the brief time that Jesus labored among men and stood as the head, and he called his Twelve, and as Paul tells us:

And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers;

For the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ:

Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, . . .

That we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, . . . (Eph. 4:11-14.)

You only need to look at the world today to know how we are becoming more divided year after year instead of more united because the apostles and prophets whom God put in his Church to bring unity of the faith were done away with.

I would like to refer to a few prophecies of the things that are to transpire before he comes. I quote first from the third chapter of Malachi, the first verse:

Behold, I will send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me: and the Lord, whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple, even the messenger of the covenant, whom ye delight in: behold, he shall come, saith the Lord of hosts. (Mal. 3:1.)

When he sends his messenger, who could he be other than a prophet of God, since God will do nothing but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets? And if he sends his messenger to prepare the way for his coming, that he may come swiftly to his temple, we could expect that all the promises of the prophets pertaining to the preparation for his coming would be fulfilled under the direction of this messenger. And these promises could not be fulfilled except there was a prophet unto whom God could reveal his mind and will and give wisdom beyond the wisdom of man to accomplish all the prophets have foretold.

Briefly, let us refer to the promise given by Daniel in his interpretation of Nebuchadnezzar's dream. He had already forgotten his dream, and he called for the wise men and the soothsayers and astrologers, and none of them could tell him his dream. Then he sent for the prophet in Israel, and Daniel took it up with the Lord. And he said that there was a God in heaven who maketh known Nebuchadnezzar's dream and the interpretation thereof. Then Daniel told him of the rise and fall of the kingdoms of this world until the latter days when the God of heaven would set up a kingdom that would never be destroyed or given to another people, but it would go forth until it would become as a great mountain and fill the whole earth, and it would stand forever, until one like the Son of Man would come in the clouds of heaven, to the Ancient of days.

And there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages, should serve him: his dominion is an everlasting dominion which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed. (Dan. 7:14.)

Why do we read these things in the scriptures if they are not meant to be fulfilled? How can the world accept the scriptures and then believe that all these things can transpire without a prophet of the Living God to whom God can reveal his mind and will?

I bear you witness that Joseph Smith was the messenger sent, that he was the instrument in the hands of God in setting up this kingdom.

First Day

There is not time to go into details, but anyone with a fair mind who will analyze the organization of this Church and what it is accomplishing and the great order of the priesthood (for every man and every man's son can bear the priesthood of God and become partners with him in the building of his kingdom), could not hope to find anything else to compare with it in all the world. There just is not such an organization.

In the olden days they used to liken this Church to the German army. You know what happened to that, but the Church is still going on. One of our Presidents of the United States made the statement not long ago that the greatest organization in the world for the development of men and women was the Mormon Church. And one of our great writers recently said he considered it the most dynamic church in America. We know there is no other organization like it in this world, and any thoughtful person who will investigate will come to that conclusion; and that is one of the tangible evidences that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God, that he was the instrument in the hands of our Father in heaven in setting up his kingdom in the earth.

If we could but take time to go into some of the achievements of the Church—take, for instance, our welfare program. Of those who come here and see what we are doing, one man wrote recently, "Why aren't we all Mormons?" Another wrote, "I guess I am on the wrong boat." The world begins to see that we have a program the like of which cannot be found anywhere in this world today.

Then we come to our youth program, and those who come among us bear witness that there is nothing like it in the world. We know that is true.

Then we come to the great missionary program of this Church, and there is not anything like it in all this world. I tell you, the sacrifices that men and women and their children make to help carry this gospel message to every land and every clime must be a most wonderful, acceptable thing to our Father in heaven because he has indicated his interest in carrying the gospel to the nations of the earth.

So I give to my friends this great organization as one of the tangible evidences that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God.

I would like to refer briefly to the promise in the fourth chapter of Malachi:

Behold, I will send you Elijah the prophet before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord:

And he shall turn the heart of the fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to their fathers, lest I come and smite the earth with a curse. (Mal. 4:5-6.)

Does the world believe this promise? And if Elijah were to come, to whom would he come other than to a prophet of God, since God will do nothing but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets?

We bear witness that Elijah has come. You heard something of our microfilming program here today. Since Elijah came, there has been a wave sweep over this world in the interests of genealogy and record keeping such as the world has never dreamed of in years before. We have referred to the promise of the Lord through Malachi (Ibid., 3:1) that he would send his messenger to prepare the way before him that he might come suddenly to his temple. How can he come to his temple except a temple is built in the earth to prepare for his coming, and who could build such a temple except a prophet of God?

Now, compare that with the work of Elijah who brought the keys of the great temple program, and then the words of Isaiah whom the Lord permitted to look down through the stream of time for three thousand years and who saw the last days with the mountain of the Lord's house established in the top of the mountains and exalted above the hills, and that all nations would flow unto it and say:

... Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths: ... (Isa. 2:3.)

You people who are here, and your parents before you, have been gathered from the nations to come to the house of the Lord in the top of the mountains. That could not have transpired without a prophet unto whom God could reveal his mind and his will and give instructions as to what temples are for; and this all is a part of the work of Elijah. This temple standing on this block is another tangible evidence that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God.

Let me give you the Book of Mormon. No man can believe the Bible and believe the words of the prophets without knowing that there is a companion volume of scripture that God the Eternal Father commanded should be written and declared that he would bring forth and join to the stick of Judah, which is the Bible, making them one in his hands, and one before his eyes.

How could he do that without a prophet of God to bring forth that marvelous record and join it to the record of Judah? We have that record before us. It has been before the world now for one hundred and thirty years, and people by the thousands and hundreds of thousands have borne witness that the promise contained in that book has been realized in their behalf in that God has manifested unto them the truth of the words of that book.

In Washington just recently, while holding a missionary meeting, a young mother of two children, a new convert to the Church, was asked to say a few words, and when she stood up, she said,

The missionaries promised me if I would read the Book of Mormon and ask God the Eternal Father, that he would manifest the truth of it unto me by the power of the Holy Ghost. I did that. I got down on my knees, and then I read that book, and my whole soul was illuminated, and I knew that that book was divine.

This is another tangible evidence that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God and one that the world has not yet been able to account for except as the Prophet Joseph declared.

In closing I leave you this one thought: We have been told that our convert baptisms last year reached nearly 32,000. If anybody who wants to know the truth would go out into these missions and interview those men and women who have left the teachings of their parents and joined this Church, he would find that they will testify that their membership in this Church has literally changed their lives.

One convert put it in words like this: "When I think of who I was when the gospel found me and what I am today, I cannot believe I am the same man. I do not think the same thoughts. I do not have the same habits. I do not have the same ambitions and desires in life." Membership in this Church will make bad men good and good men better.

That is what the Lord meant when he said we were to be born again. So I say to you that it is not what people know about this Church that holds them out, it is what they do not know about it, because it is God's eternal truth, and that is another of the tangible evidences that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God. I bear you my solemn witness that I know it in every fibre of my being, and I pray God to bless you all, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

He who has just spoken to us is Elder LeGrand Richards, a member of the Council of the Twelve.

A meeting devoted to the work of the stake and foreign missions will be held in the Tabernacle this evening at seven o'clock. Mission presidents in attendance at the General Conference, all stake mission presidents and stake missionaries, bishoprics and the presidencies of stakes, are requested to attend this meeting. An invitation is extended, also, to members of High Councils, presidents of Seventies quorums, and the General Boards of auxiliary organizations—this evening at seven o'clock.

The Brigham Young University Combined Choruses will now favor us with "Praise Ye the Lord," conducted by Elder Don L. Earl. The closing prayer will be offered by Elder Orlando T. ing of this lovely chorus, that we hope the joy they have given to us will come back into their own hearts. They say that all that you send in the hearts of others will come back to your own. We hope you had the joy in your attendance at the Conference that you have given to us. We thank you very much for coming up this day, missing your classes (laughter)—not just that—but you have been really spiritually fed as you have inspired us by your singing. We are proud of you and proud of your school.

We have already expressed appreciation for these flowers.

An agricultural meeting, sponsored by the General Church Welfare Committee, will be held tomorrow morning at 7:30 o'clock in the Assembly Hall.

The following are invited to attend: stake presidents, bishops or their representatives, all ward and stake agricultural representatives, and others interested in agriculture.

We shall now hear "Praise Ye the Lord," by the Brigham Young University Combined Choruses, and Elder Orlando T. Barrus will offer the benediction.

SECOND DAY

MORNING MEETING

Conference reconvened in the Tabernacle Saturday morning, April 5, at 10:00 o'clock.

Again the Tabernacle was filled to overflowing and those who could not find accommodation in that building listened to the services in the Assembly Hall and Barratt Hall as they were broadcast by television from the Tabernacle.

President David O. McKay presided and conducted the services.

The singing for this session was furnished by the Combined Choruses of the Logan Latter-day Saints Institute and the Utah State University, with James L. Bradley conducting and Frank W. Asper at the organ.

President David O. McKay:

Members of the Church are convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square in Salt Lake City in the third session of the One Hundred Twenty-Eighth Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. All members of the General Authorities are present. We welcome all present here in the Tabernacle, which is filled to overflowing, and to the television and radio audience we also extend a hearty welcome. We express appreciation for the presence of state officials and educational leaders in our own state and from elsewhere.

We have asked for a report and you will be pleased to know that we have with us our fellow worker, Elder Ezra Taft Benson, United States Secretary of Agriculture; Wallace F. Bennett, United States Senator; William A. Dawson, Congressman; LaMont Toronto, Secretary of State; Adiel F. Stewart, Mayor of Salt Lake City; Ernest L. Wilkinson, President of the Brigham Young University; William P. Miller, President of Weber College; J. Elliott Cameron, Director of Snow College; and undoubtedly others. I thought Senator Watkins was here, he was present at other sessions. To these and others who have probably been overlooked we extend welcome and appreciate your confidence. We appreciate, too, the number of young men and young women students of the colleges who are joining us this morning.

This session of the Conference will be broadcast as a public service over television and radio stations throughout the West. We again express appreciation for the service that is being rendered by the owners and managers of these various stations. The names of the stations have already been announced prior to the opening of this session. These services are also being broadcast in the Assembly Hall and in Barratt Hall by television.

We are very pleased to announce that the singing for this session will be furnished by the Combined Choruses of the Logan Latter-day Saints Institute and Utah State University, with James L. Bradley conducting, and Frank W. Asper at the organ. We welcome these young people and rejoice in their association today as we did with the Brigham Young University students yesterday.

We shall begin these services by the Combined Choruses of Logan Latter-day Saints Institute and Utah State University singing, "Let The Mountains Shout For Joy," and the opening prayer will be offered by Elder Edgar T. Henderson, president of the Butte Stake.

PRESIDENT J. REUBEN CLARK, JR.

Second Counselor in the First Presidency

My brothers and sisters, here present, those on the air, and our friends who may be listening: It is with a deep sense of the responsibility which rests upon me by virtue of my position that I stand before you this morning and with a prayer in my heart that the Lord will bless me and help me to say something that will be useful and uplifting to you. And to that end may I ask that you be good enough to mingle your prayers with mine that we may accomplish this purpose.

For many years I have tried at this particular season of the year to have in mind some of the essentials of that great, last three days of the Savior's mortality. I have tried to run over in my mind some of the chief events, the death, the crucifixion, and the resurrection of him who has given us the plan by which we may come back into our Heavenly Father's presence. With your permission, I should like to run over this account, as briefly as may be, because it is the crucial incident in the life of the world.

The Last Supper

I shall adopt that time we now celebrate in commemoration thereof which is usually accepted by Christendom, and therefore I will go forward beginning on Thursday night, the night of the Last Supper in the Upper Chamber, begun by an unseemly controversy as to precedence and signalized by the institution of the Sacrament, which occurred, I feel, after Judas had left the Chamber to arrange to betray the Master. That was a great Supper. There were great sermons preached by the Master.

The Mount of Olives

When they had finished they went out to the Mount of Olives, where he preached again, and then a little later they retired to the Garden, and the Savior, taking Peter, James, and John, left the rest of the Disciples and went a little farther on.

The Garden of Gethsemane

Then the Savior left them and went still farther on, and asked them to wait and watch while he was gone. He went, and the burden of his prayer was: "O my Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me: . . . nevertheless not my will, but thine, be done."

He returned and found his three Disciples sleeping. Reproving them gently, he went away again, and gave the same prayer. He knew what was ahead of him. He knew the end was near. He returned to find the three Disciples sleeping again. Again a slight reproof, and the third time he went, the third time he prayed, and then came back and, finding them again asleep, said: "Sleep on now, and take your rest: behold, the hour is at hand."

The Arrest

And shortly after that, Judas returned with the crowd that was to arrest the Savior and did arrest him. When they came up, Peter drew his sword and struck off the ear of Malchus, the servant of the high priest. The Savior restored it and then gave utterance to that great principle: ". . . they that take the sword shall perish with the sword."

The Trial

He was arrested. He was taken first, in what they say was an illegal examination, to Annas, the real high priest, the father-in-law of Caiaphas, the titular high priest, who had been installed by the Roman Government. From Annas he went to Caiaphas, and it was Caiaphas who, in an agony of fear and apprehension, said, "I adjure thee by the living God, that thou tell us whether thou be the Christ, the Son of God." And the Savior said to him, "Thou hast said: nevertheless I say unto you, Hereafter shall ye see the Son of man sitting on the right hand of power."

The Sanhedrin

From Caiaphas he was sent to the Sanhedrin, later on in the morning (it was now early morning), and the Sanhedrin passed what apparently was a formal judgment that he was to be crucified.

Before Pilate

As the Jews could not impose the death penalty, from the Sanhedrin he was taken to Pilate, against whom Christendom has for nearly two thousand years vented its dislike, and yet, as I read the record, Pilate did practically all that the law under which he operated as stated in the Gospels, permitted him to do. Pilate came back to the multitude on at least five occasions and sought to secure the release of Jesus. At first he returned merely saying, "I find no fault in this man." And the multitude renewed their demand for his crucifixion.

To Herod

Then Pilate sent him to Herod, and Herod sent him back, and Pilate began again the examination of Jesus. This time, and from then until the end, he pleaded that they take Barabbas and release Jesus. Three times at least this was done and each time they said, "Release unto us Barabbas"—it was their right, apparently, to demand the release of one man on this occasion—. . . "Crucify him," Jesus.

Pilate's Wife

During this latter examination it was that Pilate's wife sent to him a letter beseeching him not to do anything to this man. The result of one of the latest examinations was that Pilate took a basin and washed his hands and said, "I am innocent of the blood of this just person: see ye to it"; and the multitude cried, "His blood be on us, and on our children." It is my faith that this has been so for nearly two thousand years.

The Crucifixion

Then Jesus was turned over to be crucified. He was scourged, had a wreath of thorns placed on his head. He was stripped of the royal trappings they had mockingly placed upon him; reclothed in his own raiment; then started for the place of crucifixion. They picked up Simon, a Cyrenian, and forced him to carry the cross. When they came to the place of crucifixion, they, of course, made the necessary preparation.

It is said that this crucifixion was perhaps the cruelest way of taking human life that was practised by the Romans. A hole was dug as you dig a posthole. The cross was laid down, and the Savior was laid upon it and nailed with his hands and his feet. Two thieves were likewise crucified, and they were put one on each side.

First Words on the Cross

As apparently they raised the cross to let it slip down with a thud into the hole that had been dug, the Savior cried out, "Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do." It is said that this dropping of the cross into the hole was the most painful part of the entire crucifixion. Modern revisionists have cast doubt on the verity of this divine invocation for love and forgiveness and yet it seems as well attested by ancient manuscripts and sources as any of Jesus' divine utterances.

Second Words on the Cross

Of the thieves, one began to upbraid him and the other to plead for mercy, and it was then that what was called the second outcry from the cross occurred, Jesus saying to the one who spoke kindly, "To day shalt thou be with me in paradise."

Third Words on the Cross

As the Savior looked down into the multitude before him, he saw his mother and John, and "he saith unto his mother, Woman, behold thy son! Then saith he to the disciple, Behold thy mother!"

Darkness Falls

It would seem that at about this time, which was midday, or the sixth hour, darkness fell over the land of Palestine. It is not quite clear, according to some scholars, whether the darkness lasted in Palestine all the rest of the time of the crucifixion, but apparently it did not.

Darkness in America

But the darkness came not only there, it also came on this continent, and the darkness on this continent, which seems to have been coincident with the falling of the darkness there, lasted for three days. The darkness in Palestine lasted only for three hours.

Fourth, Fifth, Sixth, and Seventh Words from the Cross

Apparently when the darkness was over in Palestine, the Savior made that outcry of almost human desperation, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?"

A little later, he said, "I thirst," and those in attendance gave him the sponge saturated with vinegar, which he drank. A little later, he cried out, "It is finished," apparently meaning that his earthly work was done. He had gone through his life. He had made the sacrifice.

Finally, just before his death, he cried out, "Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit."

Thus he became the true sacrifice for the Fall, ordained from the beginning of the world and before.

The Burial

I will not touch upon his burial further than to say that Joseph of Arimathaea had nearby a newly hewn rock sepulchre, to which he and Nicodemus took the body of Jesus—Joseph was recognized as a follower of the Savior; Nicodemus would have been, if he had had the courage, as was so beautifully told yesterday by Elder Kimball. It is interesting to remember that the day that he was buried was the day fixed under the Mosaic law for the gathering of the first sheaf of the harvest, and as some commentators have noted, that while the women who were seated near the sepulchre returned, sorrowful, to their homes in the darkness, for their light had gone out, another group from across the Kedron returned

Saturday, April 5

Second Day

joyously, carrying the sheaf, the first sheaf of the harvest.

That was Friday, yesterday.

The Placing of the Guard

This morning, Saturday, the chief priests and the Pharisees went to Pilate and petitioned, saying, "We remember that that deceiver said, while he was yet alive, After three days I will rise again. Command therefore that the sepulchre be made sure until the third day, lest his disciples come by night, and steal him away, and say unto the people, He is risen from the dead: so the last error shall be worse than the first. Pilate said unto them, Ye have a watch: go your way, make it as sure as ye can."

That was this morning.

Voice in America

Meanwhile, there was darkness on this continent, the darkness having cleared, as I have said, about three o'clock the day before in Palestine. There was a voice on this continent, heard all over the land, which declared: "Behold, I am Jesus Christ the Son of God." He told of the calamities that had befallen them of this continent during the first three hours of violent storm and earthquakes; he told of his own mission and gave them hope. On this continent they could feel the darkness, it was so dense. They could light no fires.

That was today, Saturday.

The Resurrection

Tomorrow morning, Sunday, while it is still dark, there will be an earthquake, for an angel of the Lord will come down and roll back the stone that closed the sepulchre.

While it is still dark, Mary Magdalene will be coming, and finding the sepulchre open, will rush back to Peter and John and tell them that the sepulchre is vacant. They will run, John outrunning Peter, to the sepulchre, look in and find it vacant.

Meanwhile Mary will have come and the Savior will appear to her, a repentant and forgiven sinner, a woman, the first witness of the resurrection. You will remember, she will try to touch him and he will say to her, "Touch me not; for I am not yet ascended to my Father."

Shortly after, the women from Galilee will come, expecting to go in, the Sabbath now being past, and prepare the body finally for burial. There will be two angels in the sepulchre, and they will say to them: "Why seek ye the living among the dead? . . . Ye seek Jesus of Nazareth, which was crucified: he is risen; he is not here . . . go quickly, and tell his disciples."

And so there will thus be worked out in the morning, the atoning sacrifice, predicted, provided for, before the foundations of the earth were laid.

Salvation, Not Condemnation

I have been interested in reading why the Savior himself said he came here. In that first great sermon of which Brother Kimball spoke to us yesterday, the Savior said to Nicodemus:

"For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through him might be saved."

When Pilate was questioning the Savior about his Kingship, the Savior said: "Thou sayest that I am a king. To this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world, that I should bear witness unto the truth."

To them on this continent he said: "Behold, I have come unto the world to bring redemption unto the world, to save the world from sin."

You know, I have thought about that a bit. He came not to condemn the world, but to save it, to save you, to save me. He has told us there are many mansions. He has told us there is no space without a kingdom. He has told us that there are kingdoms with glory and kingdoms without glory. He has made a place for all of us, no matter who we are, where we are, how or when we lived.

The Final Judgment

I have a feeling, my brothers and sisters, that when the time comes for passing judgment, that great principle not to condemn the world, but to save it, will be fully operative and that for every good deed we have done, we shall receive the full reward that it is possible to bestow under the rules and laws governing, and having in mind justice. And I have the further feeling that for every ill thing we do there will be imposed upon us the least penalty that may properly be bestowed, having in mind the principles involved,—eternal justice seasoned by mercy and love.

In the Passover Chamber, the Savior had said they could not go where he was going, but they knew where it was. Thomas said he did not know. Where was it? And then the Savior uttered those great words: "I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by me."

Over and over again in his ministry, he proclaimed those principles. He is the way, he is the life, he is the truth, he is the light. That is the message which comes to us, and may God give to each of us the power to follow him, to live in his light, tread his way, observe his truths, I humbly pray, in the name of Jesus, his Son. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr. of the First Presidency has just addressed us. We shall now hear from Elder Antoine R. Ivins of the First Council of Seventy, who will be followed by Elder Alma Sonne.

ELDER ANTOINE R. IVINS

Of the First Council of the Seventy

My beloved brethren and sisters, it is almost a frightening situation to face you and realize the obligation that that implies on my part. I seek an interest in your faith and prayers that anything that I may say may be directed by the Spirit of God our Heavenly Father.

First, I desire to say to Sister Bennion, Sister McKay, and Sister Kirkham, that I loved their husbands dearly and miss their presence today and hope that God will comfort the sisters in the absence of these wonderful men.

As you have been told, I am a member of the First Council of the Seventy, a group selected to proclaim the restored gospel of Jesus Christ, and I am always interested in the progress that that great movement makes. There are many ways of doing it, of course; there are many fields of labor in which we embark to spread a knowledge of the restored gospel of Jesus Christ.

I have enjoyed the remarks of President Clark. I believe that there has come into my heart through inspiration and revelation a testimony that Jesus Christ is the Son of God, that he has worked out for us the means by which we can return to the presence of God, even in exaltation.

Last night we had a very interesting missionary meeting, and from my point of view, one of the most pleasing features of it was the very sweet and humble testimony of a new member of the Church as to the joys and the satisfactions that have come into his heart after having found what he called the pearl of great price. That comes about because the priesthood of God has been restored to the earth. The men who hold that priesthood have the obligation, which is really a privilege, of carrying to the world a knowledge of the plan of life and salvation, which through experience and observation I can testify is really true and effective in the lives of men and women who accept it and live it. People who accept that testimony have the privilege of coming into the fold and enjoying the many blessings that can result through the ministry of the priesthood of God.

It is a wonderful responsibility to hold that priesthood. It is a tremendous opportunity that we have in its administration, not only for the benefit of others who have not understood it and appreciated it, but for our own sakes as well.

It is now twenty-four years since I first stood at this pulpit and bore my testimony to you. In that time I have had the pleasure of ministering among the people of the stakes and the wards, and I have been in the territory of all the mission fields of Mexico, Canada, and the United States. I have seen it effective in the lives of people, and verily it is, as we were told last night, a pearl of great price which is within the reach of all who will strive to get it.

Saturday, April 5

Now the pearl of great price is not a bound volume. We have one we call the Pearl of Great Price, of course, but that is not the pearl of great price to which I refer. The pearl of great price—what is it? It is the opportunity, I believe, to earn an exaltation in the kingdom of God, which comes to us as a merciful gift from Christ our Lord. Now, there are many others who have the privilege of earning that great gift.

I like to think of the pearl of great price as being in escrow, brethren and sisters, and we can only receive it—and perhaps we will not know whether or not we have done it successfully until the end of our days—by obtaining and exercising and magnifying the offices of the priesthood. That is what it means, brethren and sisters, the opportunity of the priesthood magnified in the lives of men and women, and the exaltation that can come about through that exercise.

To me that is the pearl of great price. It will never be retrieved from escrow until God gives us the word of commendation for a life well lived.

There are many, many men in the priesthood of God; we were told yesterday that there are almost 203,000 men in the Melchizedek Priesthood, and those men have that opportunity and that responsibility. As I have moved about among the stakes and checked in recent years, I have discovered, however, that there are many people who have gone through the formality of having that blessing bestowed upon them who evidently do not appreciate it. I have come to think that the Melchizedek Priesthood, perhaps, in certain sections, is the most unappreciated gift that we have. In many sections where I have been there are at least thirty percent of the elders who are reported inactive. Of course, I do not know just what "inactivity" means, but certain it is that when they are reported as such they are not striving fully to magnify their calling.

I like to suggest to those people the advantage of doing it—to hold up to them an incentive for it, and I would like to read you a little from the Doctrine and Covenants, which sets up that privilege:

For whoso is faithful unto the obtaining these two priesthoods of which I have spoken, and the magnifying their calling [mind you, the magnifying of their calling], are sanctified by the Spirit unto the renewing of their bodies.

They become the sons of Moses and of Aaron and the seed of Abraham, and the church and kingdom, and the elect of God.

Now that means, to become the elect of God one has to magnify his calling in the priesthood.

And also all they who receive this priesthood receive me, saith the Lord;

For he that receiveth my servants receiveth me;

And he that receiveth me receiveth my Father;

And he that receiveth my Father receiveth my Father's kingdom; therefore all that my Father hath shall be given unto him.

And this is according to the oath and covenant which belongeth to the priesthood.

Therefore, all those who receive the priesthood, receive this oath and covenant of my Father, which he cannot break, neither can it be moved. (D & C 84:33-40.)

Now that, my brethren and sisters, is the blessing that may be obtained by magnifying the calling we have in the priesthood. Two hundred and three thousand men have that opportunity. Two hundred and three thousand men, if they live to avail themselves of all of the privileges of the Melchizedek Priesthood, will be able to take from escrow that pearl of great price which is, in my opinion, exaltation in the kingdom of God our Heavenly Father.

The culminating privilege in the testimony of that fine brother last night was the fact that he had been able to take his wife and children to the temple in Los Angeles, to be sealed to his wife and have his children sealed to him. In many, many meetings which I have attended, meetings of elders and their wives and of reclaimed members of the Church, if you will permit that expression, the culminating blessing to which these brethren have testified is the privilege of being sealed to their wives and having their children sealed to them in the temple of God; and still, not fifty percent of our people who marry avail themselves of that privilege. All that our Father hath shall be given to him who magnifies that calling, and that means that he shall take his wife to the temple, because we are told also that men who succeed in fully living up to all of the privileges and responsibilities of the Melchizedek Priesthood shall become gods with the power of eternal increase. That is the pearl of great price, brethren and sisters.

Then, why should we not strive, once we have been offered that privilege, to magnify it?

Now it is our duty, the duty of those of us who strive to do it, to help others to realize the importance of it and then give aid and succor where it is necessary to strengthen in their determination these people who have not yet seen fit to qualify for all these blessings. We have many of them, yes, many of them, and who are they? They are our brothers, our cousins, our uncles, and in cases, our fathers. I had an elder in my chair, setting him apart one day, and asked his father if he could help me, it being a Melchizedek Priesthood function, and he said, "No." I said, "Well, brother, you have to be careful, because as soon as this son of yours gets in the mission field he is going to start to work on you to convince you of these things." He said, "Brother Ivins, he is not waiting to get in the mission field; he is starting now."

Well, there we are, brethren and sisters. That is just a typical instance of many men who are willing that their sons should go out and serve in this cause and are hopeful that their sons will be able to live better lives than they have.

On another occasion, as one of those fathers left my office, I said, "Now, the next time you bring a son in, and you say it is going to be soon, be sure that you can help me." He said, "I will."

Now, brethren and sisters, we all know that these things are important in our lives, but why cannot we develop the courage that it takes to qualify for the Spirit of God through exercising the priesthood that has been given to us to the very fullest of our ability? Why cannot we? That is the great and important problem, it seems to me, brethren and sisters.

I testify to you that priesthood is virile in the lives of men, that it is actual, that it has been restored. Bless your soul, in one direction, there are only two steps between my ordination as an elder and the Prophet Joseph Smith. It is here, brethren and sisters, in its vigor and in its strength and in its purity in unbroken line. Now why cannot we live worthy of it and magnify it?

May God help us to do it, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER ALMA SONNE

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve Apostles

My brethren and sisters, I have been deeply impressed by the stirring and sublime messages which have come to us during this conference, also by the singing of the choirs—for singing, after all, is surely a part of divine worship.

Someone has said that the best evidence of Christ's divinity is Christ himself.

A few years ago I made some notes which I headed, "Jesus Christ—a Reality." I had two reasons for making the notes. One was that I had just read an article entitled "Jesus Christ—a Myth," and the other was the reading of a summary in a Denver newspaper of some sermons delivered on the previous Sunday. One of the ministers, according to the report, made the following statement: "It matters not to me whether the historical Jesus lived or not so long as I have access to the philosophy of life which is attributed to him."

The protestant minister who made this statement, it appears, is willing to teach Christianity without Christ. By

Saturday, April 5

Second Day

so doing he removes the greatest and strongest incentive to live a Christlike life. But Jesus cannot be disposed of in any such flippant and thoughtless manner. He still lives not only in the hearts of mankind but also on the pages of history, and he is still the most beautiful and attractive personality in human history.

It was Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll who said many years ago: "For the man Jesus, I have the profoundest admiration. I gladly pay to him the homage of my tears; but for Jesus as the Son of God, I will have nothing to do with him."

I submit to you, my brethren and sisters, that the statement made by Mr. Ingersoll is not one whit more unchristian than that made by the minister who occupied a Christian pulpit. It is said that when Ingersoll died many of the preachers in Christendom searched in their vocabularies for words that sting and bite with which to execrate his memory.

It is reported that Napoleon once said, "Is it not amazing that the ambitious dreams of Alexander the Great, Julius Caesar, and Napoleon Bonaparte should vanish into thin air and a Jewish peasant should extend a crucified hand across the pages of history and control the destinies of the human family?"

Some of you will recall that a few years ago H. G. Wells, the historian, was asked to write down the names of six characters in world history, who, in his opinion, had wielded the greatest influence for good among the children of men. Without any pause or hesitation he quickly wrote the name Jesus of Nazareth. He then remarked: "But I am not a Christian. I am a writer of history." He then put down four more names, all of which I have forgotten. But he ended the list with the name, Abraham Lincoln, who presided over this nation during the crucial days of the Civil War.

It was Lincoln who said: "I am not bound to win, but I am bound to be true. I am not bound to succeed, but I am bound to live up to what light I have. I stand with a man who is right, and I stand with him as long as he is right, but I part company with him when he is wrong." I have always regarded Abraham Lincoln as our greatest statesman who exemplified Christian ideals in his management of the nation.

As intimidated by these men, Jesus stands alone even among the world's greatest like a tall majestic mountain which lifts its form above the hills and valleys. There is no one with whom he can be compared. We readily classify all leaders who have achieved and won fame in music, in art, in literature, in statesmanship, and even in militarism, but we cannot put Jesus with any group. History has accounted for most men.

The intellectual activity of the sixteenth century, for instance, produced Shakespeare, Milton, and many others. The struggle and desire for freedom in the eighteenth century made men like Thomas Jefferson, George Washington, Patrick Henry, Benjamin Franklin, John Adams, Alexander Hamilton, and others. The wild robber spirit of the east produced Alexander the Great. But who, except the believer, will account for Jesus? He came out of a city noted for ignorance, yet he rose to intellectual and spiritual heights. He lived in a period of hatred and bigotry, yet he personified love and goodwill. His name and fame have been remembered, and yet he wrote no book to keep alive his memory. His gospel of salvation was entrusted to a few humble men whom he trained for three years and sent forth to proclaim his truths. These men, judged by worldly standards, were meek and lowly and without influence in the recognized circles of their day. Discussion of Jesus has filled volumes. His memory is everywhere. He takes a place midmost in history and is the central figure around which events are woven. Strangely enough, he is both loved and hated. There are people on earth today who would crucify him the second time were he to come again.

A determined effort was made to blot him out completely, yet he lives in the hearts of men and women the world over. Many have died for him and there are many who would die for him today if it were necessary. He is slowly but surely conquering the world. His contemporaries, like Pontius Pilate and Herod the Great, would probably have been forgotten were it not for their association and connection with him during their lives.

What is the position of the Church with respect to this great, outstanding character about whom we have heard so much today? This morning we heard a wonderful and powerful sermon delivered by President J. Reuben Clark, Jr., concerning Christ's resurrection, his last three days on the earth, and the atonement he wrought out on Calvary. There are those who claim to be followers of the Nazarine who deny, ridicule, and endeavor to explain away the great miracles connected with his ministry among men. To them we say, "Christianity is either history or nothing." To deny Christ's divinity is to turn one's back on the integrity and reliability of many scriptural declarations and to question the revelations of God.

Mormonism declares that Jesus Christ lived upon the earth, that he mingled with men, that he preached his powerful Sermon on the Mount to a small group of friends and associates who gathered on a mountainside, that he performed mighty miracles, that he was born of the Virgin Mary, that he was put to death on the cross by his enemies, that he arose from the grave on the third day after his crucifixion, and finally, that he is the Son of God. Mormonism also declares that he chose twelve apostles, that he commissioned them to preach the gospel of salvation which he had taught them, and that like him they performed many miracles in his name and established his Church upon the earth.

May we always remember him and keep all the commandments which he has given us, I pray in his name. Amen.

BISHOP CARL W. BUEHNER

Second Counselor in the Presiding Bishopric

I esteem it a great honor, my brothers and sisters, to be in your presence and to bear you my humble testimony of the divinity of this great work. As I look into the faces of this large audience of leaders gathered from all parts of the Church, fully aware of the tremendous activity going on in the Church, I feel to say, "God bless you every one."

Last Wednesday and Thursday, I enjoyed the honor of attending and participating in a number of sessions of the outstanding Primary conference. I came to a realization, more than ever before, of the marvelous influence of these sisters on the lives of our children. I would like wholeheartedly to commend them for the fine work they are doing and assure them that they have the love and blessing of each of us.

Among other things, they are teaching the Articles of Faith in language the children can understand. This after all is the very heart of the gospel. They are also conducting departments which are providing a great stimulation in preparing the young boys to receive the Aaronic Priesthood.

I heard a story the other day that could well be the result of the teaching of the Primary organization. This concerned a family who came to the bishop at tithing settlement time. In the group were the father, mother, and a number of children. As they came into the bishop's office, he greeted each of them, and when they were all seated, the bishop said, "I assume you have come to talk to me about your tithing and that you would each like to express your wishes concerning your own tithing account. Shall we start with little Johnny on the end of the line? Johnny, would you like to come forward and settle your tithing?" To this Johnny replied, "Yes," and he reached in his pocket, brought out a little worn purse, and after fumbling around in it a little while, found a dime, two nickels, and two or three pennies. He put these on the bishop's desk and said, "Bishop, this is my tithing in full." The bishop congratulated Johnny, wrote him out a receipt, indicated on it that it was tithing in full, and gave it to him. Returning to his seat, Johnny very proudly displayed the receipt to his father and said, "Dad, when you settle yours, I hope you will get one that says on it, 'Paid in full.'"

Saturday, April 5

Second Day

Faith-promoting stories such as this indicate to me that someone is providing our children with a desire to keep the principles of the gospel.

I feel honored and very grateful that I have been found worthy to be one of those selected to preside over the Aaronic Priesthood in this growing Church of ours. I sincerely hope that the Lord will assist us in our objective of saving every boy who comes under our direction. Some of the bishops are catching the vision and spirit of this. Not long ago I sat with one of these brethren while attending a ward teaching convention. He said to me, "Bishop, we have not lost one boy of Aaronic Priesthood age in our ward in the past five years." And just recently in a ward in the West Jordan Stake, a ward Aaronic Priesthood adviser made a similar statement, "Bishop, we have lost only one boy in six years." Then I recall at Christmas time being in my own ward and hearing my own bishop say to me, "This morning out of forty-eight boys holding the Aaronic Priesthood in our ward, forty-four were present at priesthood meeting, three had good excuses, and out of the forty-eight, only one is a problem boy." I imagine when all of the big guns are centered on that one boy, he will succumb, too. It will be easier for him to come to church than to endure all the pressure that will be put on him to bring him back into activity.

I have always been a great believer in our young men. I am happy to be associated with them, and I appreciate what you are doing to help us keep every one of them active in the Church.

A charming sister, Janet Frame Mecham, whose husband is the chairman of the Aaronic Priesthood committee in one of our stakes, observing the activities of her husband as he went about the work assigned to him, wrote the following lines:

Let's Accelerate in Fifty-Eight

In fifty-eight let's co-operate
To accomplish what we designate.
Our record we'll accentuate
As each member we will stimulate.

In the plan we want to instigate,
Let's not one of us procrastinate,
But each thing we shall inaugurate,
Let's unanimously corroborate.

There are methods we'll incorporate,
And others we must perpetuate.
But some we cannot tolerate
As we keep our plans right up-to-date.

Let each one our time here dedicate
To each job our leaders delegate,
And our efforts unitedly concentrate
So each priesthood bearer will participate.

Joy and blessings forever compensate
For the work and plans we consummate.
There are stakes we could impersonate,
But each one we should evaluate.

Take the best from each and contemplate
How their methods we'll accelerate
So our record will reverberate
Through the Church in nineteen fifty-eight.

I am sure her husband could not have produced such a masterpiece.

Our problem does not concern us so much with the boys under twenty-one since their records are improving each year but with those who are over twenty-one who through the years have slipped into inactivity. These brethren we designate as senior members of the Aaronic Priesthood. I do not know when these brethren all got away from us, but I do know that we now have the greatest program we have ever had to bring them back to an appreciation of this great power called the priesthood—Aaronic Priesthood. Last year some three hundred and fifty schools for senior members of the Aaronic Priesthood were held in the Church. From these schools came a tremendous result for good. I have heard men bear their testimonies with tears dripping from their cheeks, grateful for the program of reactivation and that someone has gone out of his way to put his arm around them and invite them back into the activities of the priesthood program.

Brethren, we have some eighty thousand men like this. I hope through the united effort of all of the organizations that can make a contribution that we will have success in bringing back into activity most of these men who are depriving themselves of the blessings of our Heavenly Father, because they are now outside and not inside enjoying the blessings which come from magnifying the priesthood that they bear.

Recently, a sister who is the wife of one of these brethren said among other things while addressing a session of quarterly conference, "All I want for Christmas is a temple marriage." Her husband sitting in front of her heard this request. I would like eighty thousand other women to challenge their husbands to prepare their lives so that there can be eighty thousand temple marriages of this same type. We would strengthen the activity in this Church as we have never seen it before.

Responding to an assignment to give a talk, a senior member of the Aaronic Priesthood in the Portland Stake quoted a few familiar lines from Benjamin Franklin's Almanac:

For the want of a nail, the shoe was lost.
 For the want of the shoe, the horse was lost.
 For the want of the horse, the rider was lost.
 For the want of the rider, the battle was lost.
 For the loss of the battle, the kingdom was lost,
 And all because of a nail.

This senior member paraphrased these few lines, and this is what he said:

For the want of activity, the love was lost.
 For the want of love, the service was lost.
 For the want of service, the faith was lost.
 For the want of faith, the repentance was lost.
 For the want of repentance, the salvation was lost.

For the loss of salvation, a place in God's kingdom was lost.
 And all because of the want of activity.

I do not have time to elaborate on this, but I think that man had a great thought.

What is the Aaronic Priesthood? It is a power that has been delegated to man that has in it great blessings and great opportunities to serve. The Aaronic Priesthood was named after a devoted and faithful man, Aaron, the brother of Moses, who was given to Moses as a spokesman since, as the scriptures record, Moses was slow of speech. It was by the power of the Aaronic Priesthood that John the Baptist came crying in the wilderness and told of one coming who was greater and mightier than he and who would perform great miracles. It was by the power of this same priesthood that the Savior of the world was baptized in the River Jordan by John the Baptist. It was this same John the Baptist who under the direction of Peter, James, and John restored the Aaronic Priesthood to Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery. After his ascension, Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery, by the authority of the Aaronic Priesthood that had come to them, baptized each other in the Susquehanna River. It is the power by which the emblems of the Sacrament are administered each Sunday and given to the members of the Church in remembrance of the broken body and the spilt blood of the Savior of the world.

It is the power by which young men are designated as ward teachers to go with their senior companions into the homes of members of the Church to preach, teach, expound, and the other things spoken of in the Doctrine and Covenants. It is also the power by which a young boy twelve years of age comes to your door and offers you a blessing by inviting you to make a contribution to the fast offering funds of the Church. It is a great honor to be a bearer of the Aaronic Priesthood and to magnify that power which has come through being so honored.

I would like to say to the seventy or eighty thousand other bearers of the Aaronic Priesthood who are men, now likely heads of families, I wish that to you, too, could come the blessing that comes to every active bearer of the Aaronic Priesthood. I would like you to know that you are invited to come into our chapels. There have been many who have said, "I have been away so long, I think I am not wanted." You will never know how much you are wanted, and you will never know how much good it will do you, too. The Church needs you, but you also need the Church. Your family needs you, as a man magnifying the priesthood, to stand at the head of your home.

I have heard a few verses of poetry quoted that have a line which goes something like this, "And I stepped in your footsteps all the way." Would we be proud if our boys stepped in our footsteps all the way? We would if we were magnifying the priesthood and enjoying the blessings that come to us through faithful participation.

In conclusion I would like to say that it has been reported that someone said a dirt-road traveler traveling along the highway saw a sign that read, "You had better pick your rut now because you are going to be in it for the next twenty miles." There is nothing that says you are going to be in it for the rest of your life, and while most of us may detour a little—we get in trouble, and we may be in a rut for a little while—it does not mean we cannot get out of the rut and get on a good, hard highway and make up for the years we were in the rut by getting on that road that leads us to life eternal.

I bear you my testimony, my brethren of the Aaronic Priesthood, that if you will magnify that priesthood and work for its great blessings, even greater blessings will come to you, and then one day will come to pass that which this one sister asked for, "All I want for Christmas is a temple marriage."

May it come to each of us, and may we find joy in assisting these brethren back into activity in the Church, I pray humbly in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

He to whom we have just listened is Bishop Carl W. Buehner of the Presiding Bishopric. We shall now hear from Elder Clifford E. Young, Assistant to the Twelve. He will be followed by Elder Ezra Taft Benson.

ELDER CLIFFORD E. YOUNG

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve Apostles

My brethren and sisters, you will readily understand that in the interest of time I can only bear my witness to the truth of the messages we have received thus far in this conference. As I have listened this morning, I have been profoundly impressed. I think that it would be a good thing for all of us, after listening to President Clark, if we could become familiar with the manual that our brethren of the Melchizedek Priesthood are using this year. As you doubtless know, we are using Our Lord of the Gospels, that splendid book Brother Clark has given to us after years and years of careful study. We are not Bible readers. Here is an opportunity for us in our homes to become such, and I would like to recommend that the members of the families—not only the priesthood—but all the members, become familiar with this monumental work by reading the Melchizedek Priesthood manual. At first it may appear to be somewhat complicated and involved, but it is not. It is beautiful because of its simplicity, and I am sure all will so regard it if they read it.

Now, to make a comment or two in harmony with what has been said on this occasion: We are celebrating Easter. It is a time when our hearts are turned to our fathers, to our children, to those whom we love who have passed to the other side. I have thought a lot about my colleague, Brother Thomas E. McKay, by whom I have sat for seventeen years. I had a deep affection for him and he for me. We understood each other. This understanding of which I speak is impressively expressed in the Letters of Franklin K. Lane published after his death. He was the Secretary of the Interior under Woodrow Wilson, and a man from the West. He was ill in the Mayo Hospital. It was his last illness. He wrote his memoirs, or Letters, and as he concluded he wrote the following the day he died:

But for my heart's content in that new land, I think I would rather loaf with Lincoln along a river bank. I know I could understand him. I would not have to learn who were his friends and who his enemies, what theories he was committed to, and what against. We could just talk and open our minds, and tell our doubts, and swap the longings of our hearts that others never heard of. He would not try to master me nor make me feel how small I was. I would dare to ask him things and know that he felt awkward about them, too. We would talk of men a lot, the kind they call the great, and I would not find him scornful. . . .

I feel that way this morning as I have thought about these Brethren, and especially about Brother Thomas E. McKay, whom I learned to admire so much.

Now, the message, briefly, is this, my brethren and sisters: These, our associates, of whom we have heard, whom we all learned to appreciate because of their devotion to the Church—and they were devoted men—I have known them for many years and had their help when I was working in stake organizations; in the MIA, the help of Brother Oscar A. Kirkham; Brother Adam S. Bennion visiting us as a member of the general Sunday School board; and then our association with Brother Thomas E. McKay for these past seventeen years.

In their passing we have learned, I think, two lessons—and I will just mention them. The first one is this: As we think of tomorrow, Easter Sunday—the Savior died on the cross, but that was not the end. He merely laid his body down to be healed of its infirmities. It was the cloak that covered his spirit. That is precisely what we will do. During those three days that his body lay in the tomb he was active. Peter tells us:

For Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit.

By which also he went and preached unto the spirits in prison,

Which sometime were disobedient, when once the longsuffering of God waited in the days of Noah, wherein few, that is, eight souls were saved by water. (1 Peter 3:18-20.)

Here Jesus was again teaching them. How beautifully that harmonizes with the message of hope that Brother Clark has given us.

Of course, we have to repent and make amends, but there is this message of hope because God wants to save his children. And so we lay our bodies down. The Savior laid his down, but he was active and busy, and then in three days he took it up, a body of flesh and bones. It doubtless was not entirely healed. The scars were still there. He showed them to the doubting disciples. ". . . handle me, and see," he said, "for a spirit hath not flesh and bone; as ye see me have." (Luke 24:39.)

And so we lay our coats away. These Brethren whom we love have laid theirs away, but not their spirits. They are active on the other side. I dare say that they know this day what we are doing, and they may be near us as we meet today. It is a glorious thought—this message of Easter and the resurrection.

Now, the other lesson: As we met in the final services—we were in the Assembly Hall for Brother Thomas E. and Brother Oscar, and here in this Tabernacle for Brother Bennion—we were all touched. Our hearts were mellowed. They were full of compassion. Brethren and sisters, is not that spirit the agency that is going to make this world better prepared for the second coming of the Savior? We were all sympathetic and thoughtful of those in sorrow with no unkindness in our hearts. To me that is one of the purposes of death. We do not understand all of its purposes, but there is a refining element, a healing balm that comes from the sorrow incident to the passing of those we love.

I want to read these lines from Catherine Marshall, who wrote so feelingly after her husband's passing. Peter Marshall had been Chaplain of the U S Senate and was widely known for his faith and integrity.

For the first time I understood why the Bible speaks of God's love as a refiner's fire,

Saturday, April 5

which burns us clean but does not consume. The pain of parting was like a burning flame in my heart, but it was a cleansing, refining action, consuming the dross and leaving the imperishable part of me intact and stronger than ever before. (From A Man Called Peter.)

Is not that what these experiences do for all of us? And it is true whenever we are called to a house of mourning. The Lord said, "It is better to go to the house of mourning, than to go to the house of feasting: . . ." (Ecc. 7:2.) He knew what sorrow, affliction, and death would do for his children, and we know from experience what they do for us.

You multiply that attitude of sympathy and thoughtfulness throughout the world—and no one is immune; it is an experience vouchsafed to everyone—and you will comprehend the saving grace that lies in sorrow, anguish, and affliction. The Lord knew what it would mean to his children; how such would rekindle in the hearts of men love, sympathy, and greater compassion and thoughtfulness toward one another.

Paul wrote of Jesus, "Though he were a Son, yet learned he obedience by the things which he suffered." (Heb. 5:8.) Obedience of mind and of soul! We learn obedience of the soul, and we learn to harmonize our thinking and our feelings with all that is good because of these blessings, and then with these blessings there comes a glorious blessing of a reuniting as there came the glorious blessing of the Savior coming back to his disciples as a living reality—the Resurrected Lord.

And to you and me this has been reaffirmed in this day through the Prophet Joseph, for which we are humbly grateful to our Heavenly Father. In the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Elder Clifford E. Young, Assistant to the Twelve, has just spoken to us. Our concluding speaker will be Elder Ezra Taft Benson, a member of the Council of the Twelve.

ELDER EZRA TAFT BENSON

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

My brethren and sisters and friends, seen and unseen: I am grateful beyond my power of expression for the blessings of this conference. I have in my pocket a perfectly good manuscript which I feel impressed not to impose upon you today. There is something in my heart I should like to say in the few moments remaining in this meeting.

Like some of my Brethren who have referred to the recent passing of our three beloved associates, I, too, miss them deeply. It may come as somewhat of a surprise to some when I say that Brother Adam S. Bennion, who was older than he appeared, was my teacher. I am probably younger than I appear, but Brother Bennion was one of the truly great teachers who have touched my life.

For a term at the Alpine summer school, of Brigham Young University, I was fortunate enough to sit at the feet of Adam S. Bennion in a course that I shall never forget—a course in biography. I remember the term paper which he assigned to us. It caused us to turn the searchlight on our own lives. The subject was "Why I Am What I Am." Under his stimulating direction that group of students searched their souls for the influences that had come into their lives, the examples that had been set them, the temptations that had crossed their paths, and the influences of the Church and of good men and women. I still have that term paper; I am grateful to Brother Bennion that he turned my thoughts inward and made me analyze my own life and the influences which had affected the life of a young man up to that time. I am grateful for the contribution which he made as one of the great teachers of the Church. My life has been enriched. He helped inspire me to seek the good things which I enjoy.

I had the glorious privilege of traveling to stake conferences with Brother Thomas E. McKay. I think I never met a sweeter, more humble, and more beloved man. He was good to be with. I loved him. My life has been enriched through my association with Thomas E. McKay.

As an MIA worker I was stimulated and inspired as a boy, and later as a stake superintendent of the YMMIA by Brother Oscar A. Kirkham. He had the power to inspire youth and their leaders to noble achievement. I loved him as he loved the youth of the Church.

God bless the memory of these three noble souls whom we miss so much today. The world is a better place to live because they lived in it. I hope to live worthy to meet them in the eternal world.

My brethren and sisters, I love the Church and all that pertains to it. It has been my pleasure in the last few years to mingle with many people in and out of the Church. I am very grateful for the spirit of brotherhood and fellowship which we find in the Church. This spirit is a somewhat intangible thing. It is difficult to describe. But it is real—powerful—sweet. You have to feel it to appreciate it.

Recently with my wife, two daughters, and members of my staff, I made a world trade trip which took me into fourteen countries. In most of these countries I was very proud and happy to meet members of the Church. They were at the airports to welcome us and bid us farewell as we departed. Several groups came to the embassies to see us.

In far-off Japan it was a joy to join with some four hundred Japanese members of the Church in a Sunday morning service. We rejoiced to have the privilege to meet with our Mormon servicemen, some of whom had traveled a thousand miles to attend meetings on the Sabbath day. I will long remember the meeting with the Saints in Hong Kong, some of them refugees from Red China, and the spirit present as I met with local and full-time missionaries, and mingled with the Saints. We met with groups of the Saints in Turkey, in Greece, in Spain, in France, in England. Yes, even in the country of Jordan we met a family or two of the Saints in a Union Sunday School, a Christian Sunday School attended by many fine people of various faiths. I had the glorious privilege of addressing the group, and I was very pleased to find in the leadership of the Sunday School a member of the Church living the gospel, promoting the kingdom through example and through word of mouth.

I had many pleasant gospel conversations. Good people—heads of states and other high officials in India, Pakistan, Jordan, Israel, Italy, Portugal, and other countries showed sincere interest in the Church and its people. Much Church literature has been mailed to new-found, good friends around the world. Their hospitality and friendliness will never be forgotten. Although we felt especially close to members of the Church, we were impressed with the fact that people everywhere are essentially good. They long for peace. They love their families and seek to improve themselves and raise their standards of living. I came back with a greater love for all of God's children—for he has truly "made of one blood all nations."

So, my brothers and sisters, as I travel about the world, it is a glorious thing to note how the Church is growing and increasing. One very fine leader of a foreign state, when I asked him if there were any Mormons in his particular capital city, said: "Mr. Secretary, I have traveled a great deal, and I have come to believe that the Mormons are everywhere. Wherever I go, I find them." His statement called to mind an incident when we first moved to Washington, back in 1939 or 1940. I had gone to my office early to get some work done before the telephones started ringing. I had just seated myself at the desk when the telephone rang. The man at the other end said, "I would like to have lunch with you today. I am a stranger to you, but I have something that is very urgent." I consented reluctantly, and a few hours later we faced each other across a luncheon table at a downtown hotel.

He said, "I suppose you wonder why I have invited you here." Then he added: "Last week as I came out of a luncheon meeting in Chicago, I told some of my business associates that I had been given the responsibility of coming down to Washington, D. C., to establish an office and employ a man to represent our corporation." Then he listed some of the assets in his great business organization. He said, "I began telling my associates of the kind of young man I would like to represent us in this office in Washington. First of all, I said to my associates, I wanted a man of sterling character. You know, where there isn't character there isn't much that is worth while. I would like a man who is honest, a man of real integrity, a man who lives a clean life, who is clean morally, who, if married, is a devoted husband, and who, if unmarried, is not chasing lewd women." He said, "I would like a man who doesn't drink, and if possible I would prefer to get a man who doesn't even smoke. One of my business associates spoke up and said, 'Well, what you want is a returned Mormon missionary.' I had heard of your Church," he said. "In fact, I recall two young men in dark suits calling at our home some months ago. As I rode down here on the train last night, I decided that maybe a returned Mormon missionary was exactly what I needed. Why not? So as I registered at the hotel here last night I said to the man at the desk, 'Are there any Mormons in Washington?' And the man at the desk said, 'I don't know, I suppose there are. They seem to be everywhere. But Mr. Bush, the manager, is here, and I'll ask him.' He asked Mr. Bush and gave me your name. Now that is why I have invited you here. Can you give me the names of three or four young men who meet the standards which I have just outlined?"

Saturday, April 5

Second Day

Well, of course it was not difficult to give him the names of three or four or a dozen who fully met the standards he outlined. I mention this, my brethren and sisters and friends, because in the Church we have certain standards, standards of living, standards of morality, standards of character which are coming to be well known to the world. These standards are admired. People with such standards are sought after. These standards are based upon true, eternal principles. They are eternal verities.

In the Church we have no fear that any future discovery of new truths will ever be in conflict with these standards—with any fundamental basic principle which we advocate in the gospel. Truth is always consistent. This fact gives to us, as members of the Church, a feeling of great security, a feeling of peace, a feeling of assurance. We know beyond any question that the truths which we advocate, the truths of the gospel restored to the earth through the Prophet Joseph, are in very deed the truths of heaven. These truths will always be consistent with the discovery of any new truths, whether discovered in the laboratory, through research of the scientist, or whether revealed from heaven through prophets of God. Time is always on the side of truth.

I am grateful for this assurance. I am grateful for the knowledge which I have regarding the purpose of life, regarding the meaning of life, regarding the truths of the restored gospel. At this Easter season I would like to join my testimony to the testimonies of my Brethren which have already been borne, and those that will be borne in the remaining sessions of this conference.

In a world filled with doubt I am grateful for the knowledge which I have that God lives, that Jesus is in very deed the Redeemer of the world, the Savior of mankind; that that beautiful story which President Clark related here this morning is in very deed the account of the crucifixion and the resurrection of Jesus the Christ, the Redeemer of mankind. I am humbly grateful for the knowledge that I have that God the Father and his Son, Jesus Christ, as glorified beings have again come to this earth in our day, in this dispensation; that they did in very deed appear unto the boy prophet, the boy Joseph, in the Sacred Grove in 1820. This was the most glorious manifestation of God the Father and the Son of which we have record. It is, no doubt, the most glorious and most important event that has transpired in this world since the resurrection of the Master. It is of world-wide significance.

I testify to you, my brethren and sisters and friends, that Joseph Smith was and is a Prophet of the Living God, an instrument in the hands of God in revealing to earth again the truths of the everlasting gospel, in bringing back the priesthood, the authority to act in God's name.

I am grateful for the privilege of living in this day when the gospel is again upon the earth in its purity, in its fullness, and that we are permitted to enjoy the fruits of the gospel through membership in the Church and kingdom of God. This is the Church of Jesus Christ. He stands at its head. We serve him in striving to build up his kingdom, and in promoting the cause of truth throughout all the world.

God bless us, my brethren and sisters, and hasten the day when the gospel will touch the lives and the hearts of all God's children in all lands, that they too may know of the sweets of the gospel, and the blessing of a testimony of the truth, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

The speaker to whom you have just listened is Elder Ezra Taft Benson, a member of the Council of the Twelve.

The combined Choruses of the Logan Latter-day Saints Institute and the Utah State University will now favor us with, "The Lord Bless You and Keep You," conducted by James L. Bradley. The closing prayer will be offered by Elder Jared O. Anderson, president of the North Pocatello Stake, after which this Conference will be adjourned until 2 o'clock this afternoon.

As already announced to the audience, the singing for this session has been furnished by the Combined Choruses of the Logan Latter-day Saints Institute and the Utah State University, consisting of 300 voices, with Professor Bradley conducting. Frank W. Asper has been at the organ. We appreciate very much what these young people have done. They left Logan this morning, came down in buses, and are furnishing the music for this occasion. They will be with us this afternoon.

SECOND DAY

AFTERNOON MEETING

The fourth session of the Conference was held in the Tabernacle at 2 o'clock p.m., Saturday, April 5, with President David O. McKay presiding and conducting.

The music for this session was furnished by the Combined Choruses of the Logan Latter-day Saints Institute and the Utah State University, Alma Dittmer conducting, and Frank W. Asper at the organ.

President David O. McKay:

To those who are listening in we are pleased to announce that we are assembled in the great Tabernacle on Temple Square in Salt Lake City in the Fourth Session of the 128th Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. For those who are unable to gain admittance or obtain seats here in the Tabernacle, and we note many who are standing in the doorways, we announce that overflow meetings are held in the Assembly Hall and in Barratt Hall, where these services are being broadcast by television. This session of the Conference will be broadcast as a public service over television and radio stations throughout the West. The names of the stations have just been announced. We deeply appreciate this service which is rendered, and I am sure the public is profiting greatly thereby, and officially join in this appreciation.

The singing for this afternoon will be furnished by the Combined Choruses of the Logan Latter-day Saints Institute and the Utah State University, conducted by Alma Dittmer, with Elder Frank W. Asper at the organ.

Saturday, April 5

We shall begin these services by the Combined Choruses singing, "The Heavens Are Telling." The opening prayer will be offered by Elder Raymond J. Pace, president of the Farr West Stake.

An anthem, "The Heavens Are Telling," was sung by the Combined Choruses, after which Elder Raymond J. Pace, president of the Farr West Stake, offered the opening prayer.

President David O. McKay:

Elder Raymond J. Pace, president of the Farr West Stake, has offered the invocation. The Combined Choruses will now sing, "Awake, Ye Saints of God, Awake," under direction of Alma Dittmer.

Following the Chorus, we shall hear from Elder Henry D. Moyle.

The Combined Choruses sang the hymn, "Awake, Ye Saints of God, Awake!"

President David O. McKay:

Elder Henry D. Moyle of the Council of the Twelve will be our first speaker. He will be followed by Elder Levi Edgar Young.

ELDER HENRY D. MOYLE

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

Heber J. Grant once said at Brigham Young University:

"This Church is founded upon the statement 'the glory of God is intelligence.' In addition to that, in this school we are seeking to implant in the hearts of the young men and women an absolute testimony of Jesus Christ and of the restitution again to the earth of the plan of salvation."

Men cannot be saved in ignorance. What a glorious understanding of life these eternal truths give to us. The leaders of the Church from the beginning have pursued a consistent course in endeavoring to give life to these truths. We can be justly proud of our accomplishments in seeking to educate our youth in the eternal principles of the gospel.

As early as 1832 in Kirtland the Lord directed his people to establish the school of the prophets. The Lord said in part:

... the school of the prophets, established for their instruction in all things that are expedient for them, even for all the officers of the church, or in other words those who are called to the ministry in the church, beginning at the high priests, even down to the deacons— (D & C 88:127.)

From the day of the establishment of the school of the prophets and later the school of the elders until now, we have never stood still.

The organization of the Relief Society is nearly as old as the Church. What wisdom and foresight inspired our leaders to educate and train our women for the responsibilities of motherhood, to develop their minds and qualify themselves to teach their children and inspire them to gain wisdom and understanding in their generation! So today we view with the just pride of accomplishment the work of all our auxiliary organizations.

Sisters who are actively engaged in Relief Society work and who have been blessed by it, are the ones who take the little children to Primary when they are six years of age. They encourage them to follow through and to graduate from Primary. The boys are there prepared and qualified to enter into the Aaronic Priesthood and receive the blessings and powers incident thereto, the young girls, with the young boys, to pursue their week-time Church activities in the Mutual Improvement Associations.

These same Relief Society sisters are the mothers who uniformly throughout the Church take their families to Sunday School where parents and children, the entire family, join in studying the principles of the gospel and worship God on the Sabbath day.

How grateful we all are for our parents whose kindly insistence and persuasion gave us the benefits of all these great organizations. Thus we had instilled in our hearts the love of the restored gospel of Jesus Christ.

All our activities in the Church tend to develop our minds and increase our understandings. In all our work we are called upon to participate. We speak, we sing, we pray—each in his own individual right entitled to take part in every appropriate activity.

We understand that man cannot be saved in ignorance.

We cannot overlook the great work which is accomplished in our priesthood quorums, where every man is taught to be his brother's keeper, where the necessity exists for us to know the gospel, to be capable of fulfilling our responsibilities in the priesthood, finally to go into the mission field prepared to deliver the message of truth and light to the world. This is our crowning achievement.

Our Sacrament meetings are sacred gatherings where we partake of the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper and meet thus to renew our covenants and to worship God. Here we are likewise inspired to learn. It is in these gatherings, with their rich outpouring of the spirit of the Lord, that we learn some of the greatest truths of the gospel from the lips of our inspired ward and stake leaders. In our quarterly conferences, which are intended for all, the instructions of the General Authorities of the Church are received.

Now the experience of one hundred and thirty years has taught us that over and above and beyond all these opportunities for learning, unexcelled as they are, there is a need for a more intensive, detailed study of the Church. Born of these needs of the past is our present Unified Church School System. I can speak with feeling and a deep sense of appreciation for what the Church schools did for me. I wish every Latter-day Saint boy and girl the same glorious experience. The spirit of our Church schools is contagious. It is wonderful to be a part of a student body where all teachers and students alike are dedicated to their work with like ideals, ambitions, and understanding of life, determined to fulfill life's destinies to the fullest extent, where confidence in one another reigns, a brotherhood of man recognizing the Fatherhood of God, an atmosphere of righteousness and virtue where trust and confidence abide.

"If men do not comprehend the character of God, they do not comprehend themselves." (Joseph F. Smith.)

For the most part, it can be said that those who attend our Church institutions of learning have been inspired to do so as a result of the training and inspiration they received in the Primary and Sunday School and Mutuals, encouraged by mothers trained in the Relief Society and fathers active in the priesthood. It is the co-operation of parents and students that accomplishes our full purpose.

Our children are entitled as a matter of right to our encouragement, patience, perseverance. Likely no people have received such a challenge as is ours.

The Lord has said:

And again, inasmuch as parents have children in Zion, or in any of her stakes which are organized, that teach them not to understand the doctrine of repentance, faith in Christ the Son of the living God, and of baptism and the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of the hands, when eight years old the sin be upon the heads of the parents.

For this shall be a law unto the inhabitants of Zion or in any of her stakes which are organized.

And they shall also teach their children to pray and to walk uprightly before the Lord. (D & C 68:25-26, 28.)

The Unified Church School System can play a great part in helping us fulfill our duty to our children. It is in our weekday schoolwork, whether it be seminary, institute, college, or university, that we can in large measure make up for the deficiency in all other activities, a wonderful systematic presentation of religion, our own and other religions as well. We believe it important to know the history of religion generally, the origin, purpose, and practice of the religions of the world with which we are surrounded and with which we come in contact throughout life. We believe the greater, the more general our knowledge is, the freer we become and the more intelligent the use we make of our free agency.

Saturday, April 5

Second Day

We are called upon daily to judge, to decide, to determine for ourselves the innumerable problems that arise in our lives and the lives of our families and friends.

If we are familiar with the basic principles of the gospel, our decisions are far more likely to be based on truth rather than error.

See Teachings of the Prophet Joseph Smith:

The cause of God is one common cause, in which the Saints are alike all interested; we are all members of the one common body, and all partake of the same spirit, and are baptized into one baptism and possess alike the same glorious hope. The advancement of the cause of God and the building up of Zion is as much one man's business as another's. The only difference is that one is called to fulfil one duty, and another another duty; "but if one member suffers, all the members suffer with it, and if one member is honored, all the rest rejoice with it, and the eye cannot say to the ear, I have no need of thee, nor the head to the foot I have no need of thee;" party feelings, separate interests, exclusive designs should be lost sight of in the one common cause, in the interest of the whole. (Teachings of the Prophet Joseph Smith, page 231.)

The Prophet further said:

This is a work destined to bring about the destruction of the powers of darkness, the renovation of the earth, the glory of God and the salvation of the human family.

John Taylor once said:

We want . . . to be alive in the cause of education. . . . And instead of doing as many of the world do, take the works of God to try to prove that there is no God, we want to prove by God's works that he does exist, that he lives and rules and holds us, as it were, in the hollow of his hand.

And then we want to study also the principles of education, and to get the very best teachers we can to teach our children; see that they are men and women who fear God and keep his commandments. . . . Let others who fear not God take their course; but it is for us to train our children up in the fear of God. God will hold us responsible for this trust. . . .

You will see the day that Zion will be far ahead of the outside world in everything pertaining to learning of every kind as we are today in regard to religious matters. You mark my words, and write them down, and see if they do not come to pass. We are not dependent upon them, but we are upon the Lord. We did not get our priesthood nor our information in regard to his law from them. It came from God. . . . (The Gospel Kingdom, pages 274-5.)

Heber J. Grant stated:

There is one thing, and only one thing that church schools should do, and that is to make Latter-day Saints.

We are prepared to take care of the religious training of every Latter-day Saint boy and girl who lives within the areas where seminaries, institutes, colleges, and universities of the Church have been instituted. There are few if any places within the organized stakes of Zion that need be without appropriate religious training for their families if they so desire. We are constantly expanding our seminaries and institutes.

We are confident as General Authorities of the Church that we have pretty well done our part within the limits of our current income.

We realize the economic waste when all do not participate. Serious as this is, it cannot be compared with our spiritual loss. Measured by any conceivable standard, graduates of our seminaries and institutes are better qualified to meet all of life's problems than those who have absented themselves from these opportunities. Some of these problems to which I specially refer are:

- 1—Schoolwork
- 2—Professional study
- 3—Compulsory military service
- 4—Competitive employment
- 5—Missionary labors—stake and foreign
- 6—Marriage
- 7—Parenthood
- 8—Politics
- 9—Church

Better take an extra year of high school than miss such an essential basic preparation for our life's work.

Every returned missionary realizes the importance of a Church school education. Those who go on missions first invariably come home with a desire to learn more, both in their academic studies and of the gospel. Last year we had over 1300 returned missionaries at Brigham Young University and large numbers registered in our institutes at other great seats of learning.

Each of the student body presidents at Brigham Young University for the past six years has been a returned missionary.

Our seminary attendance has increased 26.6 percent in four years.

Another important detail. Our division of religion in our educational system has been organized to train and direct stake missionaries. In one school, out of a student body of 400 nonmembers, 60 were converted and baptized in a year.

There may be some problems, some obstacles, some inconveniences in endeavoring to register for and attend seminary and institute classes regularly. It is the things in life for which we are compelled to struggle that generally are worth the most to us in the long run. The fruits of our educational system can be observed in the lives and accomplishments of our graduates from seminaries, institutes, and schools. A recent survey showed 87 percent of a group of graduates married in the temple and another 6 or 7 percent later sealed to each other for time and for all eternity.

Brigham Young in the Deed of Trust to the BYU in 1875 wrote:

That the pupils shall be instructed in such branches as are usually taught in an academy of learning, also in the Old and New Testaments, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants.

Brigham Young said to Karl G. Maeser:

I want you to remember that you ought not to teach even the alphabet or the multiplication tables without the spirit of God. That is all. God bless you.

Academic rank among our teachers in the Church school system depends upon 1—Personal qualities, including attitude toward and adherence to the principles and teachings of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

2—Worth as a teacher.

3—Academic scholarship and competence, degrees and distinction.

4—Achievement and competence in scientific research, philosophic investigation, artistic production, or other professional endeavors.

5—Public service to Church and community.

To assist in building up our Unified Church School System we have organized district, stake, and ward education committees:

1—To contact during the summer all students of high school and college age and persuade them to enroll in seminaries and institutes.

2—To act as a transportation committee to create ward transportation pools to transport students from home to seminary classes; to encourage all students away from home to enter into active participation in the Church; to give bishop or branch president names of all students moving into his area.

Stake, and in some places district, boards are organized to meet regularly with seminary and institute personnel.

Acquaint stake and ward officers with details of the Church educational system, inviting them to be active in the support and direction of its program.

We as Latter-day Saints should learn to stand alone. We should insure our children doing likewise in their generation. We have all been instructed of the Lord to act for ourselves in whatever sphere God places us. We have been instructed of the Lord to be a free people.

Wherefore, hear my voice and follow me, and you shall be a free people, and ye shall have no laws but my laws when I come, for I am your lawgiver, and what can stay my hand? (D & C 38:22; 78:14.)

The Lord has said:

That through my providence, notwithstanding the tribulation which shall descend upon you, that the church may stand independent above all other creatures beneath the celestial world. (Ibid., 78:14.)

With the knowledge of our destiny and our purpose on earth, we readily understand the great emphasis placed

Saturday, April 5

Second Day

by the Church on the education of our youth.

It should need no argument for those of us who are grounded in the faith to accept without hesitancy the great educational program prescribed, prepared, and made available for our people by our great leaders. The First Presidency stand at the head of our Unified Church School System. How could they encourage us more than they do to accept and utilize that which they prepare for us?

Again the Lord has said:

And whatsoever they shall speak when moved upon by the Holy Ghost shall be scripture, shall be the will of the Lord, shall be the mind of the Lord, shall be the word of the Lord, shall be the voice of the Lord, and the power of God unto salvation.

Behold, this is the promise of the Lord unto you, O ye my servants. (Ibid., 68:4-5.)

Great strength is given us by the knowledge we have of the inspiration which directs our leaders.

A weekday religious training is the ideal established for us all. These daily classes do much toward inspiring our youth to follow onward and upward to obtain an education far beyond that which they might otherwise be expected to attain.

ELDER LEVI EDGAR YOUNG

Of the First Council of the Seventy

I pray that I may say a few words that will be helpful in connection with the great ideals that we have already heard during this conference.

I want to mention very briefly an organization in America known as "The America-Christian Palestine Committee," of which I have the honor of being a member with Right Reverend Arthur W. Moulton of the Episcopal Church. The two of us are on the executive committee of this great organization. There are over two hundred different religious sects in the United States, and many sects here in Utah. They vary, of course, in their activities, but every group follows ideals and looks to God for help.

When Christopher Columbus reached this western world in 1492, he in time

No other time, no other effort in our school careers will bless us more than our Church schoolwork. Faith, devotion, stability, ambition will be engendered in our hearts by the study of the gospel under men who hold the priesthood, inspired of our Heavenly Father, dedicated to the development of intellects and the establishment of virtue in the hearts and lives of their students.

I attended a wonderful seminary meeting in Canada last Saturday, just at this time, and the co-ordinator there gave this instruction to those seminary teachers: "Go out and tell the students and the parents that if they have to take an extra year of high school in order to get in seminary that it will be worth more than all else to them."

May God bless us to appreciate the privileges and the opportunities afforded us in this great institutional system, I pray humbly in Jesus' name. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

He to whom you have just listened is Elder Henry D. Moyle of the Council of the Twelve. Elder Levi Edgar Young of the First Council of Seventy will be our next speaker. He will be followed by Elder Bruce R. McConkie.

expressed to the king and queen of Spain that he was "the agent in the hands of God to go forth upon the mighty waters." According to Washington Irving, Columbus when he set foot on the island of San Salvador uttered the following prayer in Latin. Translated it reads:

Oh God, our eternal Father, eternal, eternally an omnipotent creator of heaven and earth and sea, we glorify thy holy word for our protection and the protection of the world.

That is one of the most singular statements that could possibly be made, for it has been carried out and the world has been blessed with an organization which is for the world.

The words of Pastor Robinson recall what Roger Williams, the founder of Providence, Rhode Island, once said. Williams was much disturbed as to his right to administer the ordinances of the church, and finally he came to the conclusion that there could "be no recovery out of the apostasy till Christ shall send forth new apostles to plant churches anew."

Edward Winslow was the third signer of the Mayflower Compact, and it was he who recorded the following parting words of Pastor Robinson, as the Pilgrims left the shore of Holland for their long journey:

Brethren, we are now quickly to part from one another, and whether I may ever live to see your face on earth any more, the God of Heaven only knows: but whether the Lord hath appointed that or not, I charge you before God and His blessed angels, that you follow me no farther than you have seen me follow the Lord Jesus Christ. If God reveal anything to you, by any other instrument of His, be as ready to receive it, as ever you were to receive truth, by my ministry; for I am fully persuaded, I am very confident that the Lord has more truth yet to break forth out of His holy word. For my part, I cannot sufficiently bewail the condition of the reformed churches, who are come to a period in religion, and will go at present no further than the instruments of their reformation. The Lutherans cannot be drawn to go beyond what Luther saw; whatever part of his will or good God has revealed to Calvin, they will rather die than embrace it, and the Calvinists, you see, stick fast, where they were left by that great man of God, who yet saw not all things. This is a misery much to be lamented; for though they were burning and shining lights in their times, yet they penetrated not into the whole counsel of God; but were they now living, would be as willing to embrace further light as that which they at first received. I beseech you to remember it as an article in your church Covenant. "That you be ready to receive whatever truth shall be made known to you from the written word of God." But I must herewith exhort you to take heed what you receive as truth. Examine it, consider it, and compare it with other scriptures of truth, before you receive it; for it is not possible that the Christian world should come so lately out of thick anti-Christian darkness, and that perfection of knowledge should break forth at once.

It is interesting to know that God has never forsaken his children. All nations have had something of the truths of God.

Carlyle in his Heroes and Hero Worship notes that the calling of a prophet, the Man of God, the man, that is, who speaks to the people of God, has penetrated into the secret of the sacred mystery of the Universe. The prophet is the revelator of what we are to do.

Throughout the ages, the truths of religion have become closely identified with the thoughts and habits of mankind. Religion in the most intelligent use of the term confesses the divine relationship between man and his God. It is more than knowledge and obedience, for its home is in the deepest nature of man, where, in its allegiance to truth and its devotion to right, it governs life.

The religious principles of ancient Israel brought about the highest system of ethical life, which to this day remains the most vital to human conduct. The elements the Israelitish character idealized were the homely virtues of a rustic people: industry, frugality, chastity, uprightness; and then the harder virtues, like bravery, and a fortitude that can endure all except defeat. Finally, the people to whom God spoke in the days of Abraham, Moses, and the ages after them learned a deep-seated piety, obedience to the declarations of the Lord their God, and perfect trust in the revelations of him who made the world and created man. Superbly did Israel rise to the knowledge of the true and living God.

The early history of Israel shows a people with aspiration for a righteous social order and an ultimate unification of mankind. "Of these ideals," says Israel Zangwill, "the race of Abraham originally conceived and still conceives itself to be the divine medium for a knowledge of God." The characteristics of the people are made known to us.

The Israelites had their planting and harvest songs, and like the Navajo Indians, they ascribed all the gifts of nature to a merciful and loving God. The Prophet Isaiah describes the glory of redeeming the land:

The wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad for them; and the desert shall rejoice, and blossom as the rose.

It shall blossom abundantly, and rejoice even with joy and singing: The glory of Lebanon shall be given unto it, the excellency of Carmel and Sharon, they shall see the glory of the Lord, and the excellency of our God.

Strengthen ye the weak hands and confirm the feeble knees.

Say to them that are of a fearful heart, Be strong, fear not: behold, your God will come with vengeance, even God with a recompense; he will come and save you.

Then the eyes of the blind shall be opened, and the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped.

Then shall the lame leap as an hart, and the tongue of the dumb sing; for in the wilderness shall waters break out, and streams in the desert.

And the parched ground shall become a pool, and the thirsty land springs of water: in the habitation of dragons, where each lay, shall be grass with reeds and rushes.

(Isalah 35:1-7.)

We can see on the frescoes in the tombs of the Pharaohs, dams enclosing basins—"Just as they are built today," says Emil Ludwig, "and it can be concluded from inscriptions by what statecraft the water, after the lapse of fixed periods, was conveyed from one basin into another." We know how the shepherds dug wells and cisterns four thousand years ago and how the farmer prepared the land for the seed and made the threshing floors. There is an aqueduct near Jerusalem with an inscription on it written by King Hezekiah about 700 B. C. Palestine has been referred to as a "dry and thirsty land," and yet the melting snows of Lebanon, Mermion, and Carmel, as well as other heights sink into the ground and come forth again as springs of water. Wells became the center of community life, supplying water for household purposes as well as for the flocks and herds.

There have been holy men, prophets of God, throughout the ages. They have felt the divine, creative presence of God. They believed in Providence, and felt there was a power around and beyond them which gave them a concept of their ever-loving Father. Those holy men knew their Creator, listened to him, spoke to him, loved him. Moses communed with him on Mount Sinai and received from him the commandments which have molded the true concept of government throughout the civilized world. History knows no more magnificent men than the prophets of Israel. They were the idealists of the ancient world. They grappled with the same problems which we have today: war, hate of one nation for another, hunger, wrong, sin, and dishonor. They were the servants of God who gave the world light and guidance which have lasted to this day.

It is the idealism of the different ages that has saved the world. There is a hidden reality in the hearts of men. Truth, beauty, and goodness belong to the ideal world of men's hopes, and to God they have turned for revealed truth. The prophets taught man the glory of the invisible world and gave him the glow of heavenly light. They lived with the eye of faith and knew that nature and man had glory beyond that which the senses could understand.

A new nation had come into being at the beginning of the nineteenth century. It had been ordained of God to accomplish his divine purposes. The past and the future met within it, for the formation of the government of the United States was an event ordered of God for the bringing in of his Kingdom upon the earth. A republic is the highest form of political institution, DeTocqueville wrote, and this we know to be true. Our government was made up of different nationalities brought under one government and one flag. Such a republic had been unknown before in history. John Winthrop, one of the founders, wrote concerning it:

It will be a service to the Church of great consequence to carry the Gospel into those parts of the world to help on the coming of the fulness of the Gentiles.

These words of the early statesman and missionary truly record the suggestion and intention which brought Englishmen to these shores, and the historic spirit leads us to an understanding of the exalted purposes of God in this world, who like the ancient astronomers looked into the sky and sang: "The heavens declare the glory of God." The founders set forth and longed for a knowledge of how to live life as it should be lived.

When Joseph Smith went into the woods to pray on a spring morning in 1820, "grace was poured out upon his lips and God blessed him forever." God came to him and spoke, and with him was Jesus Christ the Redeemer of the world. Joseph heard from the divine lips the message that a new day was at hand. Out of it came the knowledge of the weaknesses of the necessities of man's spirit. The eternal truth that man is himself a God in latent power had long been forgotten, for the religion of Jesus Christ had taught faith in the possibility of ascent from height to height. So the boy prayed for light and understanding.

When we get the spirit of this new age, then it is that we come to understand the divine truths of the gospel more and more. Many things make our history beautiful. The Prophet Joseph Smith inaugurated a new age of culture and heavenly gifts. We all know what this means through our testimonies of divine truths. In conclusion, may I give just one example of what I mean. During the days when the pioneers were working hard to establish their homes and redeem the soil, they gave examples of their culture in many ways. For example, they built a theatre here in Salt Lake City which became known throughout America and in England, France, and Italy. Famous actors came to play on its stage. President Brigham Young gave the people a love for the drama. It was he who had the theatre built. One time a noted actress, Julia Deane Hayne, in leaving to return to New York, gave her good-bye message to President Young and the people in a very beautiful statement. The theatre became known to the world as a place of divine art years before the railroad reached Salt Lake City. It was truly a creation of pioneer days, the theatre, for it was built by the inspiration of God. May we learn more and more every day about the history of the gospel in this day and age of the world, I ask in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Elder Levi Edgar Young of the First Council of Seventy has just concluded speaking. Elder Bruce R. McConkie of the First Council of Seventy will now address us.

ELDER BRUCE R. McCONKIE

Of the First Council of the Seventy

President McKay opened the conference yesterday with a fervent and forceful plea to the Latter-day Saints to rise above the carnal and animal things of the world and attain to a state of spirituality, a plea for them to crucify the flesh and turn their hearts and interests to the things of the Spirit.

In this connection I call attention to the words which the beloved disciple wrote:

Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him.

For all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world.

And the world passeth away, and the lust thereof: but he that doeth the will of God abideth for ever. (1 John 2:15-17.)

There is, of course, a difference between the earth and the world. The earth is this sphere, this planet upon which we reside. It is composed of natural elements—the things that make up the dust and the rocks and the trees. The world, on the other hand, is the society of men living on the face of the earth, a society that is carnal and sensuous and evil, a society which is living, in effect, a telestial law; and there will be a not distant day when the end of the world will come, which means by definition, the destruction of the wicked. This will take place in the day of millennial cleansing.

We have been sent from a pre-existent sphere to this earth; as a consequence we have received bodies made of the dust of the earth. Through the grace of God and the atoning sacrifice of his

Saturday, April 5Second Day

Son we will get these bodies back again in immortality in eternity.

We have also been sent from the pre-existent sphere and placed in the world, that is, in circumstances where we will be enticed to do evil, where we will be subject to the lusts of the flesh and the passions that go naturally with a mortal existence. The object in placing us in the world is to try us, to test us, to see if we can overcome the world, to see if we can walk in the things of the Spirit in spite of the worldly enticements that surround us.

I suppose that in our day—in this age, with all the pressures of advertising, made possible by the use of all the modern inventions—that the enticements and pressures of the world exceed anything that has existed or prevailed in any age past.

Our Lord, in speaking to his ancient disciples about the lusts of the world, said that both he and they had overcome the world. He told them that they would be hated by the world because they were not of the world. In his great intercessory prayer he prayed that the Father would keep the disciples free from sin. He said,

I pray not for the world, but for them which thou hast given me; . . .

I pray not that thou shouldst take them out of the world, but that thou shouldst keep them from the evil. (See John 15:18-19; 17:6-18.)

Well, then, an omnipotent God has deliberately and advisedly placed us in the circumstances in which we now find ourselves, with enticements and lusts of every sort around us, for the very purpose of determining whether we will overcome the world, whether we will turn to spiritual things rather than be engulfed in carnal things.

We had a probationary experience, a testing of a different sort, in the pre-existent sphere. We were there as spirit beings only, without these temporal bodies. Now we have mortal bodies that are subject to different enticements; and this particular portion of all eternity is that which is segregated as the time when we will be tested and tried and examined in the very manner in which we are now being examined. May I suggest to you some of the things that there are in the world which stand as tests in determining whether we will turn to the things of righteousness or whether we will go off after the manner of the world, walking as carnal men do.

If, for instance, we gratify the appetites that there are in this body, taking into the body food and drink that are unclean and unwholesome, we are walking after the manner of the world and manifesting love therefor. But if, on the other hand, we abstain completely from tea, coffee, tobacco, and liquor, and from every other unwholesome and impure food or drink, thereby developing self-control, then to this extent we are both overcoming the world and acquiring a godly attribute.

If we walk in this life in such a manner as to use all of the time that there is, seven days a week, either for the purpose of gaining a livelihood or for engaging in recreational pursuits, we are walking after the manner of the world. But if, on the other hand, we honor the Lord's holy day, keep his Sabbath, go to the house of prayer and offer up our vows and sacraments so that we may gain strength to become and to remain unspotted from the world, if that is our course, then we are rising to a plane of spirituality.

Paul said, "The love of money is the root of all evil." (1 Tim. 6:10.) Now, if we get the love of money or the love of the things of this world in our hearts, so that we desire those things in preference to the things of the Spirit, we are walking in carnal paths. But if, on the other hand, we pay an honest tithing; pay our fast offerings; contribute to the great missionary cause, to the Church educational system, to the building programs of the Church, and so on; if we make our means available to the Lord and to his kingdom and to his work—then we are rising above the plane of covetousness and lust that is inherent in the nature of our mortal existence.

The Lord has placed in our bodies certain passions and certain appetites; perhaps the strongest of these deal with what we call the sex urges. Now if we walk in an unbridled manner, after the way of the world, and are immoral and lascivious and unclean, then we are reveling in the basest sort of carnal existence. But if, on the other hand, we have the strength of character and the fortitude and ability to stand up like men and bridle our passions and control our lusts and use the sex urges in the manner in which the Lord has ordained that they should be used—which is wholesome and pure and right—if we walk without any form of sex immorality, then we are rising above the animal plane, and we are walking in the realm of spiritual things.

And so it is with every situation in which we find ourselves. If we play cards; if we visit beer halls; if we lie or steal or cheat; if we take advantage of our neighbor for a word; if we oppress the hireling in his wages; if we are immodest in our dress; if we do any of the things that are commonly done by the great masses of ungodly people in the world—we will be living after their manner and certifying that we love the things of the world more than we love the Lord. But on the contrary, if we abide in the truth and keep our covenants and walk in the manner that we were counseled to walk by our President as he opened this conference—and do it consistently, acting uprightly, with integrity and devotion—then we will be putting off the natural man; we will be born again; we will become new creatures of the Holy Ghost. Then it will be our right to have the constant companionship of that member of the Godhead. And finally, if we endure in faith and in devotion to the end, we will be inheritors of eternal life in the kingdom of God hereafter.

He who doeth the works of righteousness shall receive his reward, even peace in this world, and eternal life in the world to come. (D & C 59:23.)

In the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

BISHOP JOSEPH L. WIRTHLIN

Presiding Bishop of the Church

My dear brethren and sisters, I sincerely trust that I might have an interest in your prayers in my behalf. Without prayer, it would be impossible to express one's thoughts and give testimony of the existence of the Lord Jesus Christ and his Church.

Our general conference being held on April 4, 5, and 6 recalls vividly those memorable days of the crucifixion and the resurrection of the Lord Jesus Christ. The words of Paul voice the testimony of each of us when he said,

Jesus Christ the same yesterday, and to day, and for ever. (Heb. 13:8.)

As Latter-day Saints, we are particularly interested in two great individuals:

one, Jesus Christ, the Son of God, and the other, Joseph Smith—the one at the age of twelve, the other at the age of fourteen. Christ visited Jerusalem for the first time with Mary and Joseph, who had gone there to attend the Feast of the Passover and to pay their taxes. When they started homeward, and after one day's travel, they discovered the Christ was not in their company. Returning to Jerusalem, they found him in the temple where he was engaged in discussion with the great men of the day and was, no doubt, telling them of his future assignments and teaching them the gospel that was to be given to the world. Mary and Joseph entered the temple. Mary said, ". . . Son, why hast thou thus dealt with us? behold, thy father and I have sought thee sorrowing." (Luke 2:48.) Christ then made that marvelous answer, "... How is it that ye sought me? wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" (Ibid., 2:49.)

Some years later, the Christ sought John the Baptist who was preaching repentance and baptism for the remission of sins, and John impressed those with whom he came in contact, saying that the Christ, "... shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost, and with fire." (Matt. 3:11.)

Christ requested baptism of John,

But John forbade him, saying, I have need to be baptized of thee, and comest thou to me? And Jesus answering said unto him, Suffer it to be so now: for thus it becometh us to fulfil all righteousness. (Ibid., 3:14-15.)

As Christ came up straightway out of the water, a voice was heard from the heavens saying, "... This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." (Ibid., 3:17.)

In requesting baptism of John, Christ recognized that John held the Aaronic Priesthood, the office of a priest.

After the Church was organized, we read in Ephesians 4:11, "And he gave some apostles; and some, prophets; and some evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers." The teachers held the Aaronic Priesthood.

We read in Philippians 1:1 from a statement of the Apostle Paul as follows, Paul and Timotheus, the servants of Jesus Christ, to all the saints in Christ Jesus which are at Philippi, with the bishops and deacons.

It is a great source of inspiration to every member of this Church to know that the Aaronic Priesthood actually existed in the days of the Christ and the apostles. Others were called to receive the Melchizedek Priesthood. Elders were called and ordained, as we read in Acts 14:23,

And when they had ordained them elders in every church, and had prayed with fasting, they commended them to the Lord, on whom they believed.

In addition to elders, there were selected seventies receiving the Melchizedek Priesthood, for in Luke 10:1 it states,

After these things the Lord appointed other seventy also, and sent them two and two before his face into every city and place, whither he himself would come.

The Christ was the great high priest. Others were also so blessed, including the apostles. We read in Hebrews 5:1,

For every high priest taken from among men is ordained for men in things pertaining to God, that he may offer both gifts and sacrifices for sins.

The history of the New Testament points out definitely the existence of the Aaronic Priesthood, wherein there were deacons, teachers, and priests, and the Melchizedek Priesthood with elders, seventies, and high priests. There stood at the head, the apostles and the bishops, guiding and directing the two priesthoods. The members of the Aaronic and Melchizedek priesthoods taught the membership of the Church faith, repentance, baptism for the remission of sins, and laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost by those who held the Melchizedek Priesthood. The seventies with the apostles were assigned to preach the gospel to the known world at that time. Those who held the priesthood were directed to be helpful to the poor, teach the membership of the Church to pay their tithing, to observe the Lord's day, not to profane, to be honest, and to attend Sacrament meeting. Again, the New Testament makes it clear that work was being done for the dead, for did not the Apostle Paul say in I Corinthians 15:29, Else what shall they do which are baptized for the dead, if the dead rise not at all? why are they then baptized for the dead?

So with both the Aaronic and Melchizedek priesthoods, the saints of the Church 2,000 years ago enjoyed the same privileges, divine direction, and inspiration as do the membership of the Church in this day. The Church 2,000 years ago was one of activity and opportunity for services to be rendered by every individual member to assist in building up the kingdom. For again, reading the words of the Apostle James,

Yea, a man may say, Thou hast faith, and I have works: shew me thy faith without thy works, and I will shew thee my faith by my works. (James 2:18.)

After the resurrection of the Christ, there stood as the president of the Church the Apostle Peter, who through divine direction and inspiration continued to teach the gospel and the existence of the Lord Jesus Christ to the people and those not of the faith. To those who were loyal, devoted, true, and active in the gospel, it is said,

But ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people; that ye should shew forth the praises of him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvellous light. (1 Peter 2:9.)

It was Paul who realized there was soon to come about a change in the Church, for did he not declare in II Timothy 4:3-4,

For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine, but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears;

And they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables.

He realized that the Church of the Lord Jesus Christ would soon be changed from the teachings of the Christ and the apostles to that of individuals who were teaching false doctrine.

Two hundred years later, the gospel had been changed, the priesthood had been taken away, and the earth was left in spiritual darkness; but this was not to exist forever, for John the beloved had said in Revelation 14:6,

And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people.

Two thousand years later, there was a boy at the age of fourteen, Joseph Smith, who lived in Palmyra, New York. Among the churches in Palmyra, New York, was great misunderstanding of the gospel. It was impossible to find the church organization and the priesthood as it existed nearly 2,000 years before. Joseph was very much concerned about the differences of opinion among the various churches and the doctrines they were teaching. He was one in whose heart was a testimony that in the Bible could be found the answers to his many questions. The statement of James the Apostle gave him the necessary information,

If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him.

But let him ask in faith, nothing wavering. For he that wavereth is like a wave of the sea driven with the wind and tossed. (James 1:5-6.)

Joseph followed the admonition given to him by the Apostle James and made it a matter of prayer, asking God where he might find the Church of the Lord Jesus Christ. In answer thereto, there appeared the Father and the Son, the first appearance of the Father and the Son since Jesus Christ was upon the earth nearly 2,000 years before. The Lord said to the Prophet Joseph, "This is My Beloved Son. Hear Him!" (Joseph Smith 2:17.) Instructions to Joseph by the Christ indicated that his Church was not upon the earth, but in time it would be re-established.

There appeared other heavenly beings to the Prophet Joseph, among whom was Moroni, who had lived upon the American continent and had prepared the history of the great events that had taken place in the coming of Lehi and his sons and in the establishment of both the Nephite and Lamanite nations and that Jesus Christ the Son of God actually appeared upon the American continent, established his Church, and organized the Aaronic and Melchizedek priesthoods. Jesus taught the Nephite people the gospel as he had the people in Israel, bestowing upon them the same rights, blessings, and privileges. Moroni also indicated to Joseph that he would receive the gold plates containing the history of America. The gold plates were written in a strange language, which the Prophet Joseph translated, and Oliver Cowdery acted as scribe. In so doing, they came across the manner of baptism, which was not clear to them. They made it a matter of prayer to the Lord, and there appeared a heavenly being who introduced himself as John the Baptist. This event took place on

Saturday, April 5

Second Day

May 15, 1829, in Harmony, Pennsylvania. He placed his hands upon the heads of Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery and uttered these words,

Upon you my fellow servants, in the name of Messiah I confer the Priesthood of Aaron, which holds the keys of the ministering of angels, and of the gospel of repentance, and of baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; and this shall never be taken again from the earth, until the sons of Levi do offer again an offering unto the Lord in righteousness. (D & C 13.)

Through the appearances of the Father and the Son, Moroni, and John the Baptist, the Aaronic Priesthood was restored and placed upon the earth. Some few weeks later, three apostles, Peter, James, and John, appeared and bestowed upon Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery the Melchizedek Priesthood. We can readily see that the Church of Jesus Christ was again restored, organized, and placed upon the earth with both the Aaronic and Melchizedek priesthoods, for the salvation, inspiration, and guidance of the sons and daughters of our Heavenly Father.

As the Aaronic Priesthood and Melchizedek Priesthood 2,000 years ago had very definite assignments, it is now true that those who hold the Aaronic and Melchizedek priesthoods have the same assignments to teach faith, repentance, baptism for the remission of sins, laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost by those who hold the Melchizedek Priesthood, fasting, missionary work to preach the gospel to every nation, kindred, tongue, and people, helping the poor, paying tithing, observing the Lord's day, being honest, attending Sacrament meeting, and doing work for the dead. The Prophet Joseph Smith received a marvelous revelation from the Lord which is recorded in the Doctrine and Covenants, section 2, wherein the membership of the Church were instructed to do work for the dead. The Lord said, Behold, I will reveal unto you the Priesthood, by the hand of Elijah the prophet, before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord.

And he shall plant in the hearts of the children the promises made to the fathers, and the hearts of the children shall turn to their fathers.

If it were not so, the whole earth would be utterly wasted at his coming.

My brethren and sisters, I bear you my testimony that the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ and the organization of the Church with the Aaronic and Melchizedek priesthoods have been restored to the earth through the Prophet Joseph. He actually saw the Father and the Son. Those of us who have the privilege and blessing of membership in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints have very definite responsibilities and assignments, particularly in connection with the marvelous revelation wherein the Lord said,

For I will raise up unto myself a pure people, that will serve me in righteousness;

And all that call upon the name of the Lord, and keep his commandments, shall be saved. (Ibid., 100:16-17.)

This is a definite promise for each and every one of us who is sweet and clean in body and mind, wherein there will come the gift of the Holy Ghost in building up our testimonies and giving us the full understanding of the restored gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. In addition thereto, in our hearts will be that testimony that there stands at the head of the Church an apostle of the Lord Jesus Christ as there was 2,000 years ago in the days of Peter, with the same desire to inspire the Saints of today. Peter visited many of the saints, as does our president and apostle today, with the same attitude and feeling with reference to the membership of the Church as Peter had when he said,

But ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people; that ye should shew forth the praises of him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvellous light. (1 Peter 2:9.)

My brethren and sisters, it is wonderful to know that all of us are here enjoying the blessings of the Church and the gospel because we are among those who have literally been called out of darkness into his marvelous light. One hundred years ago, our grandfathers and grandmothers and many of our own fathers and mothers were literally drawn out of the darkness of the world into the marvelous light of the Lord Jesus Christ through missionaries. Men and women today are accepting the truth and becoming members of his Church. There is no other Church in the world where individuals have as great responsibilities, particularly those who hold the Aaronic and Melchizedek priesthoods.

I humbly pray that we shall be worthy to follow in his footsteps and be inspired by the statement of the Christ 2,000 years ago when he said,

... wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?

and I ask it in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Bishop Joseph L. Wirthlin, Presiding Bishop of the Church, has just concluded speaking. Elder Richard L. Evans, a member of the Council of the Twelve, will now address us. Elder Milton R. Hunter will follow Elder Evans.

ELDER RICHARD L. EVANS

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

President McKay and my brethren and sisters, I acknowledge my need for help in this humbling position and would wish to go back, in these few moments which I have, to the theme set by President McKay yesterday morning and recall as a text and a title:

For to be carnally minded is death; but to be spiritually minded is life and peace. (Rom. 8:6.)

I cannot think of a greater blessing nor anything more earnestly to be sought after than life and peace.

As I have heard the words of life and peace spoken in this conference these past two days, as I have contemplated the ways of life and peace, I have thought inevitably of some voices and faces of the past mingled with those of the present. Those three who most recently have left us have been mentioned a number of times in this conference. I have counted others, especially during the late hours of last night and the early hours of this morning, and have written down some nineteen or twenty names of beloved Brethren with whom I have here sat during some nineteen and a half years, and who have since left this life.

I would read the list, but am afraid I might miss some; but I should like to recall from some of those voices of the past some things that they have said, that they may mingle again with us in the present. (One thing that their having gone impresses upon us is how swiftly the days of life move and how choice must be the company on the other side where all of us hope eventually to find ourselves in the kingdom of our Father.)

Melvin J. Ballard is one. A printed card which has crossed the desk of some of us these past few days gives these sentences of a paragraph by Brother Ballard:

Man is a child of God, therefore he partakes of the divine nature of his Father. Within him lie germs of infinite development. Potentially he is a godlike being. Therefore he may rise eternally towards the likeness of his Father in heaven. Upward, divine, unending is man's destiny.

I thought of Brother Albert E. Bowen, a choice spirit with a profound mind, and from the last talk he gave at a general conference, I have taken these sentences:

Our religion comprehends more than just the ethical code. It contains a body of principles, through the observance of which we are promised the great reward of eternal life and salvation in the kingdom of God. . . . It all centers in Jesus the Christ. . . . Our religion comprises the teachings and life and actions of Jesus of Nazareth. That constitutes our religion.

I have thought of Brother Matthew Cowley and the last talk he gave here, as I recall, a beautiful talk on prayer:

Some people think it is a sign of weakness to get upon one's knees and pray to our Heavenly Father. It's the greatest sign of strength that exists. No men are greater than when they are upon their knees in communion with God and having a sacred interview with him.

Saturday, April 5

Second Day

The voice of Thomas E. McKay, you will remember it, pleading for love at home. I think it was the last talk he gave here:

I never heard my father, and nobody else did, speak an unkind word to my mother, so it has not been difficult for me to say kind words.

You will remember those two phrases recalled by Brother Hanks at the funeral service of Brother Oscar Kirkham:

"Your name is safe in our home"—and "What will it do to the man?"

And many other voices come to mind.

Dr. Adam S. Bennion—this bench this day is a lonelier place without his sitting beside us. To say that he is much missed would be an acute understatement. You may recall his most outstanding University baccalaureate address in the stadium under the starlight, some six or seven years ago, with the hills to the east in their beauty catching the last tints of the sunset:

Here in the shadow of these everlasting hills I bring you no argument—I bring you a conviction. A conviction that we and the world in which we live are the product not of chance—not of the mere interplay of lines of force—but the master work of a great Creator. A conviction that we are the children of our Father in heaven, who created the universe and all of us, and that He still guides our destinies. Hence the title, "Candle of the Lord." Or, if you prefer the whole text: "The spirit of man is the candle of the Lord." (Proverbs 20:27.)

There is a light that lights all of us who come into the world. We have the assurance of John for this:

In him was life; and the life was the light of men. . . . the true Light, which lighteth every man that cometh into the world. (John 1:4, 9.)

I think that one of the worst things we could say of any man is that there is not light in him. And in thinking of the candle of the Lord, I am thinking of the candle of conscience, and of much else, also.

I could not think of the voices and faces of the past without thinking of my beloved friend who (with Dr. James E. Talmage) was my mission president, Dr. John A. Widtsoe. I can hear him say, many times: "I would rather go through life trusting my fellow men, and have a few of them disappoint me, than to go through life mistrusting everyone."

I can hear him say to the discouraged, to the penitent, to those who are weighted with problems and weighted with sin: "Look up, not down. Look forward, not back."

I can hear him recall an old and ancient thought, many versions of which have been recalled and restated over the ages: "Count no man happy until he is dead"—which is another way of saying, "He that shall endure to the end shall be saved." We have to finish the race. There is a reward for consistency in life.

I can hear him say: "He giveth twice who giveth quickly."

The time when men need things is when they need them. The time when a man needs nourishment is when he is hungry. The time when youth need counsel may be a very perishable time. It may be this very night and not when it is convenient, not tomorrow, not next week. "He giveth twice who giveth quickly."

I can hear Dr. Joseph F. Merrill saying: "No one ever falls over a precipice who never goes near one."

Do not tempt temptation. None of us knows his own strength. We should not flit around the edge of anything that we should not flit around the edge of, unless we want to hazard what hanging too near the edge hazards. Do not tempt temptation.

I can hear President George Albert Smith: "Give the Lord a chance," and "Keep on the Lord's side of the line."

I can hear the voice of President Grant ringing out here, and I can almost hear him thumping the pulpit: "That which we persist in doing becomes easy to do; not that the nature of the thing has changed, but that our power to do has increased."

I have quoted many times a letter of President Grant's which his family republished parts of, with other quotations, on the one-hundredth anniversary of his birth a year ago last November, a letter he wrote from Japan as a young man, in 1903, from which these paragraphs are taken:

We have no right to go near temptation, or in fact to do or say a thing that we cannot honestly ask the blessing of the Lord upon, neither to visit any place where we would be ashamed to take our sister or sweetheart.

The Good Spirit will not go with us on to the Devil's ground, and if we are standing alone upon the ground belonging to the adversary of men's souls, he may have the power to trip us up and destroy us. The only safe ground is so far from danger as it is possible to get. Virtue is more valuable than life—

There are some who come and say they have not been taught, that they wish they had known differently. But the commandments are pretty plain. I would not worry too much about the obscure passages of scripture. We will not be held accountable for things we do not know, but we will be for those we do know.

(I think of a sentence from Mark Twain. One would always expect a bit of humor from him, and there is something of whimsy in this sentence of his: "The scripture passages that bother me the most are the ones I understand." I think we do not need to worry too much about the ones we do not understand.)

Back to President Grant:

—Virtue is more valuable than life. Never allow yourself to go out of curiosity to see any of the "undercrust" in this world. We can't handle dirty things and keep our hands clean.

These are some of the voices of the past. They are true voices, mingled with those of the present, in counsel to this generation and to those yet in the future.

I would plead with my beloved young friends, many of whom come, some of whom are burdened with sin and sorrow, and older ones also, not to quibble about definitions, and shades of meaning and obscure passages and try to rationalize and outreason the scriptures. The commandments are basic to our very nature. They are not arbitrary. The Lord God has not just sat down and thought up a series of thou shalt nots. He knows us. He knows our natures. He knows what will lead to happiness, to "life and peace," to refer back to the text of President McKay. He knows what will help us to realize our highest possibilities.

There are consequences in all things. As surely as we live the law we shall reap the rewards of living the law. As surely as we break the law we shall pay some penalties, but blessedly with that mercy of which President Clark spoke so beautifully.

I give you these voices of the past, and bring your attention, my beloved young friends, to the commandments and ask you to look beyond the sophistries of men and the rationalizing that would wave them away, and remember the strong, terse language of our Savior, who was no more sharp in his language at any time than when he was talking to hypocrites and such, when he said: "Ye blind guides, which strain at a gnat, and swallow a camel." (Matt. 23:24.)

Attaining "life and peace" is not a matter of quibbling. It is not a matter of obscure meanings. It is just a matter of knowing the simple commandments of God and living and keeping them.

May I bring your attention in closing to some sentences from Mr. Cecil B. DeMille in his great address to the graduates of Brigham Young University last June:

We cannot break the Ten Commandments. We can only break ourselves against them—or else, by keeping them, rise through them to the fulness of freedom under God. God means us to be free. With divine daring, He gave us the power of choice.

One choice sentence from an unknown source:

Human harvests are not just gathered in the autumn of life. They are planted, cultivated, and reaped, each and every day.

For to be carnally minded is death; but to be spiritually minded is life and peace.

May God help us and our youth and all the generations, as we mingle the voices of the past with those of the present, to walk the ways that will lead to life and peace, I pray in the name of our Redeemer, Jesus Christ. Amen.

Second Day

President David O. McKay:

He to whom we have just listened is Elder Richard L. Evans, a member of the Council of the Twelve. Elder Milton R. Hunter of the First Council of Seventy will be our concluding speaker.

ELDER MILTON R. HUNTER

Of the First Council of the Seventy

In the session of conference this morning, I am sure that all of you listened with great satisfaction and joy as did I to President Clark's very wonderful account of Christ's last few days upon the earth, his crucifixion, and his glorious resurrection, which broke the bands of death and brought about the resurrection for the entire human family. Thus the Only Begotten Son gave general salvation to all the people who have lived or who shall live in this world as a free gift, in that he redeemed them from the grave. Paul declared:

For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive. (1 Cor. 15:22.)

In addition to this, Jesus Christ through the gospel plan of salvation made it possible for all people who will pay the price to come back into his presence and dwell forever in celestial glory.

Perhaps the greatest statement in the scriptures which defines the work of the Father and the Son—consummated however through the "Lamb of God"—declares that "... this is my work and my glory—to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man." (Moses 1:39.) Thus through Christ's resurrection he gave every man, woman, and child who live in this world immortality, i.e., resurrection from the grave. Through the plan of salvation, or the gospel of Jesus Christ, he made it possible for all people who would receive him and the gospel the opportunity to work out their exaltation. For those who would receive the gospel without entering into the covenant of celestial marriage, but however remain faithful to the end of their lives, Christ's redemption and their faithfulness promises them a place in celestial glory.

This afternoon I desire to talk upon the phase of the atonement of Jesus Christ which will be effective in the lives of that part of the human family whom God the Father hath given unto the Son—those who will enter celestial glory. If I were to give a title to what I desire to talk about, it would be, "Cleansed or Sanctified through the Blood of the Lamb."

After Adam and Eve were cast from the Garden of Eden, through diverse ways the gospel of Jesus Christ was given to Father Adam; namely, by the administration of angels, by the voice of Jehovah, and by the witness of the Holy Ghost. We read in the scriptures:

And thus the Gospel began to be preached, from the beginning, being declared by holy angels sent forth from the presence of God, and by his own voice, and by the gift of the Holy Ghost. (Moses 5:58.)

On a certain occasion Adam was offering a sacrifice, and an angel appeared unto him and asked:

Why dost thou offer sacrifices unto the Lord? And Adam said unto him: I know not, save the Lord commanded me.

And then the angel spake, saying: This thing is a similitude of the sacrifice of the Only Begotten of the Father, which is full of grace and truth.

Wherefore, thou shalt do all that thou doest in the name of the Son, and thou shalt repent and call upon God in the name of the Son forevermore. (Ibid., 5:6-8.)

And the voice of God spoke from heaven, commanding all men everywhere that they must repent of all of their sins, and take upon themselves the name of the Son and be baptized:

And as many as believed in the Son, and repented of their sins should be saved; and as many as believed not and repented not, should be damned. (See ibid., 5:14-15; 6:50-58.)

Thus in the very beginning Adam and his posterity were given the law of sacrifice. They were to take lambs—perfect lambs without spot or blemish—shed their blood, and sacrifice them. The blood and bodies of the lambs represented the great atoning sacrifice of the Only Begotten Son of God—the Lamb of God slain from the foundation of the world to redeem his people. Adam was told that the Lamb of God would come to earth in the Meridian of Time, and that his name was “. . . Jesus Christ, the only name which shall be given under heaven whereby salvation shall come unto the children of men, . . .” (Moses 6:52.) Thus Adam and his posterity who accepted the gospel observed the law of sacrifice to commemorate the Savior’s sacrifice.

The night before the Israelites left Egypt, in compliance with a commandment of the Lord given to Moses, each family took a lamb without spot or blemish. They shed the blood of these lambs, and sprinkled it upon the doorposts of their homes. During that night the destroying angel passed through Egypt, and passed by all the homes on whose doorposts blood had been sprinkled; but in the households where there was no blood on the doorposts the firstborn died. After the Israelites had left Egypt, the Lord commanded them to commemorate that great event by the observance of a feast once each year known as the Feast of the Passover.

The pastoral lambs were of special importance in that feast; as I have already said, they were lambs without spot or blemish, which lambs symbolized the Lamb of God, he who would come in the Meridian of Time to redeem those who would accept him.

We find that many of the ancient prophets spoke of Christ under such terminology as the “Lamb of God” or the “Lamb slain from the foundation of the world to redeem his people.” For example, John the Baptist was standing on the banks of the Jordan River conversing with John, the son of Zebedee, and Andrew, Peter’s brother. That ancient prophet, seeing Jesus coming toward them, said, “Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world.” (John 1:29, 34-36.)

Nephi, after having had a vision, said that the garments of the apostles of Jesus “. . . are made white . . . in the blood of the Lamb.” Amulek, speaking of those who would inherit celestial glory, said: “. . . their garments should be made white through the blood of the Lamb,” whose sacrifice would be “infinite and eternal.” (Alma 34:36, 14.) And then Amulek explained in some detail that no mortal man could sacrifice his blood for the salvation of the human family. It must be the sacrifice of a Divine Being, even the Son of God, whose sacrifice must be infinite and eternal.

The night before King Benjamin was to turn his throne and the leadership of the people over to his son Mosiah, an angel appeared to him and told him that in the near future Christ would come into the world. The angel described the great work that Jesus would perform, and then he said:

And lo, he shall suffer temptations, and pain of body, hunger, thirst, and fatigue, even more than man can suffer, except it be unto death; for behold, blood cometh from every pore, so great shall be his anguish for the wickedness and abominations of his people. (Mosiah 3:7.)

President Clark told us this morning about the Last Supper, and I would like to refer to that great event once more. It was at the Last Supper, held the night before the Savior’s crucifixion, that Jesus broke the bread and passed it to his disciples and told them to eat it in remembrance of his flesh; and then he gave them the cup—the wine—and told them to drink it in remembrance of his blood, thus instituting new symbols or emblems of his great atoning sacrifice to take the place of the body and the blood of the lamb.

Then Jesus left the upstairs room in Jerusalem and with his apostles went to the Garden of Gethsemane. There he suffered terrifically, as Benjamin had predicted, “even more than man can suffer.” In fact, we read in Luke:

And being in an agony he prayed more earnestly: and his sweat was as it were great drops of blood falling down to the ground. (Luke 22:44.)

There he shed much of his blood and took upon himself the sins of those who would receive him.

Saturday, April 5

Second Day

Now I would like to ask a question: Who will be cleansed or sanctified through the blood of the Lamb?

Perhaps it would be best to go to the scriptures and see what the prophets of God have said on this subject. King Benjamin claimed that "the blood of Christ atoneth for" the sins of little children who die before they reach the age of accountability. (Mosiah 3:16.) Mormon wrote a revelation from Christ to his son Moroni, stating that ... little children are whole, for they are not capable of committing sin; wherefore the curse of Adam is taken from them in me, ...

But little children are alive in Christ, even from the foundation of the world. (Moroni 8:8, 12.)

In modern revelation, we read:

But little children are holy, being sanctified through the atonement of Jesus Christ. (D & C 74:7; 29:46-47.)

Also, according to King Benjamin, Christ's blood will cleanse or sanctify those people who do not have a chance to receive the gospel in mortality but who live lives sufficiently good that temple work will be effective for them and who receive the gospel in the spirit world. To quote that ancient prophet-king:

For behold, and also his blood atoneth for the sins of those who have fallen by the transgression of Adam, who have died not knowing the will of God concerning them, or who have ignorantly sinned. (Mosiah 3:11.)

Third—and this is of great importance to every member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and to all people throughout the world who are honest in heart and who desire to come back into the presence of God—Christ's blood will cleanse or sanctify all those who take upon themselves the name of Christ through faith, repentance, baptism, and confirmation, and then by keeping his commandments live faithfully to the end.

When the gospel was first given to Adam, certain ordinances were established which were necessary for entrance into celestial glory, and they were very beautiful in their symbolism. Adam was commanded that all men must repent, be baptized, receive the Holy Ghost, and keep God's commandments, preparatory to being sanctified through the blood of the Lamb. I would like to read a very powerful statement from the Pearl of Great Price:

That by reason of transgression cometh the fall, which fall bringeth death, and inasmuch as ye were born into the world by water, and blood, and the spirit, which I have made, and so became of dust a living soul, even so ye must be born again into the kingdom of heaven, of water, and of the Spirit, and be cleansed by blood, even the blood of mine Only Begotten; that ye might be sanctified from all sin, and enjoy the words of eternal life in this world, and eternal life in the world to come, even immortal glory;

For by the water ye keep the commandment; by the Spirit ye are justified, and by the blood ye are sanctified. (Moses 6:59-60.)

Alma, Amulek, Nephi, John the Revelator, the Prophet Joseph Smith, numerous other prophets, and even the Master, definitely declared that Christ's blood would cleanse or sanctify those who would accept the true church, keep God's commandments, and eventually enter celestial glory. Speaking of the great patriarchs who lived in ancient times, Alma wrote:

Thus they became high priests forever, after the order of the Son, the Only Begotten of the Father, ... and it was on account of their exceeding faith and repentance, and their righteousness before God, ...

Therefore they were called after this holy order and were sanctified, and their garments were washed white through the blood of the Lamb. (Alma 13:9-10.)

One of the clearest and most definite statements on this subject was made by Amulek.

And he [Christ] shall come into the world to redeem his people; and he shall take upon him the transgressions of those who believe on his name; and these are they that shall have eternal life, and salvation cometh to none else.

Therefore the wicked remain as though there had been no redemption made, except it be the loosing of the bands of death; for behold, the day cometh that all shall rise from the dead and stand before God, and be judged according to their works. (Alma 11:40-41.)

Let us quote the words of the resurrected Lord to the Nephites on this subject:

And no unclean thing can enter into his [the Father's] kingdom; therefore nothing entereth into his rest save it be those who have washed their garments in my blood, because of their faith, and the repentance of all their sins, and their faithfulness unto the end. (3 Nephi 27:19-20.)

Ether described the second coming of Christ, accompanied by the hosts of heaven, to dwell upon the earth during the millennium, as follows:

And then cometh the New Jerusalem; and blessed are they who dwell therein, for it is they whose garments are white through the blood of the Lamb; . . .

And then also cometh the Jerusalem of old; and the inhabitants thereof, blessed are they, for they have been washed in the blood of the Lamb. (Ether 13:10-11.)

In closing I would like to remind all members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints that you and I have taken upon ourselves the name of Christ through faith, repentance, baptism, and confirmation. All of us have entered into a covenant that we will keep all of God's commandments. The Lord has promised us that if we do so and remain faithful to the end that someday we shall be quickened by a celestial power. At that time we shall rise as celestial beings, and enter into the presence of God. Then the righteous shall be sanctified through the blood of the Lamb and be worthy to dwell in the presence of the Lamb of God forevermore.

May this be our happy lot and also the happy lot of all those who will receive the gospel of Jesus Christ, I pray in Jesus' name. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Elder Milton R. Hunter of the First Council of Seventy has just spoken. You will all remember: "As in Adam all die, evenso in Christ shall all be made alive."

Tonight in the Tabernacle the General Priesthood Meeting will be held, commencing at 7 o'clock. Tomorrow morning the Tabernacle Choir Broadcast will be from 9:30 to 10 o'clock.

Those desiring to attend this broadcast must be in their seats at 9:15 a.m. We remind you that large crowds will undoubtedly be waiting outside the closed doors, and when they are opened there is usually a rush by those outside to get good seats. We plead with persons thus standing to be courteous and considerate one to another. Avoid pushing and crowding, will you please. Courtesy is a great virtue. Let us show it one to another, and especially to our visitors who are within our gates.

You will be interested to know that only those holding the Priesthood are invited to be present tonight. Persons not holding the Priesthood will kindly refrain from attempting to enter the building. This Priesthood session will not be broadcast, but in addition to overflow meetings in the Assembly Hall and in Barratt Hall, the proceedings of this Priesthood meeting will be relayed by closed circuit to members of the Priesthood assembled in 128 other Church buildings from Coast to Coast and in Canada.

The singing for this session, as we have already informed you, has been furnished by the Combined Choruses of the Logan Latter-day Saints Institute and the Utah State University at Logan, under the direction of Alma Dittmer, with Frank W. Asper at the organ.

We wish to express our appreciation once again for these young men and women from the colleges and universities. The hours they have spent in practice in the weeks that have gone by resulted in the inspiration of their singing the songs of Zion to this group today, and we thank you for the effort you have put forth during these hours of practice, the effort you have had to put forth coming down in buses this day, and particularly for your inspirational singing during these sessions. The Lord bless you. We are proud of you. We are glad to have had your company as well as your inspirational singing. May the Lord's protecting care be with you going back to your homes, and may this experience ever be a happy memory for you, as it will be for all of us.

They will now sing, "Glorious Is Thy Name, Almighty Lord," and the bene-

GENERAL PRIESTHOOD MEETING

The General Priesthood meeting of the Church was held in the Tabernacle at 7:00 p.m., Saturday, April 5. President David O. McKay presided and conducted the meeting.

The choral singing for this session was furnished by the Men's Chorus of the Tabernacle Choir, with Richard P. Condie as director and Alexander Schreiner at the organ.

President David O. McKay:

This is the fifth session of the One Hundred Twenty-Eighth Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. You will be interested to know that these services are being relayed by closed circuit to members of the Priesthood gathered in the Assembly Hall, Barratt Hall, and in 128 other Church buildings from coast to coast, and in Canada. We hope you have already seen them in print.

This is a very remarkable Priesthood gathering tonight.

The singing during this session will be furnished by the Men's Chorus of the Tabernacle Choir, with Richard P. Condie as Director, and Alexander Schreiner at the organ.

We shall open these services by the Men's Chorus of the Tabernacle Choir singing, "Guide Me To Thee," with Richard P. Condie conducting. After the singing Elder Charles V. Liljenquist, formerly president of the Australian Mission, will offer the opening prayer.

President David O. McKay:

The Men's Chorus of the Tabernacle Choir will now sing, "Seek Thy God," directed by Richard P. Condie.

A selection, "Seek Thy God," was sung by the Tabernacle Choir Male Chorus.

President David O. McKay:

We are glad that the plane carrying 30 servicemen from Fort Campbell, Kentucky, has arrived. We hope they will find room in one of the buildings somewhere to participate in this Priesthood Meeting. We are glad to welcome the five servicemen from Dow Field in Bangor, Maine. This gives us an idea of how widely spread are the participants in this great Priesthood Meeting.

We shall now hear from Elder Lowell L. Bennion, head of the Institute at the University of Utah. He will speak and give a special message by request of the First Presidency on a question which is of vital importance, a condition of very vital importance for our young people throughout the entire Church.

ELDER LOWELL L. BENNION

Director of Salt Lake City LDS Institute of Religion

I have two requests before launching into this subject assigned to me. The first is that my Father in heaven will be gracious unto you and me and let me talk with the influence of his Spirit. And the other is to President McKay. He has asked me to be quite explicit, concrete, and as helpful as I can be on an important subject. He has given me full freedom and trust to develop this subject as I see fit, and I would like to encourage him to feel equally free to qualify and correct and even rebuke anything that I might say, if he finds it not in harmony with his wisdom and inspiration.

Since early childhood in the Mormon Church, two ideals have been constantly placed before us: a good marriage and chastity. We have heard beautiful, inspiring talks by President David O. McKay and President Joseph Fielding Smith on this same subject.

There is nothing that I would wish for young men, there is nothing I would ask for my own sons more than that each of them might find happiness in a good marriage—the kind of happiness which their father has found with their mother—and for them to know the joy of having sons as fine as they are.

My young brethren, there is nothing on earth that can satisfy the whole man and make the struggle and the adventure of living so worthwhile as a good marriage. And chastity is so important because it is the foundation of personal happiness, of making a girl happy, and of a happy marriage.

We have the feeling, my brethren, that we are not succeeding too well in the Church today in regard to marriage and chastity. I do not mean to infer that we are not doing pretty well and that we do not have wonderful marriages and virtuous, clean young people in the Church. But I am told that the divorce rate in Utah a year or two ago was higher than the national average.

I know from personal consultation the tragedy that comes into the lives of boys and girls when they break down their moral standards before marriage. I have the deepest sympathy for people who fail in marriage and who fail to live up to this great ideal of chastity. I believe in repentance and forgiveness, but I would like to try to say in a practical way something on the positive side to bring about happier marriages and finer moral living.

What is causing so much divorce and the breaking down of our moral standards? This is a complex subject; let me suggest only one possible explanation of it.

One day a girl came into my office—a fine Latter-day Saint girl—with tear-filled eyes.

I said, "What's the trouble?"

She replied, "I want to get married."

I said, "That's a worthy goal."

"But," she continued, "my father doesn't want me to marry the boy I'm in love with."

"Why not?"

"Father says he is spineless. My mother doesn't want me to marry him either."

"Why not?"

"She says that after the marriage, he will not be as polite and courteous as he is now."

I said, "What do you think of this boy? Is he spineless? Will he be courteous to you after marriage?"

"I don't know," she replied. "But I love him; and isn't that all that matters?"

I said to her, "It's all that matters, if you have the right kind of love; but the kind of love that people know in a typical courtship in our society is not big enough for marriage."

It is so common for very young boys and girls to become interested in each other; to date repeatedly, steadily, and frequently; to exchange affection increasingly; and then, after a period of what I would like to call "romanticized recreation," they get married and expect happiness.

Let me tell the unmarried that marriage is more than romanticized recreation. Marriage is more than dates and affection. True, romantic love is part of marriage, a very beautiful part.

Saturday, April 5

Second Day

But in addition, marriage is a business and financial partnership. Moreover, marriage is especially a human relationship—an everyday and all day and continuous companionship between husband and wife. This is one of the beautiful aspects of it. It is also the realistic part.

The big thing in marriage is to know how to live together, to understand each other, to be congenial and cooperative. Then, after the children come, the very difficult and interesting task is to have a congenial relationship between parent and child, and in the family as a whole.

Recreation and romance alone are not the right kinds of relationships to prepare people for a business partnership and for the human relationships which we find in marriage and family life. I was told that of boys and girls who were married while in one high school in this valley, within one year 50 per cent of them were divorced. I cannot say that this is true for sure, but I can believe that it might be.

I would like to suggest to you unmarried young men, who, in this land of America, have all the freedom in the world, who have all the leisure, the money, automobiles and opportunities to help you choose your companions for life, how to prepare for marriage.

In this wonderful period from about the age of 12 to whenever you are married—21, 23, 25 or what age it might be—instead of plunging right into a courtship relationship in your young high school years and being so terribly concerned about the romantic aspect of life, why not think ahead and take a long view? Think in terms of preparing yourself for marriage. I have three suggestions to make in this connection:

First of all, use these years to prepare yourself to be a good husband and father. Learn how to work, because after you are married, you must work to be happy. Learn a vocation which will satisfy your mind, your soul, and your creative urges. Learn how to live with other people: first in your own home and in your neighborhood. Learn to love to work in the Church—something you can do all the days of your life. Learn to read good books, to listen to beautiful music, to serve your neighbor. Build within yourself resources that will make of you a mature, manly adult by the time of your marriage.

And secondly, in your relations with girls during these wonderful years—these promising years—do not settle down to a steady relationship in your early teens, when you have had little experience in understanding yourself and girls. Rather, build friendships—many friendships. Do not take yourself quite so seriously in courtship in the early years. Make friends with several girls. Take out two or three over the same period of time. There you will have comparative value. You will get to understand girls and to know them as friends. You will understand your relationship to them and learn how to communicate with them. You will lay the foundations of fine human relations with the opposite sex. Associate on a group basis a great deal.

And third, brethren: After you have proved yourself to be a man, after you are ready to earn a living for your family in good measure, after you have much to offer to your prospective wife, then I suggest that you look around to find a girl who has much to offer to you and to your great purpose in building a good family life. Choose from among all the fine girls that you have known, or find another girl with whom you may build an enduring friendship. And go slowly with this girl, building a broad, deep friendship with her.

After you are friends; when you know that you can be business partners; when you know that you can enjoy each other's companionship; when you know you have common ideals, purposes and desires for life, and that you can help each other to fulfill your very beings, then let romantic interest develop gradually, may I say, and find its fulfillment after marriage. I know that if a young man will build his marriage on the foundation of friendships first, culminating in a single friendship with a wonderful girl, and will let romance come last, his marriage will be as solid as a pyramid. People who become romantic first and then get married will have to wait until after the wedding to see if they can be friends. Some of them find they cannot be friends.

Every year, except when we have a bad frost, I go out to my little peach orchard around the first of September, and there I pick beautiful tree-ripened peaches—peaches with that golden color which drop into your hand with a slight turn of the peach. The youngest boy in our family can not wait until the first of September. He dashes out into the orchard the end of July, when the first red comes on the peach. Eagerly he picks the peach and bites into it. Finding it hard and bitter, he throws it and often a peck of other green peaches, on the ground. What is the difference between his approach and mine? In February I prune the trees. In May I start to thin the peaches, to cultivate the soil and to irrigate once a week in the night. With great love and affection, I watch the peaches grow and I wait, with self-control, until the peach is ripe. My little boy cannot wait.

So it is with love, my young friends. Those who will build friendship, who will build Latter-day Saint ideals of character into their own lives and prepare themselves for marriage, and who will wait and practice self-control until they are mature and until they earn the right to a deep love, they will know what real love is—the kind of love that is part of life—the fruit of a good life together. Those who are interested only in the taste and the flavor, and who rush into a romantic relationship, often taste a bitter fruit.

Now, my dear brethren—you who are father, teachers, leaders and bishops—our young people live in an age of great temptation. They need help and guidance. I would like to make five specific, concrete suggestions on how we can help them to court and prepare for marriage more wisely.

The first one is this: I think we should discourage and not promote too early dating between the sexes. The other night a mother came to me and said that her 11-year-old daughter, who is in the sixth grade, insists upon using rouge and cosmetics and wants a date every week with a boy in the same class.

The other Saturday I came home and found our 12-year-old son preparing to go on a date with an 11-year-old neighbor girl to a private dancing party two blocks away, at a home in which we were not acquainted. I took the liberty of breaking up the date with as much grace as I could.

Brethren, if our young men must wait until they are 20, 23, 25, or even 29, until they are married, why should we rush this boy-girl dating relationship? Why should we encourage it too much through the schools and through our Church groups? I would say let us be careful.

Secondly: You cannot just dam off human nature, any more than you dam off water. If you dam off water, it will break out in another place. If you dam off human nature, it, too, will break out in some unwholesome way. So, while we are discouraging early dating, I think we must substitute something in its place. My second thought, then, is this: Make life meaningful and rich for the boy as a boy, and for the girl as a girl, during these early teen years; in fact, all through adolescence.

If a boy can find himself through work, through gaining skill, through learning, through fulfilling responsibility, and can get basic satisfactions within himself during these years, he will not be overly dependent upon his relationships with girls. He will not hunger for a steady relationship nor for a deep affectional relationship with a girl to prove his own worth or to find security within himself or self-esteem.

Can we make priesthood work so interesting in itself for our young men that it will satisfy their souls? Boys must have satisfaction!

Can we train a girl to develop her talent, her music, her household skills, even to have experiences in service, in worship, in responsibilities, so that she is not looking at a boy all the time—maybe only half of the time?

Just think of all the stimulation which comes to them to be romantic and to have romantic interests, from movies, advertising, and from their own biological natures. Let us make activities for boys meaningful to boys and activities for girls meaningful and rewarding to girls. Let their social activity be just part of their lives during these adolescent years.

The third suggestion I have to make is this: You bishops, teachers and leaders do not know how much fathers need you. An adolescent boy is seeking to become an adult and to be independent, and he is seeking the companionship of those his own age. Many a wonderful boy, unconsciously, has to almost rebel against his father during these middle teens in order to feel himself a man and to be independent. But this boy still needs friendship and companionship of men, of adults. He does not have the same feelings of rebellion toward you men that he would feel, perhaps unconsciously, toward his father. Let me illustrate:

The other night, at a wedding reception a lovely girl of fine parents in our community was the bride, married in the temple. As her Mutual Improvement Association teacher came through the line, the bride threw her arms around her teacher and said "Oh, thank you for helping me to have this experience today. You did so much for me." Here is a girl with a wonderful mother, but she needed also the help of this extra person to keep her ideals and goals high; to give her strength during these critical years.

I plead with you, brethren, and with myself, that we not think of our young men in terms of numbers or statistics, that we do not think of our work in terms of activities or even in terms of groups; but that we think of these young men individually and think only of the nearness that we have to them, of our understanding and our love for them. If we can stay close to them, then we can talk to them about these personal things.

My fourth suggestion concerns itself with this problem of dancing all evening with the same girl and of going steady so young. Sometimes we can use young people to help us help other young people. Let me give an illustration:

Down at the Institute of Religion in Tucson, Arizona, 20 years ago, we had 40 boys and 45 girls who came to Mutual. The boys were prone to dance after Mutual with the same girls each night. Four or five girls sat on the side lines.

One day I said to a returned missionary, who was professing his great faith in the Gospel of Jesus Christ, "Do you love your fellow men?"

He said, "I do."

"Does that include your fellow sisters, too?"

He said, "Of course."

I said, "I doubt that. Every Tuesday night you find a little girl here and dance with her for a half hour. You are not concerned with what other girls are doing. Why don't you find another returned missionary and you two see to it that every girl here has at least two dances every Tuesday night?"

He said, "I will. I had never thought of applying the Gospel to my social life before."

Well, these two young men soon had those girls happy and everybody dancing. It worked beautifully.

I believe you should speak to a group of the finest, most popular young leaders of your wards, of your MIA groups, about this problem of dancing all night with the same girl. They do not like to do it. They do it because it is the socially acceptable thing to do. They are afraid, as individuals, to break down the custom. If you put the problem to them, brethren, and suggest that a few of them trade partners and then remind them of it once a month and watch it, I believe it would work.

I think we need to use our imaginations and have meaningful associations between our young men and young women other than dancing. Try a "work party" sometime where you have M Men and Gleaners, broken into committees, helping the widows of the ward—serving with their hands and then coming together afterward for an old-fashioned supper, for singing, for prayer. It gives young people a chance to know each other in a marriage-like way and tends to break up narrow romantic relationships among them.

My last thought is this: Try an indirect approach. A man does not overcome the habit of drinking by talking about drinking or thinking about drinking. A person does not avoid unchastity by fighting himself. There is only one way to rise above our selfish, narrow interests. That is the way that has been pointed out to us repeatedly by the General Authorities.

I heard Elder Harold B. Lee say, 10 years ago, and again at our seminary convention two months ago, "I don't care much what you teachers do, if you will only create a love for God in the hearts of these young people you teach." I believe that this is very sound advice. If we could teach a boy to love God, really love God with all his heart, other things would fall into their places. If we could teach a boy to be a true disciple of the Lord Jesus Christ, other things would fall in their proper places. If we could just teach a boy to have respect for every other human being, these courtship problems would fall into their proper places. If we could teach a boy to have self-respect, his behavior would be good and ideal.

A Presbyterian boy, a medical student, said to me in a personal conversation, "Some of the Mormon boys at the 'dorm' smoke and drink. They are good fellows, too." Then he said, "I don't smoke and drink."

I said, "Why not?"

He said, "I used to be tempted, but now I have found a kind of spiritual feeling for life that is based on my faith in God. And smoking and drinking just don't seem to fit into that feeling which I have."

Can we, fellow workers, do as well by our young people?

My young brethren, I pray with all my heart that you will use wisdom in your youth and lay the foundations for happiness in marriage, by building friendships, by being chaste.

We older men—we teachers and leaders—God help us to help them to this end, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ.

Our next presentation this evening will be by Brother Mark E. Petersen. We will let him carry it to us.

You are familiar with the posters and the cards which we are distributing under the general caption, "Be Honest With Yourself." These posters, as you recall, are distributed every other month. It is now our plan to augment this program with the addition of some character building and faith promoting statements from people prominent in various walks of life. These statements will be placed upon phonograph records which may be played in your wards and stakes to various groups of young people and to older ones as well if that is desired.

From the sports world we are obtaining statements from such men as Glen Cunningham, the champion miler, Bob Richards, Olympic pole vaulting champion, and Gene Fullmer, and others. From the world of business we have such persons as Cecil B. deMille, movie producer, Merlo J. Pusey, Associate Editor of the Washington Post, a Pulitzer Prize winner, and we are now in correspondence with J. Edgar Hoover of the F.B.I. about the use of some of his material.

These statements are recordings being made by these men themselves. Their own voices will be heard, and they can have a great influence upon the membership of the Church for good.

It is our plan to send a recording to each stake in the month following the distribution of the posters. For instance, this month you will receive a poster; next month you will have a record. In this way there will be six posters a year and six recordings a year. For the most part we will place two recordings on every record, one on each side, so that actually you may receive only three records a year, each with two recordings, one on each side, to give you the six playings.

It is our plan to deliver the records to stake presidents who in turn will direct the manner of their distribution to Priesthood and auxiliary groups within their own stake. A letter containing suggestions for their use will be mailed out with the first record, and we are ready to mail the first record immediately.

In order to defray the expense involved, a very slight handling charge will be made to the stakes.

So that you may have a preview of what these records will provide, we will now play for you short excerpts from three of them. The first voice you will hear will be that of Gene Fullmer, former middleweight boxing champion of the world; the second will be Bob Richards, Olympic star; and the third will be that of Cecil B. deMille, motion picture producer.

(The records mentioned by Elder Petersen were then played on a record player so that all present and those listening in might hear them.)

PRESIDENT J. REUBEN CLARK, JR.

Second Counselor in the First Presidency

My brethren, and as the phrase in Holy Writ goes, from Dan to Beersheba, north, south, east, west:

President McKay, I can envision within the reasonable future that we shall broadcast throughout the civilized world, a broadcast in which by means of the proper interpreting organization here in Salt Lake City, perhaps in this building, the French will hear what we say in French, the German in German, the Spanish speaking people in Spanish, and so on throughout the whole earth.

It is a great, a great triumph which we already have.

I had intended to say a little something tonight more by way of suggestion than anything else. I would like to recommend that you people read the Prophet's translation of the 24th Chapter of Matthew. I am not acting as a prophet or a seer, I am only asking that you read that chapter. We have heard during this Conference certain passages of scripture repeatedly referred to. The Prayer, so-called, of the Great High Priest:

"And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent." (John 17:3)

We have heard the statement made by Peter to the Sanhedrin responsive to their question, by whom did he do these things:

"By the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, whom ye crucified . . . for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved." (Acts 4:10-12)

We have heard the scripture where Thomas was told by the Savior, responsive to his question, that no one could come to the Father, save through him. (John 14:4-6)

And I have in mind and will read to you, what was said by Alma to his son Shiblon:

"And now, my son, I have told you this that ye may learn wisdom, that ye may learn of me that there is no other way or means whereby man can be saved, only in and through Christ. Behold, he is the life and the light of the world. Behold, he is the word of truth and righteousness." (Alma 38:9)

And then I want to read to you or call your attention to those various statements by Paul in which he compares the wisdom of men and the wisdom of God, pointing out how great God's wisdom is and how slight is the wisdom of man. Then I want to read to you from the sermon which the Savior made to the multitude after he had met and answered the visitors from

John, the sermon in which he paid that great tribute to John and turning to the multitude he said:

"Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest.

"Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls.

"For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light."

Christ is the only one through whom, through his teachings and his work and his sacrifice and his atonement, by which we can reach the divine destiny which has been declared for us. We are living in perilous times. That is trite. Man has discovered and is trying to learn how to use some of the great forces that evidently were operative at the time of the creation of the universe. We know nothing about them, we play with them as a child plays with the live end of a high voltage transmission wire. We know not how to control them nor what they will do. We are equally challenged in all walks of life, economic, financial, social, religious, with new theories, new problems, new solutions. We live in a maze of unknown, untried ideas and concepts.

Be not dismayed. Remember what I have read to you and referred you to. Christ is our answer. Christ is our salvation. "Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid." (John 14:27) And remember, you who may be influenced by discoveries of science today, that the discoveries of science in my day have been thrown away and given up and in so far as present discoveries are not in accord with truth, they will be thrown away and discarded. "Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid." "For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light."

Brethren, keep your eye on the beam, the Word of God, and he will bless you.

May that blessing come to all of us, I humbly pray, in the name of Jesus. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

President Stephen L Richards of the First Presidency will now address us.

PRESIDENT STEPHEN L RICHARDS

First Counselor in the First Presidency

I was privileged to look over the annual report of the General Relief Society Board the other day, and I noted this conspicuous record of service. In the year 1957 the Relief Society teachers made 3,125,813 Family Visits by the Visiting Teachers, an increase of 184,383 over the previous year. And in the category of what is called "compassionate service" the record shows 275,469 visits of Relief Society members to the homes of the sick and the homebound—an increase of 19,750 over the previous year.

I thought what a challenge to the brethren of the Priesthood of this Church! I regard the Priesthood of the Church of God as being the truest—I do not know numbers—if not the greatest of all the brotherhoods in this world. It is a great fraternity made up of men who have been initiated, not by secret oaths nor by strange initiatory ordinances, but by receiving the ordination of the power bestowed by messengers of our Heavenly Father upon his servants with the restoration of the Holy Gospel.

I am sure that this fraternity contemplates affectionate feeling one for another, and mutual helpfulness. There have been presented to us tonight opportunities for helping, advising, counseling, safeguarding, the welfare of the younger members of the Priesthood as well as the older. Why ought we not to perform a service comparable to that of our sisters and go to see those who are in some form of distress, who need us, even without appointment as fellow members of this great fraternity?

I do not know that you noticed in our statistical information last night that there were approximately 3000 converts, or ten percent of all our converts, which were not made by the

Saturday, April 5

Second Day

missionaries serving under appointment either in the stakes or in the regular missions. Nearly ten percent of the converts were made by friends, neighbors and families who brought the message of life and truth to their close friends.

May we not, as members of the Priesthood, without appointment, consider our obligations to our neighbors and our friends, and do them the incomparable blessed service of taking the truth to them and teaching them the way of life?

The Lord bless us that we may truly be a brotherhood, and that our unity, our love, and our concern for each other shall characterize us as servants of our Lord, Jesus Christ, I pray in the name of Jesus. Amen.

PRESIDENT DAVID O. MCKAY

I hold in my hand the number of the men of the Priesthood in the quorums of this fraternity to which President Richards has referred, Melchizedek and Aaronic: In round numbers, in the Melchizedek quorums—High Priests, Seventies, Elders—High Priests, 41,552; Seventies, 20,649; Elders, 120,230—approximately 190,000 men; 150,000 Aaronic Priesthood members.

As I have listened to the wonderful messages given tonight, there came to my mind the words of the Savior:

"... whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man, which built his house upon a rock;

"And the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell not: for it was founded upon a rock.

"And every one that heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them not, shall be likened unto a foolish man, which built his house upon the sand:

"And the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell: and great was the fall of it." (Matt. 7:24-27.)

Over three hundred thousand men holding the Priesthood, carrying the responsibility of exemplars as well as proclaimers. Exemplars! If we could get but half of these men to apply in their lives every practical suggestion given tonight what a mighty influence for good would be accomplished! May I take, for example, some suggestions from the theme of Brother Lowell Bennion?

Young people, young girls in high school, going daily in courtship with young boys of their age, of the girls' age, in their early 'teens, depriving themselves of becoming better acquainted with other companions; and in that daily courtship in their early age, becoming so intimate as to arouse their passions for an hour's pleasure, bringing misery upon themselves through life. And that is not imagination! You men in the Presidencies of Stakes and Bishoprics of Wards, and you fathers and mothers of some of them, know that that is not imagination.

What practical suggestions Brother Bennion has given us in regard to this early association! The Mutuals are trying to work out Saturday night dances to entertain these young people. They merit entertainment, and we must furnish it for them. In our own wards, young men and young women come to those dances, and the young man and his girl spend the entire time they are there in that social in each other's company, dancing together hour after hour.

Years ago we did not use to do that. Now, they say, "Well, I pay my ticket; I bring my girl, and I have the right to dance with her." I wonder if we can do something, Bishops, to help our Mutuals make more effective their plans to have all the young people become well acquainted with one another as suggested by Brother Bennion. That is just one means.

We have young people who go out in society, our young boys and girls; they are not quite strong enough to say no when the cigarette and wine glass are passed around. They look upon father and mother and some of us teachers as old-fashioned. They erroneously think that it is all right to participate in the "wine cup" in the social ethics of the crowd, out in the canyon and other places. Some of our boys and girls are so eager to be the "hale fellow, well met" that they go to an extreme, and disappoint, not to say disgust, visitors from outside who look upon the Mormon boys and girls as abstainers from these things.

Can we go from this great Priesthood Meeting with just a little more determination to put into effect the suggestions given by Brother Bennion at the request of the Authorities? They were excellent and you are now expected to carry out those suggestions. "Whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man. . . ."

I think this has been a wonderful meeting. We shall get the number who are in attendance later. But now the question is, what shall we do about it? Two hundred and fifty thousand members in this fraternity. Are we equal to holding up the standards? Take just the number we have assembled here tonight—let us hold to the ideals given. We know they are right. There are many, for example, who become addicted to tobacco. We know it is wrong. Those who use it know it is wrong and injurious. Those who advertise it know it is wrong, and we sit in our homes and hear of the safety of one kind of cigarette over another, indicating that those who manufacture those cigarettes know they are injurious, and yet we go on violating the Word of God who a hundred years or more ago said, "tobacco . . . is not good for man."

Many who are listening to us tonight use it. You will not be excommunicated for using it, but the use of tobacco is not good. It is so stated in the Word of Wisdom, given by revelation to the Prophet Joseph Smith. Do not you think that it is time, brethren, just man to man, that we unite now in this brotherhood of Christ, this great, this most sacred fraternity in all the world, to stand by one another, helping one another and set an example to the world, if only from a social standpoint? All within the hearing of our voices tonight, and all who belong to the Priesthood quorums should realize in all earnestness that here are four hundred thousand men in the world who hold the Priesthood, who should be exemplary as fathers, as sons, as brothers, and each one has the responsibility of being an exemplar. What an influence throughout this world! Let us decide to do it. We will not condemn you, brother by our side, who does not do it; you have your free agency. We extend the hand of fellowship to you, and we shall help you. What an influence for good if we could have a hundred, two hundred, three hundred thousand men who say, "We are going to stand for the principles of our group!" We can do it!

"And every one that heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them not, shall be likened unto a foolish man, which built his house upon the sand: "And the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell: and great was the fall of it."

Brethren, the Church of Jesus Christ, as you know and I know, is the mightiest force in the world, but you and your companions constitute the source of that force. The Lord cannot use his quorums without you; and every one has the responsibility of doing his best to maintain the standards of life.

And our boys and girls in high schools, in universities, junior colleges, need our help. Their parents need our help. Let us try to follow the suggestions given tonight to aid them when they go to their socials.

It is time now to put forth extra effort to maintain the standards of right, the Word of Wisdom, and to pay attention as we have never done before to the efforts sent out by our Church Committee under the caption, "Be Honest With Yourself." These records that will be sent out, will you please use, make them effective in directing the boys and girls in the right way.

We are facing conditions which demand the highest intelligence, the deepest spirituality, the greatest effort that the Priesthood of God can possibly put forth.

Tonight in the Salt Lake Tabernacle we have 7,478 men of the Priesthood; in the Assembly Hall and in Barratt Hall and on the grounds, 3,600; in the one hundred and twenty-eight groups that have reported in, 34,076; a total of 45,154 men holding the Priesthood. President Clark was right when he said that the time will come when we shall be able to reach every part of the world. This is the largest attendance ever assembled in the Church. Last year we had 37,180; an increase this year of 7,970 people in Priesthood meeting.

With all my heart I say, God bless you.

Thank you, brethren, who have taken part tonight, Brother Lowell Bennion, Brother Mark Petersen, and those who are associated with him and those who are sending out these standards of action, appealing to our young folks in a way which we hope will be more impressive than just sending printed matter to them.

I conclude, that "... whosoever heareth these sayings of mine," said the Savior, "and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man, which built his house upon a rock;

"And the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell not: for it was founded upon a rock."

I like to think in that connection that here are several hundred thousand married men in the Melchizedek Priesthood, not even counting some of the Aaronic Priesthood, several hundred thousand men, every one of whom should be an exemplary husband. If that one thing were true, what an example to the civilized world! And that is not imagination, it really should be—Several hundred thousand men, fathers, to whom every son should be respectful and obedient, especially those sons who hold that Priesthood. Several hundred thousand men, fathers, to whom their daughters should be respectful, whose wives should be cooperative with them; no quarreling in the home—homes in which you would never hear the name of God taken in vain. And it should not be. Several hundred thousand homes in which prayers are offered, children participating, the blessing asked on the food. Suppose that were published as a fact, as it should be, what an example to the civilized world! We need not worry about going out into space, we can bring evolutions right here in our own towns, in our own cities, and in our own communities. Is this saying too much, fellow members of Priesthood quorums? I can feel your spirit; that is just how you feel. You feel mine. We feel our neighbor's.

Let us realize that we are members of the greatest fraternity, the greatest brotherhood—the brotherhood of Christ—in all the world, and do our very best each day—all day—to maintain the standards of these quorums, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

The Men's Chorus of the Tabernacle Choir will sing, "I Need Thee Every Hour," conducted by Richard P. Condie, after which Elder Donovan H. Van Dam, formerly president of the Netherlands Mission, will offer the closing prayer. The session at ten o'clock Sunday morning, tomorrow morning, will be broadcast as a public service over television and radio stations throughout the West. The Tabernacle Choir Broadcast will be from 9:30 to 10:00 A.M. Those desiring to attend the Tabernacle Choir Broadcast must be in their seats at 9:15 A.M. It is requested that the audience during the broadcast refrain from making even any slight disturbance such as coughing. Large crowds will undoubtedly be waiting outside the closed doors, and when opened there is usually a rush by those outside to get good seats. Be courteous, respectful. At 7:30 o'clock tomorrow morning, Elder Harold B. Lee of the Council of the Twelve will be the speaker on the Columbia Broadcasting System's "Church-of-the-Air" program. The music for this service will be furnished by the Tabernacle Choir under the direction of Brother Condie.

As thousands leave this great Priesthood Meeting tonight, let us keep in mind the admonition that is constantly being given us to drive carefully. Let us have courtesy in the city and on the highways.

The Men's Chorus will now sing, "I Need Thee Every Hour," and Brother

Van Dam will offer the benediction. This Conference will then be adjourned until ten o'clock tomorrow morning.

The Tabernacle Choir Male Chorus sang the hymn, "I Need Thee Every Hour."

President David O. McKay:

Brother Condie and members of the Tabernacle Choir Men's Chorus, thank you for this inspirational singing. We would like to say more, all that could be said, to express our appreciation for your coming out tonight and singing to us.

President Donovan H. Van Dam will now offer the benediction.

PRESIDENT STEPHEN L RICHARDS

First Counselor in the First Presidency

My dear brethren and sisters and friends listening to the proceedings of our conference, I extend to all of you my warmest greetings and my sincere and earnest solicitude for your happiness and well-being. I rejoice with you on this Easter Sunday in the opportunity we all have to pay homage to our Savior and to give to him our thanksgiving and veneration for the incomparable gift of eternal life which he brought to all mankind. We remind ourselves on this day that we are charged with the transcendent responsibility of building and maintaining his kingdom in the earth. It is in the hope that I may add a word of contribution to that greatest of all causes that I bring to you a somewhat practical suggestion on this sacred day. Termites are permeating the foundation of the kingdom—the homes of the people—even more destructive and elusive than those semi-microscopic little animals that break down our walls. Corrective measures are imperative.

I have chosen to make some comment on a theme which I earnestly hope may not prove to be too provocative, and certainly not offensive, to our sisters and to other women who may listen. I lift my text, with full acknowledgment, from an article appearing in This Week Magazine of some months ago, and recently reprinted in the Reader's Digest, written by Judge Samuel S. Leibowitz, senior judge of Brooklyn's highest criminal court. The article is entitled: "Nine Words That Can Stop Juvenile Delinquency," and the nine words used by the Judge are these: "Put Father Back at the Head of the Family."

It is likely that many of our audience have read this challenging article, and there is no time at my disposal to do more than to set before you a few statistical items and a few conclusions drawn by this eminent judge who has spent 21 years of his life as a criminal lawyer and 16 years as a judge in the criminal court, with long years of study and observation on causes of teen-age crime. He went to Europe and discovered from official reports that the percentage of crimes committed in each of the following countries by offenders 18 years of age or under was as follows:

In Italy: 2 percent of sex crimes, and 1/2 of 1 percent of homicides.

In France: 7 percent of sex crimes, with 8 percent of homicides.

In Belgium: 12 percent of sex crimes, with 1 percent of homicides.

In Germany: 15 percent of sex crimes, with 2 percent of homicides.

In Britain: 16 percent of sex crimes, and 1 percent of homicides.

And—here is the tragedy—in the United States 35 percent of all sex crimes are committed by offenders under 18, and 12 percent of all murders are committed by offenders under 18. Teen-age offenders in the United States exceeded those of other countries reported, ranging from 1800 percent to 100 percent. The judge reached the conclusion that there must be some principal factor in this great disparity so unfavorable to our own country, and he discovered, as perhaps might well have been assumed, that the primary reason for the reduced percentages of juvenile delinquency in the European countries was respect for authority, and that the principal contribution to that respect, which might not have been so readily assumed, was respect for authority in the home, which, as he points out, normally reposes in the father as head of the family.

These conclusions reached by this judicial investigator I believe would seem more sensational and surprising to people outside of the Church to which we have the honor to belong than to our own members. For generations we as a Church have been endeavoring to do just what the judge advocates—to put and keep Father at the head of the family, and with all our might we have been trying to make him fit for that high and heavy responsibility.

May I take a few minutes to give you our concept of home, fatherhood, and motherhood? Nothing occupies a more unique and distinctive and important position in our theology and understanding of God's purposes for his children.

We define a home as being a divinely appointed institution established on the enduring compact of a good man and a good woman, wherein spiritual children of our Eternal Father are permitted to receive mortal bodies endowed with eternal intelligence, these children so received in the home to be nurtured in health and so guided in the ways of living by loving and wise parents that they may be conditioned on completion of their lives to return to the presence of the Lord whence their spirits originally came. In this greatest of all enterprises the man and the woman are partners—co-signers, if you will, of the enduring compact which binds them together.

In this eternal compact, however, there is a feature which may not be understood by many thousands of men and women who enter into Christian marriage. It is the element of priesthood. Two things have been revealed about priesthood and marriage which are of most vital importance. First, that no marriage which is to endure forever, so that in essence a home may be projected into eternity, may be established without the authorization and sanction of divinely appointed priesthood. And secondly, that no marriage is eligible for the solemnization of divinely appointed priesthood without the man party to the compact having first received the endowment of the Holy Priesthood himself.

We call the ordinance of marriage when performed not only for time but for all eternity a sealing—a sealing of a good woman to a good man of the priesthood, with the express understanding and covenant that the priesthood of the man, if he shall be faithful and live worthy to enjoy it, shall be the supreme authority of the household, and no good woman of our faith begrudges her worthy husband of the priesthood the respect which goes with his high calling. She knows that to build him up in the esteem of their children, and thus make him conscious of the responsibility of leadership is the surest safeguard she can bring to her family in a world of temptation. The women of the Church rejoice in the priesthood of their husbands. They know that that priesthood is not expressed in autocratic or unrighteous dominion. They know that it is a divinely given power to be exercised only in long-suffering and patience, kindness and mercy, “reproving betimes with sharpness, when moved upon by the Holy Ghost; and then showing forth afterwards an increase of love toward him” who has been reproved. (D & C 121:43.) They know that that priesthood has true virtue within it—the power to bless, the power to heal, the power to counsel, to make peace and harmony prevail.

Perhaps the saddest of all our women are they who see their husbands fall away from that priesthood with which they have been endowed. They are the wives who are filled with anxiety for the future of themselves and their families. In the true companionship of a husband of the priesthood a good woman may pass through any trouble and have comfort, resignation, and peace. But if her husband fails her and fails his holy calling, it is hard indeed for consolation to come to her. She grieves, she prays, she pleads—sometimes seemingly in vain.

You husbands of the priesthood who have been neglectful of your covenants, I plead with you, in behalf of sorrowing wives and families, to relieve the pain you are causing those who love you, to regain manhood and strength and be worthy to assume in righteousness the leadership of your families. They want to respect you. They will if you will let them.

I think I have spoken for the great majority of our wives and mothers. There may be, however, a few who are not helping as much as they may do in the maintenance and re-establishment of respect for proper authority and leadership in the home. We have many brilliant women. I have admiration for their superior accomplishments. They are continually becoming more influential in all aspects of life and living, and I have no doubt but that their contributions will be of lasting value. If any of these brilliant women is a mother, I give it as my firm belief that however potent she may be in matters extraneous to the home, she has no higher, loftier, and more divinely given calling and obligation than to be the right kind of wife and mother in her home. And however superior her attainments may be, she owes a duty to her husband, to respect him as head of the family and adequately teach her children to do likewise.

The judge to whom I referred says: “If mothers would understand that much of their importance lies in building up the father image for the child, they would achieve the deep satisfaction of children who turn out well. . . . And no mother would ever have to stand before me with tears in her eyes and ask, ‘What did I do that was wrong, Judge? What did I do that was wrong?’”

It seems indelicate in an address of this character even to use the expression, “nagging wives.” If I did not regard the matter pertinent to the subject I am discussing, I would not mention it. I feel that women who may be said to be in this category cannot be fully conscious, whatever their provocation may be, of the damage they do to the morale of a home. I give to women generally the credit for being long-suffering and patient, and I think that in the foreseeable future they will still be called upon for great toleration, but I hope they will still be able to show kindness and patience to those who may annoy them. I think that parental disputes before the children are one of the most regrettable and lamentable of all aspects of domestic relations. They are responsible for more disruption of domestic tranquility and inimical effects on children than almost any other occurrences in family life. I suppose inevitably parents will have some differences. For the sake of everybody concerned let them be settled privately, and of course they can be settled privately if a spirit of tolerance and a recognition of responsibility prevail. I think that "nagging wives" cannot nag their husbands into doing anything that is worthwhile. Nagging is futile in the main, and disruptive of any spirit of harmony and peace. In homes where the priesthood presides rebellion and devotion will not thrive together.

Now, my brethren and sisters and friends, this idea of putting Father back at the head of the family is not just a novel and catchy phrase. It conforms to the revelations of the Lord, as I think the judge who advocated it must have well known. In Ephesians, chapter 5, verses 22 through 25, we read:

"Wives, submit yourselves unto your own husbands, as unto the Lord.

"For the husband is the head of the wife, even as Christ is the head of the church: and he is the saviour of the body.

"Therefore as the church is subject unto Christ, so let the wives be to their own husbands in every thing.

"Husbands, love your wives, even as Christ also loved the church, and gave himself for it."

Scripture given in modern times also lends support to this fundamental doctrine. When properly interpreted and applied I do not see how good women should take exception to it. No woman can be a good mother without desiring the goodness and well-being of her children. If the establishment of headship in the family contributes to their welfare, as the learning on the subject seems to indicate, how can she do other than strive to establish respect and regard for her husband? I admit that some husbands and fathers have made it difficult for respect to be maintained for them, but to abandon the principle and thus remove from fathers the responsibility of maintaining virtue and goodness among their children would certainly avail nothing.

It is needless to say that if a father is to be respected as the head of the household he must be an exemplar. The article to which I have referred sets forth the principle that students of juvenile delinquency seem agreed upon the fact that the child, to be safe for society and his home, must have dependable standards to live by. There must be clear recognition between right and wrong, and there must be sound, wise, and kindly discipline. In the midst of the somewhat confusing theories advanced by the sociologists and criminologists, it seems to me we cannot be going far afield by endeavoring to furnish to youth criteria for the guidance of their lives. There are no criteria which seem dependable excepting only those which have been tried and not found wanting, principles of righteousness and truth, coming to us from divine sources. I cannot see how any intelligent parent can feel much in the way of hazard and uncertainty in having his child brought up to recognize the traditionally divinely approved virtues and principles of conduct.

Yesterday we read of a youth of rather high social standing gratifying a passion to kill, which resulted in the murder of a girl. Tomorrow we will read of another such case, or the next day, or shortly thereafter. Certainly there is something lacking in the training for life of such perverts. I noted with satisfaction the observations of J. Edgar Hoover in the paper night before last on that same subject.

The other day Billy Graham wrote an article for the same magazine from which I have quoted, under the caption, "Why I Believe in the Devil." He gave three reasons. First, because the Bible plainly says he exists. Second, "because I see his work everywhere."

Third, because great scholars have recognized his existence.

The first reason is enough for me. The Lord has revealed the existence of Satan and his place and function in the eternal plan of life and salvation. Billy Graham apparently did not know what modern scripture contained in the Book of Mormon and our Doctrine and Covenants reveals on this subject, or he would have quoted it, or at least I hope he would. Here is a quotation:

It must needs be that the devil should tempt the children of men, or they could not be agents unto themselves; for if they never should have bitter they could not know the sweet. (D & C 29:39.)

This and other illuminating scriptures indicate that man could not have had his free agency to develop strength of character, resistance to evil, and go on to perfection except he be subjected to the power and the influence of Satan, the father of evil. Some sophisticated people ridicule the idea of such a personage of power, but that does not dispense with the revealed account of his actuality and the record of his accomplishments.

Sunday School teachers and others may give to the growing child teachings concerning good and evil, but who like the father of the family can teach the power of the Adversary and the resistance necessary to be built up to resist his seductive temptations to the children for whom he is responsible? Who can demonstrate to the child by the power of example the virtues and the standards of righteousness as can this head of the family?

To all who believe that order is the law of heaven and that the kingdom of God is established on the principles of righteousness, I submit these questions: Can order be maintained without acceptance of law and without discipline? Is discipline possible without recognition of authority? In human institutions and the government of men is it not essential that authority be vested in personalities? Where is the personality more perfectly endowed by nature and divine ordinance to receive and exercise authority in his own household than the father of that household?

Where can we hope for a greater contribution to come to the order of the kingdom than from the homes of our land? What greater tribute may we pay to our beloved Savior on this Easter day than to rededicate ourselves to the maintenance of a righteous discipline in his kingdom, and in all the worthy institutions which have been set up in the societies of men? Can you think of a greater kindness to youth than to prepare them in love and firmness to be worthy of the love of God and the eternal blessings which he holds out to all who obey?

So, my friends, I have no hesitancy, no feeling of dubiety and uncertainty in advocating the adoption in your homes of this salutary promising idea to bring Father back as the head of the family. I have no words to express my admiration and deep-seated regard for the mothers in our homes, and I am fully aware that their loving, patient care shall always be a major factor in the development of good and virtuous men and women. Because of their intense love of home and family I believe they will the more readily respond to the idea I am advancing. I know that they will welcome anything that is right to guard against an ever-increasing calamity that shakes our very national life, not only for present generations but that may shape its course for ages to come.

God bless the homes of our own land and of all the whole world. God bless the children that they may come to know truth and righteousness and adopt all that is good in their lives. God bless the mothers for the love they bring into our homes, and God bless the fathers that they may be worthy to take their appointed places as heads of the households over which they may preside in gentleness, love, dignity, and honor, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

President Stephen L. Richards of the First Presidency has just spoken to us. We shall now hear from Elder Marion D. Hanks of the First Council of Seventy.

ELDER MARION D. HANKS

Of the First Council of the Seventy

Perhaps no conference in my remembrance has devoted such effective and repeated emphasis to the home and the family, to children and youth, and to those who have to deal with them. Not attempting to correlate or specifically to fit in with what has been said, and out of my modest experience and ability, I would like today, in the time allotted to me, to talk not to the young (which I have often done), nor exclusively to their parents, but about the young to the adult generation in and out of the Church.

Out of my love for young people and the blessing of teaching them over the years and the association and friendship I have enjoyed with them, I have learned a few things, some of which I would like to mention today as pertinent to the general theme of home and family and the relationships of adult and youth.

About the young people I have learned these things, among others:

1. That by and large they are inclined to be like their parents, to be what their parents are. President Richards has impressively given the basis for my brief repetition of this thought. There are, I am certain, exceptions, since each child, like each of us, is an agent before God, blessed with the right to choose and responsible for his choices. They, like we, must choose, and therefore some of them are not like their fine parents, while some improve upon their parents. But we may repeat with absolute assurance that by and large they are inclined to be like their parents.

Now, this characteristic of youth can result in great good or in bad, depending upon what parents are, what kind of example and precept they present.

2. A second thing I mention about the young: they can be tremendously influenced by interested adults other than their parents, by teachers, leaders, counselors, bishops, by interested adults who will take time to love and give attention to them, to have confidence in them, and faith, because young people, like the rest of us, respond to those who show interest in them. They love those who love them, trust those who trust them, and in general can be counted upon responding to the type of adult who is interested in them.

Of course, this, can be a good or bad thing, depending upon the kind of adults who show interest, and what their motivations are.

3. A third thing I have learned about the young: They love an ideal. They are great followers. Their ideal may be a singer, an actor, a teacher, a parent, an author, an explorer, a scientist, an athlete, but they are inclined to choose someone to idealize. Usually it is someone older than they, more mature and adult, but not always.

This, like other characteristics of the young, can be good or bad, depending upon the persons whom they choose to idealize.

4. I have learned about the young that they can be taught, that they are responsive to the atmosphere and environment of the world around them. They respond to advertising and example, to filth and evil and degradation and bad influence, and they will respond likewise to virtue and decency and integrity and honor, if these qualities are manifested to them in language they can understand. They can be taught.

This can be good or bad, depending upon the fare their minds and eyes are fed upon.

5. I note about the young that they are not easily misled as to individuals. They can often detect quickly one who seeks to deceive them. They can uncover in interested adults with questionable motivations the real purposes of their interest. Again and again I have seen it demonstrated that they can spot one who tries to deceive, who pretends to represent virtue and integrity and does not. It is also true that young people sometimes are more willing to follow an openly evil or cynical person than one who is not what he should be and pretends to be. Therefore, it matters a great deal that we be genuine and earnest and honest in our relationships with them.

Believing that the young can be taught, and desiring to surround them with virtuous and uplifting and ennobling ideals, the Church has endeavored to provide experiences and influences and opportunities in the lives of the young which will bring into their beings, their minds, their very souls, the high and noble and decent things which will motivate them to contributing, participating citizenship in the world and in God's kingdom.

For that purpose, the Brethren have provided a series of small cards and large posters, with a general theme, "Be Honest with Yourself," and some magnificent contributions have been made to the young, contributions with which I am sure every right thinking adult, in or out of the Church, would be sympathetic. My experience as I have traveled the country and passed on the idea to others not of the Church is that they have responded with great interest to the program. Last night Brother Petersen announced that records have been added to this program—recordings of voices of successful, spiritual men, whose example and whose counsel will bless the lives of the young.

Now, I have one serious question to ask. I have talked about the young, and have said of them that they are going to be like their parents by and large, but that they will respond to interested adults outside of the home; that they are responsive also to ideas and ideals; that they can be taught; and that we are attempting to get them to "be honest" with themselves. The question I ask is: "Are we, the adult generation, honest with ourselves and with them?"

Time will not permit any kind of extensive treatment of the problem or question, but I repeat it and ask: Is it possible that in our approaches to the youth we are missing the significance of the opportunity to teach them that is ours? Could it be that Thoreau speaks of many of us when he says there are "thousands hacking at the branches of evil to one who is striking at the roots"?

I read a statement by an interested modern observer a time ago, which is a little harsh, perhaps, but which I repeat because I am sure it has some truth in it. He says,

Youth has more to teach its parents than to learn from them. The real savages are the old, not the young. Much of what the young learn from their elders they acquire at their peril. The world's tragedy is that it must be grown up—in other words, that it must be run by men, who though they know much, have forgotten what they were in their youth.

And as a key to what I am hoping to suggest to you, in and out of the Church, interested adults, these words of Quarles:

Thou canst not rebuke in children what they see practised in thee. Till reason be ripe, examples direct more than precept. Such as is thy behavior before thy children's faces, such is theirs behind thy back.

May I point out an example or two. The Lord has given us counsel about the significance of this magnificent machine, the body with which we are mortally blessed, and has taught us that the body is an eternal component of the soul—that "the spirit and the body are the soul of man." We teach the young that their bodies matter, and that their care of them is important.

On an airplane a week ago last Friday headed toward the East, I read out of the same section of one newspaper two interesting items—one a statement by a director of the American Cancer Society that if Americans would stop smoking it is likely 25,000 of them would be saved from certain death by lung cancer in the next few years. And in the same section, the notation that in 1957 Americans smoked 409 billion cigarettes, an increase of four percent and more over the year before. Can you say to a youngster, "Be Honest with Yourself," in a world where this goes on? Do you yourself contribute to the confusion that must result in his mind?

I read in that same newspaper (out of one edition in one day) another interesting item—a statement about a 62-year-old practising attorney in a midwestern city who had given himself up under the pressures of a tremendous man hunt for a hit-run driver. A prominent leading citizen, he confessed that he had a hazy notion of having hit something on his way home from a cocktail party.

The something he hit was a 31-year-old father of five children, a scoutmaster who died on the street where he was hit. In newspapers and magazines on the airplane were the blandishments of the liquor trusts, encouraging youngsters to be like certain "men of distinction," like this man, perhaps.

There are so many elements of the theme that there is not time to touch them, but I ask you today that when we cry to the young to "be honest" with themselves we consider what goes on in the world around us, the movies and television, the books and plays, the advertising in the newspapers we read, that so pervert the great creative capacity of man given us of God in order that we might find a partner, get married in his appointed way, establish a home and build a family, an outpost on earth of heaven's promise. So many have perverted this magnificent gift of God that we live in a world where sexual adventuring is almost, it would seem, a rule among many, looked upon as a form of amusement. I say I cannot believe that we can with honor and honesty tell the young to "be honest" with themselves knowing that they are responsive to the example we interested adults set.

It is so with us—we who claim to be followers of the Risen Christ and yet do not obey his commandments. It is so especially on this significant Easter day. He said:

I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father but by me. (John 14:6.)

Yet there are those preaching in his name who are willing to be quoted in the newspapers as saying that they prefer not to have the term Christian applied to themselves, for Jesus Christ, to them, said one recently, was a folk tale like Santa Claus.

I say to you that there are those who know for certain for themselves that God lives, that Jesus is the Christ, and that living his commandments and being honest with ourselves is the only way really to motivate the young to do what we would like them to do. I testify that I do know these things. God bless us that we may bless them as he intends we shall, I pray in Jesus' name. Amen.

BISHOP THORPE B. ISAACSON

First Counselor in the Presiding Bishopric

Surely we all owe a debt of gratitude to this marvelous choir. Brother Condie and the choir have won our hearts this morning. There are many individuals in the Church and out of the Church all over the world who greatly appreciate their beautiful music and the selections of their renditions.

While standing before you today, I pray that the Lord may sustain me and direct me, and I shall be grateful to each of you for an interest in your faith and prayers. Truly, this is a humbling experience. I am sure it would be a humbling experience for you, too, but probably that is as it should be because we are here this morning—this beautiful Sabbath Easter morning—in true worship. We acknowledge God as our Heavenly Father. We accept Jesus Christ as the Savior and the Redeemer of the world. We teach his birth in Bethlehem, his life in Galilee, and his sojourn in Jerusalem. We accept the mission of Jesus as the Savior of the world. We recount that mission, his contribution, the trial of Jesus that President Clark so beautifully told us about yesterday, and finally the crucifixion of the Savior on the hill of Calvary in Old Jerusalem.

A few years ago as I stood by the side of that tomb in Old Jerusalem I think I loved Jesus more than then I have ever done before in my life. We accept the resurrection of Jesus as true, and we know he came forth from the tomb as the Resurrected Christ, thereby giving eternal life, probably God's greatest gift to man.

We teach and we recognize the appearance of God, the Father, and his Son, Jesus Christ, to the Prophet Joseph in the Sacred Grove. There are some of our friends who can hardly accept that as truth, but we would plead with them to study and pray, and that testimony will come to them. We acknowledge Joseph Smith as a prophet of God. He was raised up, preserved, and divinely called. We teach and we believe in the revelations received by the Prophet Joseph. These revelations are true, and this chosen prophet left to the world more doctrines of life and salvation than any other person who ever lived, save Christ himself. He was truly a divinely called and inspired prophet, and sealed his testimony with his life and blood along with his wonderful brother, Hyrum, who was also martyred at Carthage Jail in Illinois.

Yes, we accept these things as factual, and we know without a doubt that they are true; that the Lord revealed his will to this prophet, and after the death of the Prophet Joseph Smith another great prophet was raised up, preserved, and divinely called—the prophet and President Brigham Young, who had a great mission to perform in leading this people on that unknown journey. After the death of the Prophet Brigham Young, other prophets were raised up and divinely called to lead the Church, each one in his time a true prophet of the Lord. At the present time one stands at the head of this Church and is the mouthpiece of God, our Eternal Father. President David O. McKay is a prophet of the Lord, just as were the prophets of old. I bear testimony to you that I know this to be true, and I know it by the power and gift of the Holy Ghost. The Spirit of the Lord testifies to our spirits and we believe.

I would like to address some of my remarks to a very large group of brethren whom I regard as fine men and of great potential power and strength and in whom I have great interest, the senior members of the Aaronic Priesthood. I know many of them, and I want to express to them our love and our friendship. We have only one desire, that we can share with them some of the joys and blessings that we are privileged to enjoy. When you stop to think of this large group of men, if it were possible to assemble them, we would fill this tabernacle ten times as it is filled this morning.

Where are they today, and what have we done about it? We want to tell them that we love them, and we welcome them back into activity in the Church. We want to assure them of our interest in their welfare. We have been greatly impressed with the progress made by these wonderful men, and we would plead with all of our brethren of this group and other groups that if for any reason you may have become inactive in the Church, we want you back because it will bring you greater joys and blessings than have ever come to you any other way in your life. We can promise you that the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ changes the pattern and the attitude and the personality and the personal spiritual strength of men who will accept Christ and the teachings of the gospel.

May I give you a quotation from Alma to express to you how we feel:

Behold, O Lord, their souls are precious, and many of them are our brethren; therefore, give unto us, O Lord, power and wisdom that we may bring these, our brethren, again unto thee. (Alma 31:35.)

In a recently completed survey, with 224 stakes reporting regarding the activity of their schools for senior members of the Aaronic Priesthood, we are pleasantly encouraged and grateful to see what is taking place. We have, for instance, at the present time, approximately 367 schools now in session for the senior members of the Aaronic Priesthood and their wives, some of them on a ward and some on a stake basis. We have had enrolled in these schools in the last year more than 17,000 of these wonderful men and their wives, and we are learning of some glorious experiences that have come into the lives of these brethren.

Sunday, April 6

Third Day

Just yesterday I shook hands with a former senior member of the Aaronic Priesthood who now is a stake president. It is not uncommon for us to shake hands with some who are now bishops.

May I give you a few excerpts from some of the special survey sheets regarding these schools, the comments of which are from the senior members of the Aaronic Priesthood?

Perhaps the greatest benefit that I received from the school was the feeling that my Church was still very much interested in me in spite of my inactivity for so many years, and that I was still needed and wanted in the Church; that I still had a chance to make up in a way for years of absence; that there was still time left, but that I must not procrastinate longer.

Another:

I have completed the first school, and I recommend that all the senior members of the Aaronic Priesthood attend these schools. It is a great feeling to feel yourself grow as you get interested again in the Church. This school seems to give us the spark that we need for most of us to get started again, and I would recommend to every senior member of the Aaronic Priesthood that you attend these schools.

It was through this school that my wife and I received the spark of hope, and now we are working our way to the temple.

It is wonderful to see how the lives of individuals may be changed, and the lives of sons and daughters likewise are changed, because they are happy when their fathers and mothers make adjustments in their own lives. To sons and daughters who come from a divided family—the father a member of the Church or the mother a member of the Church—you can do so much for your mother and your father. A girl, a while ago, sent this letter to her father and mother in answer to a letter that she had received.

Dear Mother and Daddy: I received your letter, and I have never had such a pleasant and wonderful surprise in my life as when I read it, telling me that Dad was now going to join the Church. I started to cry, and I cry every time I think of it because really, I have never been so happy. This is the blessing that I have been praying for ever since I was big enough to know how to pray.

Young people, you, too, can do that for your fathers and your mothers.

Dad, I know you will now be greatly blessed, and if you will live the commandments our Heavenly Father has given us, you will soon have the Holy Priesthood which will give you the power to do the things that you have never dreamed of doing before. I think it will be so wonderful if you will both live worthy of being married in the temple some day.

I cannot think of a more glorious wedding gift for me than to be sealed to both my mother and father and my sweetheart, Jim, on the same day. Another great thing will be that now, Daddy, you will be able to assist in many ordinances of the Church, and someday assist in the blessings of my babies. That will mean so much to me. Nothing could have ever made me happier than this has made me.

I love you, and as your daughter, I am very proud of both of you. You have made me so happy, and I will always be what you expect me to be.

We are humble and truly grateful for our membership in this Church. We do not wish to appear arrogant or haughty, because we realize that we are not as good as we should be, but we are thankful we are as good as we are, and are grateful to God for what we can yet become.

The Church offers us the opportunity to worship God and a chance to come into an awareness of him. With him there is healing of sorrows, strength for the day, and peace at the last. If we have been at odds with ourselves or with God, our Father, and the universe, reconciliation with the Master, with our fellows, and our soul can come. That change will come about if we are humble, repentant, and seek the assistance of our Heavenly Father, but it can never take place without communion with the Lord and a spiritual religious belief and faith.

The understanding of God's goodness enables man to meet everyday needs, problems, and troubles. We can come to a reconciliation with God, with people, and with ourselves. Despair and discouragement can be transformed to confidence, guilt to forgiveness; cross purposes and uncertain goals can be changed to spiritual strength. Yes, one's real personality heretofore utterly alone can take on a new character with true humility. True religion gives one strength to ask forgiveness of one's fellow men. If that be difficult, and sometimes it is, all we need to do is to become humble, and it gives us spiritual strength to ask for God's forgiveness. If we can only accept and thoroughly recognize that God is our Father, if we will listen to his words, we will not be troubled.

The gospel as taught by the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints will lift one higher than any other philosophy on earth. It will give one a higher knowledge, more to live for and more to die for than any other church on the earth, because it is the true Church of Jesus Christ. The truths of the gospel are beautiful. As a church and as a people, we are particularly blessed with the scriptures of the Book of Mormon, and I would like to say to my friends who may be inactive, or those not of the Church, the Lord has made all of us a very definite promise in the Book of Mormon (see Moroni 10:3-5), and I hope that every man within the sound of my voice who has never done so will read the following. The Lord said:

Behold, I would exhort you that when ye shall read these things, if it be wisdom in God that ye should read them, that ye would remember how merciful the Lord hath been unto the children of men, from the creation of Adam even down until the time that ye shall receive these things, and ponder it in your hearts.

And when ye shall receive these things, I would exhort you that ye would ask God, the Eternal Father, in the name of Christ, if these things are not true; and if ye shall ask with a sincere heart, with real intent, having faith in Christ, he will manifest the truth of it unto you, by the power of the Holy Ghost.

And by the power of the Holy Ghost ye may know the truth of all things. (Moroni 10:3-5.)

Elder Orson F. Whitney has written the following concerning Mormonism:

Mormonism's magnanimity—And yet "Mormonism" is said to be narrow, small and illiberal. Narrow, forsooth! Then where will you find breadth? Where find justice, mercy, magnanimity, if not in a religion that saves the living, redeems the dead . . . , and glories all who repent? "Mormonism" a small thing? It's the biggest thing in the universe! It is the Everlasting Gospel, the mighty soul-ship of the dispensations, launched in the days of Adam upon the heaving ocean of the ages, and now on its last voyage over the stormy billows of Time to the beaconing coast of Eternity! (Saturday Night Thoughts.)

God can win strange victories in the hearts and lives of those who believe in him. Too many people have been trying to do without God, perhaps that is the reason for some of their failures.

Too many people are trying to give irreligion the garb of respectability. They have acted as if we could acquire education without acquiring a knowledge of religion, and wisdom without the experience and practice of religion.

Perhaps we have not found peace within ourselves. The lack of peace usually goes with the lack of belief in the Almighty God and a knowledge of the availability to us of his guidance. We have not been able to establish peace among the nations of the world. With all our knowledge, we yet urgently need to gain sufficient understanding completely to recognize that there is an inescapable cause and effect relationship between these mounting failures and our diminishing faith. Unless we are willing to prepare for a new dark age, we must soon acknowledge that as good as we think we are, we are not good enough to get along without the God our forefathers found indispensable.

Every person might follow the admonition of Alma:

Counsel with the Lord in all thy doings, and he will direct thee for good; yea, when thou liest down at night lie down unto the Lord, that he may watch over you in your sleep; and when thou risest in the morning let thy heart be full of thanks unto God. (Alma 37:37.)

May I close with this thought:

We expect to pass through this world but once; therefore, any good that we can do or any kindness that we can show to any living person, let us do it now. Let us not

Sunday, April 6

Third Day

defer it or neglect it, for we shall not pass this way again.

May God favor us by granting to each of us the companionship and the association of his sweet, holy Spirit, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER MARK E. PETERSEN

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

As we pay tribute to the Savior of the world on this Easter day and express gratitude to him for his great atonement, we must remember, also, that to be a true Christian means that we love Jesus Christ and that to love him means to obey him.

How can we truly love him unless we walk in his footsteps. How can we sincerely honor him unless we follow his teachings?

Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven. (Matt. 7:21.)

His great fundamental teaching was that of love, and out of love he taught unity, harmony, brotherhood, sisterhood. He prayed, you recall, that his disciples might be one, even as he and his Father were one. He taught that a house divided against itself cannot stand. A man cannot divide his loyalty, either. No one can serve two masters.

When he placed apostles and prophets in the Christian church, as Paul explains, he did so to help the saints to be united, to reach a unity of faith, to understand what is true harmony. Yet, as we contemplate these teachings, we must realize that Christianity itself is sadly divided. Thoughts of unity among the churches are repugnant to most Christians, and still they claim to believe the Master's teachings urging unity and brotherhood, not division and lack of harmony.

One of the most difficult things about this division in modern Christianity is the effect it has upon family life. In these days of far too much discord in the average American home, religious differences frequently become the important cause of discord, sometimes to the extent of breaking up homes, causing separations and divorce, with all their accompanying heartaches.

Bishop Thorpe B. Isaacson of the Presiding Bishopric has just addressed us. Elder Mark E. Petersen of the Council of the Twelve will now speak to us. He will be followed by Elder Hugh B. Brown.

Every young couple on making plans for marriage hopes for a happy home life. Everyone wants to make a success of marriage. Most young couples have faith in God and seek his blessings upon their marriage. But in so many instances the very religions to which they hold tend to bring unhappiness to them because the couples belong to different religious faiths. This difference becomes a source of irritation, conflict, quarreling, and unhappiness. It becomes so to such an extent that those who have studied marriage most are convinced that so-called interfaith marriages generally are a mistake.

Christianity is too divided to permit Christians of different denominations to live together in peace and harmony. It may be a great reflection upon Christian living and Christian concepts, but it is nevertheless true. Interfaith marriage jeopardizes the stability and happiness of the home.

The Christian denominations are the first to recognize this. They, themselves, advise their young people to avoid marital disharmony by marrying within their own faith. I have written to many clergymen of various faiths from coast to coast, asking their views on this subject, and have received back a whole sheaf of letters, all advising against interfaith marriage. To give you a small cross section of their opinions, I read to you a few of the letters, at least excerpts from them.

From New York City, St. Patrick's Information Center, the Rev. Charles J. McManus writes:

You can gather the position of our Church from the fact that Catholics are forbidden to marry non-Catholics by Church law.

And from the Salt Lake Diocese of the Catholic Church, a letter signed by the Rev. Francis T. Kelleher, says:

His Excellency, Bishop Hunt has requested that I answer your letter of August 23.

... a mixed marriage is always potentially dangerous. Disagreement on religion can lead to unhappiness for both parties, confusion and indifference on the part of the children, and even breakup of the family. We have seen it happen time and again.

From the First Presbyterian Church of Salt Lake City, the Rev. E. E. Bollinger writes:

The Protestant tradition has always taken a firm stand in advising young people to marry within their own historic faith. . .

We . . . agree with the LDS Bishop, the Jewish Rabbi, and the Roman Catholic Priest, that chances for harmony in marriage are greatly minimized when there are two major religious traditions in the home. . . .

The Rabbi Mordecai Podet of the Congregation B'Nai Israel of Salt Lake City, writes:

To my knowledge no clergyman, marriage counselor, or other person professionally trained and experienced in marital matters recommends mixed marriages. . . . The Central Conference of American Rabbis, which is the organization of liberal rabbis, is on record opposing mixed marriage.

The Christ Lutheran Church and School, of Murray, Utah, has as its pastor, the Rev. William C. Naatz, and he writes:

... we urge our young people to marry within their church if that is at all possible. The tragedy of intermarriage is that far too often when children are born into families of split faiths there are serious complications. It has been my experience that the great majority of unchurched homes in our country today are homes where there were originally two different faiths involved, and as a compromise finally the family ended up going nowhere.

The First Unitarian Society of Salt Lake City writes over the name of Harold Scott, Pastor:

The literature on the subject indicates that when Jews, Protestants, Catholics, and Mormons intermarry, there are more difficult adjustments to be made than as though the contracting parties were of the same faith. . . .

... interfaith marriages . . . mean additional strain on the marriage bond.

We wrote to the Greek Orthodox Church in New York City. The Director of Public Relations, Mr. Arthur Dore, wrote and said:

... our Church . . . never encourages mixed marriages because, speaking from experience, mixed marriages are likely to be a failure. . . .

The Colorado Woman's College recently conducted a discussion for the students of the college in which a Jewish rabbi, a Catholic priest, and a Protestant minister spoke. Following this discussion, the Rocky Mountain News summarized the information given in their issue of February 5, 1958, and said:

Marriage between people of different religious faiths is often the start of loss of faith, delinquency or divorce. . . .

The New York Times on June 24, 1956, carried an article entitled, "Why Marriages Go Wrong," and among other things said:

... there are approximately three times as many divorces or separations in Catholic-Protestant marriages as there are when the marital partners are of the same faith, and about four times as many when a Catholic father is married to a Protestant mother. And here again the story of marital unhappiness is far larger than divorce and separation statistics show.

Being further interested I decided to write to judges in divorce courts of the nation, and went from New York to San Francisco and Los Angeles, and I read only a few of the replies given us by these gentlemen:

From the Circuit Court of Cook County, Illinois (Chicago), Judge B. Fain Tucker writes:

... there is an obvious advantage in the same church membership. Dissimilarity of interest in any field may prove a hazard in marriage. This is particularly true with religion. . . . I believe that family worship—family prayers—help tremendously in strengthening marriage ties. Family worship is easier if both spouses belong to the same church. . . .

Sunday, April 6

Third Day

He goes on to say:

. . . Difference in religion undoubtedly will aggravate the "in-law" problem where the parents of one or both spouses are deeply religious. . . . The religious training of the children when the spouses are of different churches, is one of the most vexing problems of all.

Then from the Superior Court of San Francisco, Judge Orla St. Clair writes:

Where the parents are of different religious faiths, we often find that if the marriage fails the bitterness over the religious problems for the children seems to be all out of proportion. . . . if the marriage is a failure, this mixed faith problem is an extremely vexatious one from the point of view of the court trying to decide custody and visitation matters.

From the Supreme Court of the State of New York, Justice Samuel M. Gold writes:

. . . religion does play a part in maintaining a happy marriage and . . . the chances of a marriage being successful are greater when young people marry within their own faith.

And from Denver, Colorado, District Court, Judge Joseph E. Cook writes:

. . . interfaith marriages do not succeed as well as between people of the same faith; especially where children are involved.

Educators have made considerable research into this problem. I quote only one, Dr. Earl E. Emme, Professor of Psychology and Religion, Florida Southern College, who, on October 16, 1957, addressed an open meeting of Pi Gamma Mu, a National Honor Society in Social Science. He listed numerous reasons why people of different religious faiths should not marry. He advocated marriage within your own church. I only give two comments from him in the interest of time. First, he says:

A survey of representative textbooks used in marriage courses [in colleges and universities] shows that they all counsel the students against mixed marriages.

And second:

The slogan of religious groups that "Families that pray together, stay together" might be restated to say that "families that can do things together, plan things together, stay together."

"The key word," he says, "is together." And then he adds, "The happy-together family cannot remain so if religion is not included."

Even the Lord has spoken on this subject. Anciently he asked through one of his prophets:

Can two walk together, except they be agreed? (Amos 3:3.)

Through Moses, he commanded his ancient people to refrain from marrying unbelievers. Said he:

Neither shalt thou make marriages with them; thy daughter thou shalt not give unto his son, nor his daughter shalt thou take unto thy son.

For they will turn away thy son from following me, . . . so will the anger of the Lord be kindled against you, . . . (Deut. 7:3-4.)

And the Apostle Paul said:

Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers: . . . (II Cor. 6:14.)

What are we to do then? Shall we bring upon ourselves the unhappiness of a divided household? Shall we profit by the voice of experience and marry within our own faith?

God lives, it is true. Christianity, divided as it is, claims to believe that. The gospel is the way to peace. This also is true in spite of the great divisions existing in modern Christianity. But Christianity of today is so divided that if we bring its conflicting philosophies into our homes, they can and do become a source of discord which may jeopardize the very foundations of our family life.

Then, what are we to do? The obvious answer to everyone is, marry within your own faith. If you are a Presbyterian, marry a Presbyterian. If you are a Catholic, marry a Catholic. If you are of the house of Judah, marry within your own faith. If you are a Mormon, marry a Mormon.

But to the Latter-day Saints we have something still further to say. Not only should the Latter-day Saints marry Latter-day Saints, but also the Latter-day Saints must marry Latter-day Saints within a Latter-day Saint temple. Just as God has his mode of baptism, so he has his mode of marriage. Should a Latter-day Saint ever reject God's mode of baptism? Then why should a Latter-day Saint ever reject God's mode of marriage?

Marriage is intended by the Lord to last forever, eternally, as President Richards says, "to be projected out into the eternities." That takes temple marriage. It brings together two Latter-day Saints of faith and devotion. If they will be united, if they will come and participate in the great saving blessing of a temple marriage, if they then will live the gospel and keep sacred their marriage covenant, they need never worry about divorce because of religious or other serious differences in the home, nor need they ever fear that death itself will serve as a divorce court, and break the bonds which were made for time only.

They who are married in the temple of God are married for all eternity, according to God's mode of marriage.

May we have the foresight to live in such a way that we may fulfil this great commandment of our Father and reap the great blessings he has for us, is my humble prayer, in Jesus' name. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Our concluding speaker will be Elder Hugh B. Brown. Elder Mark E. Petersen of the Council of the Twelve has just addressed us. Elder Hugh B. Brown, Assistant to the Twelve, will now speak to us.

ELDER HUGH B. BROWN

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve Apostles

An ancient prophet gave the assurance that God would require nothing of his children save he provided a way for them to carry out his commandments. I rely on that promise and pray for divine guidance. Speaking of the Lord making provision for the carrying out of his commandments, I am reminded that in ancient days and in our time he required that the gospel of the kingdom should be preached to all the world. When this commandment was given to the founders of the Church, perhaps it seemed to be an insuperable task, but God has kept his promise and has made provision whereby we are able to reach more people with the gospel in a few minutes than our fathers could reach in years. We are grateful for the microphone, the radio and television; but these facilities, great as they are, as President Clark indicated last night, are just in their infancy, and God will, in his own due time, give us such improvements and amplifications as will enable us to carry out his great commandment.

We greet you, our friends out there in the radio and television audience who are not members of our Church. We join with Christians everywhere, as has been indicated all through this conference, in commemorating and giving thanks to God for the resurrection of the Lord. The significance of this transcendent event was emphasized by the Apostle Paul in that matchless sermon recorded in Corinthians, in which, among other things, he said: "And if Christ be not risen [from the dead], then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain." (I Cor. 15:14.)

We believe that the greatest story ever told in all the annals of history is the story of the atonement of Christ. The record of his resurrection and ascension, without which the atonement would not have been complete, is the climax to that story; and now, two thousand years after the event, it is still central and pivotal in all true Christian thought.

Christ was both mortal and divine—mortal through his mother, Mary; divine through his Father, God—and because of that unique combination he was able to yield voluntarily to death in order that through his divinity he might conquer death, break its bands, and make the resurrection possible to all men. The resurrection is not for a select few, nor is it alone for believing

Sunday, April 6

Third Day

Christians; but every man and woman who ever lived upon earth, or who ever shall live thereon, will be raised from the dead.

Paul, the apostle, epitomized the cause and consequences of the atonement in one sentence: "... as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." (Ibid., 15:22.) And the Savior said,

Marvel not at this; for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice,

And shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation. (John 5:28-29.)

But we must not assume because of this promise that regardless of what we may do we shall have exaltation and eternal life. Those blessings are reserved for those who accept the gospel of Jesus Christ and observe and keep the commandments of God.

We not only commemorate the resurrection of the Lord as an event in history, but we also recognize it as a harbinger of things to come. When he gave his life on the cross, he did not indicate that his interest in his fellow men had ceased. He promised, and his apostles predicted, as did the prophets of the Old Testament, that there should be a second coming of the Lord when, as Paul said,

... the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first: (1 Thess. 4:16.)

But before his coming certain things must happen. Among them, as he said in answer to the question of his apostles as to what should be the sign of his coming and the end of the world, "... this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come." (Matt. 24:14.) It is significant that he said "this gospel of the kingdom," not "a gospel," or "some gospel," but "this gospel." And the Apostle Paul, always precise and zealous said:

But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed. (Gal. 1:8.)

And still there are some who say it matters little or not at all which church one joins, which gospel one preaches, whether it be the gospel of Luther, Knox, or Calvin, whether one belongs to the Roman or Greek Catholic Church, to one of the numerous protestant denominations, or to some group which emphasizes some one aspect of the gospel such as faith healing, mode of baptism, which day is the Sabbath, etc. Unfortunately the world is faced with a variety of religious denominations which in some measure neutralize each others' influence in the minds of people.

The question then arises, "Where shall we find that gospel?" The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints makes certain definite statements with respect to what the gospel is. A commission was appointed in England recently by the Archbishops of Canterbury and York to make a complete survey of modern evangelism, and they were asked to seek and discover if they could the causes for the wide and deep gulf that exists between the church and the people. This commission in the preamble to their report, emphasized the irrelevance of the church in the life and thought of the community in general.

The most arresting observation made by the commission was, "We believe that the tendency to preach another gospel, or a partial gospel, has been the weakness (not to say the sin) of the church." This observation reminds us of Paul's warning and anathema which for emphasis he repeated:

As we said before, so say I now again, If any man preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accursed. (Ibid., 1:9.)

What gospel did Paul preach? All will agree that he was converted to the gospel of Jesus Christ as now taught in the New Testament through personal communication and instruction. He became one of its chief exponents, most effective and fearless defenders, and finally one of its martyrs. Many are asking, "Where can one find a church which teaches the gospel as Paul taught it?" Any search for the true gospel leads at once to the matter of origin and authority.

In a brief consideration of that subject we shall not challenge the claims of other churches unless our claim that we have the gospel is taken as a challenge. The Catholic Church bases its claims to authority on the long line of apostolic succession. Many of the other churches began with a protest against or an attempted reformation of the so-called mother church. As the great reformers failed to change or reform the false teachings and undesirable conditions they claimed to have discovered, and as they were successively excommunicated, some of them undertook to establish new churches without claiming new revelation or authoritative ordination.

The restored gospel of Jesus Christ does not base its claim to authority on apostolic succession, nor did it begin with a protest against or attempt to reform other churches. Furthermore, this Church did not have its beginning in scholarly analysis of the gospel as taught in the Bible. Its founder, at the time of his first vision, did not claim to be a profound student of theology, and he knew little of the writings of the early church fathers. His message came as a direct revelation from heaven.

We say humbly but fearlessly that the restored gospel of Jesus Christ is the divinely inspired way of life, the plan of salvation. It is the gospel of the kingdom of which Jesus spoke. It is, as was its prototype in the Meridian of Time, the fulness of the everlasting and unchangeable gospel, the very power of God unto salvation, the everlasting gospel which, through angelic ministration in the latter days, was, according to John the beloved, to be carried to every nation, kindred, tongue, and people.

Some express amazement and disbelief when we claim that the restoration began with a vision of heavenly beings and revelations from God. These claims should not be thought incredible to anyone who believes in the Holy Bible, for such events were standard procedure in both the Old and New Testaments.

Mormonism is a message of glad tidings to all people, a glorious declaration that the prophecies recorded in both Old and New Testaments concerning the latter days have been and are being fulfilled. It is an announcement that the God of heaven has set up a kingdom as predicted by Daniel. It is a proclamation that the times of refreshing have come from the presence of the Lord, when there is to be a restitution of all things which God has spoken by the mouths of all his holy prophets since the world began as predicted by Peter. (Acts 3:19-21.) We humbly and gratefully announce the opening of the Dispensation of the Fulness of Times in which, as promised by Paul, all things are to be gathered together in Christ, both which are in heaven and which are on earth. (Eph. 1:10.)

The above scriptures concerning the restoration refer to the whole gospel. We think neither individuals nor groups of men, under whatever title, are justified in their attempts to pick and choose between particular aspects of the whole gospel. We profoundly dissent from the opinion that there is an element in the message which changes with varying conditions. The message of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is that there has been a restoration of the identical gospel which Jesus taught and which the apostles preached at his command. It is a gospel of glad tidings of great joy, a gospel of hope and saving power as was enjoyed by members of the Church in the days of the Savior and his apostles.

The restored gospel is also a warning of judgment to come, a judgment which is neither fiction nor superstition but is a tremendous and solemn truth, when all that is found valueless or out of harmony with the purposes of God must be abolished.

Some may not understand how this message of good news can include a warning of judgment to come, but judgment is integral to the gospel. It is the assertion of the final triumph of good and the abolition of evil.

While the Church, which was organized under divine direction, is the kingdom of God on earth, its membership consists of men and women who are not yet made perfect. It is a mixed society with an international complexion, subject in varying degrees to the weaknesses of humanity. It does not claim to be a picture gallery where every portrait is a masterpiece; therefore, Church membership requires continued tolerance, charity, and love of fellow men.

We do not claim to have achieved perfection; we often fall short of our ideals; but with additional revelations from the Lord, and with the gift of the Holy Ghost to help us, we hope it may be said of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints what Peter said to the Church of Jesus Christ of former-day Saints:

But ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people; that ye should shew forth the praises of him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvellous light: (1 Peter 2:9.)

We look upon the restoration and the second coming of Christ as sequels to the resurrection. We believe that a full understanding of the significance of the resurrection must include consideration of and belief in his second coming which, as he himself declared, must be preceded by the preaching of the gospel of the kingdom to all the world.

There are those who wonder at our assurance, and sometimes they say our presumption—as we make such positive and definite statements, but we ask you, our friends: If you knew of a revelation from God, and knew it to be a revelation, would you equivocate or water it down, or be afraid to defend it, or assert it? In my opinion, no greater message has come to this world since the angel standing at the open tomb said: "He is not here; he is risen." (See Mark 16:6.)

The announcement of the Church today, and let all people heed as they hear, is that this same Jesus has appeared again, established his kingdom, organized his Church with apostles and prophets, and set in motion a great missionary system by which the gospel of Jesus Christ shall be carried to all the world as a witness, and then the end shall come.

Humbly I bear my testimony to you, my friends, and brothers and sisters, that from the center of my heart to the ends of my fingers and toes I know that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the Living God. I know that he came forth from the tomb with his body, which he displayed to his disciples, and invited them to feel of the wounds. I know that he has spoken again. I know that the gospel has been restored to the earth. If this message be true, it should be heard and heeded by all men everywhere, for it has in it the saving principles of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ.

I leave this testimony with you, and thank God that he has given it to me, and pray that I may be able to live so as to come back into his presence, and I remind all of you that any of us may come into his presence when our conduct has been such that we can feel at home there.

God bless us to that end I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Elder Hugh B. Brown, Assistant to the Twelve, has been our concluding speaker. You who attend regularly notice that we omitted some matters in the opening of this session on Easter morning. We should like to refer to some conditions for which we are very appreciative. At the conclusion of the sixth session of this Conference we express our sincere appreciation to the owners and managers of the many television and radio stations who have offered their facilities to us last evening and this morning. Television sets have been open on the Coast and all around since the opening of this session. We are grateful for the wonderful public service thus so generously extended.

We would like you friends to know too, and our leaders in social, political, and educational circles, that we are grateful for your attendance at these sessions, and particularly this morning those who have been in the Tabernacle, in the Assembly Hall, and Barratt Hall, and other places. We have asked for your names, and I am sure people will be pleased to know that we have had here this morning our Governor, George Dewey Clyde; Judge Christensen of the United States District Court; our own Ezra Taft Benson, member of the Twelve and in the Cabinet of President Eisenhower; Senator Arthur V. Watkins; Senator Wallace F. Bennett; Congressmen Henry Aldous Dixon and William A. Dawson; LaMont Toronto, Secretary of State; Adiel F. Stewart, Mayor of Salt Lake City; Ernest L. Wilkinson, president of the Brigham Young University, who was with us with his Chorus on Friday; Dr. William P. Miller, president of Weber College; J. Elliot Cameron, director of Snow College; Arthur F. Bruhn, president of Dixie College; E. Allen Bateman, State Superintendent of Public Instruction; M. Lynn Benning, Superintendent of Salt Lake City Schools; Dr. A. Ray Olpin, president of the University of Utah; and undoubtedly others.

It means much—this spirit of cooperation on Easter morning, your presence during the hour of worship, reaching all classes of people. We want you to know that we are not unmindful of its effect.

We have present also the stake presidencies, bishoprics, temple presidencies, general auxiliary officers. We have the mission presidencies, who can reach us by means of transportation—the United States, Mexico, Central America, Canada, and Hawaii. We extend a cordial welcome to all of you. It is glorious to meet with you and have you partake of the spirit of the General Conference, and let us partake of your spirit and your presence here.

Now that we are in touch with the Coast we desire to mention again the flowers which decorate this building. The daffodils were sent to us from the Puyallup Valley Daffodil Festival, Inc. through the Tacoma Stake. The calla lilies were sent to us by the high priests quorum of the Oakland-Berkeley Stake. The sweet peas were sent by the Indian children of the Fort McDowell, Arizona Indian Reservation. We express our deep appreciation to these three groups for their thoughtfulness in sending these beautiful flowers for our enjoyment during the Conference sessions.

At 7:30 o'clock this morning Elder

Harold B. Lee of the Council of the Twelve was the speaker on the Columbia Broadcasting System's Church of the Air program. The music for this service was furnished by the Tabernacle Choir under the direction of Richard P. Condie.

We desire to mention the General Priesthood Meeting which was the fifth session of this General Conference. This meeting was held in the Salt Lake Tabernacle, with overflow meetings in the Assembly Hall and Barratt Hall. The proceedings were relayed by closed circuit to members of the Priesthood assembled in 128 Church buildings from Coast to Coast and in Canada. It is undoubtedly the largest General Priesthood Meeting ever held in the Church—45,154 Priesthood members in attendance.

The singing for this morning's session, I repeat, has been furnished by the Tabernacle Choir, with Alexander Schreiner at the organ, and under the direction of Richard P. Condie. We express appreciation to these men and women who give so generously of their time and talents, and are working so earnestly to lift the standards of this great organization. They will conclude this service now by singing, "Listen to the Lambs," following which Elder Eben R. T. Blomquist, formerly president of the Swedish Mission, will offer the closing prayer.

The Tabernacle Choir sang the anthem, "Listen to the Lambs."

President David O. McKay:

After the benediction by President Eben R. T. Blomquist, this Conference will be adjourned until 2 o'clock this afternoon.

---

Elder Eben R. T. Blomquist, formerly president of the Swedish Mission, offered the closing prayer.

Conference adjourned until 2:00 p.m.

THIRD DAY AFTERNOON MEETING

The concluding session of the Conference convened in the Tabernacle at 2:00 p.m., Sunday, April 6, with President David O. McKay presiding and conducting the services.

The choral music for this session was furnished by the Tabernacle Choir.

President David O. McKay:

Members of the Church are convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square, Salt Lake City, in the concluding session of the One Hundred Twenty-Eighth Annual Conference of the Church. For those who are unable to enter the building we announce that these services are being broadcast in the Assembly Hall and Barratt Hall over television. The music for this session will be rendered by the Tabernacle Choir, Richard P. Condie conducting, Frank W. Asper at the organ. We shall begin this service by the Tabernacle Choir singing, "I Waited For The Lord," with Jay E. Welch conducting. Brother Welch is Assistant Conductor of the Choir. The opening prayer will be offered by Elder William Franz Perschon, formerly president of the Swiss-Austrian Mission.

The Tabernacle Choir sang, "I Waited for the Lord," Jay E. Welch conducting.

Elder William Franz Perschon, formerly president of the Swiss-Austrian Mission, offered the invocation.

Reuben Clark, Jr. of the First Presidency will present the General Authorities, General Officers, and General Auxiliary Officers of the Church for the sustaining vote of this General Conference.

A musical selection, "Angelic Choir," was sung by the Choir, Richard P. Condie conducting, Jessie Evans Smith soloist.

President David O. McKay:

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr., of the First Presidency will now present the General Authorities, General Officers, and General Auxiliary Officers of the Church for the sustaining vote of the General Conference, after which Elder Delbert L. Stapley will speak to us.

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr.:

My brethren and sisters, by assignment of President McKay I present to you for your sustaining vote the General Authorities and General Officers of the Church. King, and the General Board of the Young Men's Mutual Improvement Association, with the understanding that they will continue to function as now until the end of the next June Conference, when the new Superintendency and Board will assume the duties and responsibilities of heading this great organization. It is proposed that we extend to these brethren who are now released a vote of appreciation for their many years of meritorious service. All who favor this proposal will please indicate it.

It is proposed that we sustain as the new Superintendent, Joseph T. Bentley.

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr.:

President McKay, so far as I was able to determine the vote was unanimous in the affirmative on all of the recommendations.

President David O. McKay:

We have just heard President J. Reuben Clark, Jr. of the First Presidency present the General Authorities, General Officers, and General Auxiliary Officers of the Church. We thank you, brethren and sisters, for your unanimous votes in the affirmative. Elder Delbert L. Stapley of the Council of the Twelve will be our next speaker. He will be followed by Elder Albert Theodore Tuttle of the First Council of Seventy.

ELDER DELBERT L. STAPLEY

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

My brothers and sisters and friends, I should like to express my appreciation for the Brethren sustained among the group of General Authorities with all my heart. I welcome them in these new positions. I know each personally for his faith, devotion, and dedication to the great cause of the Lord. I pledge to them my faith, my prayers, and my help.

This has been a great spiritual conference with choice, enlightening messages. I hope my message will not detract from this sacred day and the important event we commemorate, the resurrection of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ.

Often in conversation with devout and sincere men not of our faith, the subject of religion routinely comes up as an important and interesting topic for discussion. After answering questions and supplying information about the restored Church of Christ, also following an exchange of doctrinal beliefs, the friendly discussion usually terminates with their saying something like this:

"We are all God's children; therefore, it makes no difference to which church a person belongs; we are all working for the same place." Then, apparently without profound thinking, they add: "There are many roads to get to heaven; therefore, it does not matter which road we take, we will all end up in God's presence."

This man-made philosophy—for such it is—sounds good, but the scriptures do not support it. I assure each of you that the road to God's presence is not that easy. I feel certain that the devil chuckles whenever this false opinion is expressed, for it pleases him that the minds of men have been so blinded to revealed truth by his cunning craftiness and deceit that they will believe any religion to be acceptable to God regardless of its tenets and ordinances or how or by whom those ordinances are administered.

Occasionally, to justify or bolster their Christian belief and church allegiance, men will simply say, "We admire your church, but you agree, do you not, that although of different faiths we are all striving for the same goals?" True, we are, but to me this statement evidences an uncertainty and lack of personal assurance of the rightness of their convictions and church membership, because the conversation had neither solicited nor suggested any explanation of their religious choice.

Recently a father wrote an unchristianlike letter to his son, who, after prayerful study, gave up the church of his parents, in which he had been most active, to join the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. The father, apparently suffering from a vain and injured false pride, used this argument as one of many, which were most unfair and bitter, in order to win his son back to the church of his youth and young manhood: (I quote from his letter.) "My father often told us that if we lived by God's Ten Commandments and the Golden Rule every minute that we were awake, we would have all the religion we needed to live a good, wholesome, and righteous life on this earth, thereby pleasing God and reaping our rewards in heaven." And then he quoted a noted evangelist of our day as saying, "There is no true church," and the father added, "I believe the same."

No one will deny the everlasting importance of the Ten Commandments. They are as binding today upon mankind as they were at the time God gave them to Moses upon Mount Sinai. Also, the Golden Rule today is basic to our Christian way of life. However, this father, like so many others, is blinded in his concept of what true religion is and what it requires of an individual. Many people, no doubt, would agree with the statement attributed to the evangelist, that there is "no true church." Many others would not be certain because of the confusion caused by so many churches all claiming to be right. I testify in all sincerity and humility that the true Church of Christ is upon the earth, and every person, in the interest of his salvation and exaltation, is duty bound to find it and to obey its way of life.

A few months ago I saw a large 1957 calendar hanging on a church wall with this caption in bold letters, challenging all who looked upon it to "Go to Church Sunday," followed with this message: "I'll go to my Church, you go to yours, but let us walk together." How can people going to different churches of divergent faiths, doctrines, and tenets, walk together in understanding and peace when they disagree on basic Christian principles and true gospel teachings and faith concepts? Does not walking together imply agreement, unity of faith, and oneness of purpose?

The Lord, reasoning with the children of Israel because of their waywardness and failure to follow the prophets, declared to them through the Prophet Amos:

You only have I known of all the families of the earth: therefore I will punish you for all your iniquities.

Can two walk together, except they be agreed? (Amos 3:2-3.)

A great and important lesson is taught in this scripture; namely, that we should walk together, agreed in faith and doctrine with the Lord. Is not that admonition and counsel just as applicable today to the people of the world as it was in the days of the Prophet Amos?

It was the Apostle Paul, writing to the Ephesian saints, who taught the "one Lord, one faith, one baptism" doctrine, and also testified to them that Christ . . . gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers;

For the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ:

Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ:

That we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive; . . . (Eph. 4:11-14.)

These officers, since the days of Christ, are and always will be in the true Church of Christ as long as the earth shall stand.

With the multiplicity of churches in the world today all claiming the right way, and so many yielding to the generally accepted opinion that all roads or churches lead to eternal life, how important it is that these officers of the true Church of Christ, enumerated by the Apostle Paul, reveal light and truth in the midst of confusion and darkness of teaching, to guide mankind unerringly to the safe harbor of God's everlasting kingdom.

If truth is consistent, and I testify it is, can there be more than one true way to God and eternal life? The Savior said to the Jews who believed on him:

... If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed;

And ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make ye free. (John 8:31-32.)

A man cannot truly be free who is handicapped by false tradition, false teachings, error, and a lack of true knowledge that saves.

Among the eternal truths taught by our Redeemer in his great Sermon on the Mount is this important and challenging obligation: "... seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; ..." (Matt. 6:33.) The Lord specified a certain kingdom, not many kingdoms or any kingdom, but only God's kingdom. It is the gospel of this kingdom that the Lord declared, when outlining the signs and events that would precede his second coming, was to be preached in all the world as a witness unto all nations before the end should come. (See ibid., 24:14.) The duty, therefore, of every man is to search honestly and sincerely in faith until he finds God's kingdom and yields obedience to its full requirements.

When Thomas asked the Lord, "... how can we know the way?" the Savior answered, "I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by me." (John 14:5-6.) Thomas did not ask his Lord what different ways could be chosen or taken, nor did the Savior reveal more than one way or plan by which eternal life can be obtained. He presented the plan he received from his Father, for he declared:

"My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me.

If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself." (Ibid., 7:16-17.)

When Christ ministered among men, he did not accept the sects of the Pharisees and Sadducees, but admonished his listeners to beware of their doctrine. (Matt. 16:12.) He called them blind guides and referred to them, with the scribes, as hypocrites who built the tombs of the prophets; ... compared them unto whited sepulchres and said they omitted the weightier matters of the law. (Ibid., 23:23-31.) The Pharisees believed in the resurrection of man, but the Sadducees did not accept this doctrinal belief. Both could not be right.

Just as the Judah kingdom of the house of Israel had departed from the right way into error and apostasy because of tradition and false teachings, even so today many people are in spiritual darkness because they do not have the light of truth found in the true gospel of Jesus Christ.

It was not the purpose and calling of Christ's apostles anciently to convert and permit people to join any church, but only the true church that Christ had established among men. The Apostle Paul, addressing himself to the Corinthian saints, warned them by saying:

Now I beseech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment. (I Cor. 1:10.)

He then calls attention to reports that there were contentions among them and asks, "Is Christ divided?" Later in this same epistle he refers to himself as a wise master-builder and states:

... I have laid the foundation, and another buildeth thereon. But let every man take heed how he buildeth thereupon.

For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ.

Every man's work shall be made manifest: for the day shall declare it, because it shall be revealed by fire; and the fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is. (Ibid., 3:10-11, 13.)

Writing to the Galatian saints, Paul was just as emphatic. He said to them:

I marvel that ye are so soon removed from him that called you into the grace of Christ unto another gospel:

Which is not another; but there be some

Sunday, April 6

Third Day

that trouble you, and would pervert the gospel of Christ.

Doesn't this statement describe religious conditions in our day and time? Paul continued by declaring:

But though we or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.

And then to re-emphasize it, Paul repeated:

As we said before, so say I now again, If any man preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accursed. (Gal. 1:6-9.)

Does not this scripture clearly reveal that there is only one true gospel plan?

Luke, the physician, recording the historic events that occurred on the Day of Pentecost, proudly relates:

Then they that gladly received his word were baptized: . . .

And they continued stedfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, . . .

And the multitude of them that believed were of one heart and of one soul. (Acts 2:41-42; 4:32.)

When Jesus was taken before Pilate to be judged of him, he said to Pilate, "Every one that is of the truth heareth my voice." (John 18:37.)

Again, when he was in Jerusalem at the Feast of Dedication, he answered certain Jews who gathered about him wanting to know if he was the Christ, by saying,

My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me:

And I give unto them eternal life. . . . (Ibid., 10:27-28.)

How can people truly hear and know the voice of their Shepherd and become so confused in understanding his teachings and doctrines that they divide into many denominations of divergent beliefs and practices? Can they follow him by branching off into different directions contrary to the path Jesus marked out for them?

The Savior authoritatively taught: ". . . there shall be one fold, and one shepherd." (Ibid., 10:16.) He did not suggest there were to be many folds and many shepherds in his kingdom.

Alma, a great prophet of ancient America, declared:

Behold, I say unto you, that the good shepherd doth call you; yea, and in his own name he doth call you, which is the name of Christ; and if ye will not hearken unto the voice of the good shepherd, to the name by which ye are called, behold, ye are not the sheep of the good shepherd.

And now if ye are not the sheep of the good shepherd, of what fold are ye? Behold, I say unto you, that the devil is your shepherd, and ye are of his fold; and now, who can deny this? Behold, I say unto you, whosoever denieth this is a liar and a child of the devil. (Alma 5:38-39.)

In this world of many churches with their diversity of beliefs and teachings, can they all be right and enjoy true authority of ministry? The scriptures teach that God is consistent and unchangeable, that his kingdom is one of order, not chaos. If the scriptures are interpreted according to the light of truth, there is only one path to God, not many. A kingdom divided against itself will fall and become desolate. The laws of God and the requirements for entrance into his kingdom are the same for all. Even the governments of men do not permit a variety of plans by which people can obtain citizenship; the requirements apply to all alike. Can we think of God's kingdom advocating many different ways to salvation and glory to suit the fancy of men? Sincerity of belief is not enough and cannot save any man. Exaltation is founded upon true faith and good works, for it is by works that faith is made perfect.

The Savior asked this thought-provoking question: "And why call ye me, Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?" (Luke 6:46.) He also taught: "The disciple is not above his master: but every one that is perfect shall be as his master." (Ibid., 6:40.) If we are not above our master, then we are obligated to do the things that he did to obtain eternal life. We cannot follow a different course of teachings and beliefs and rest securely with him in the kingdom of our Father. Christ said he came not to do his own will but the will of him that sent him. He also advocated, "Come follow me." To do so would lead us into the waters of baptism, even as Christ was baptized, and by one who has the authority to perform that sacred ordinance. John the Baptist was divinely commissioned and sent from the Father to baptize his Lord and Redeemer.

The Savior taught:

Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that entereth not by the door into the sheepfold, but climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber. (John 10:1.)

Every seeker after truth should searchingly and honestly ask himself or herself this question: Am I attempting to climb heavenward by some other path than the one marked out by the Redeemer and Savior of men?

Another important saying of the Savior in his discourse upon the mount that significantly applies to one Lord, one faith, one baptism, is this:

Not every one that saith unto me Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven.

Many will say to me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name? and in thy name have cast out devils: and in thy name done many wonderful works?

And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you: depart from me, ye that work iniquity. (Matt. 7:21-23.)

If God's children close their minds and hearts to truth and refuse to obey the saving ordinances of the true kingdom of God and thus fail to obtain rightful citizenship in it, this will place the disobedient in that group of iniquity workers that the Lord will refuse to recognize at his coming. Our Savior has warned that every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down and cast into the fire. (Ibid., 7:19.)

John the Beloved reasoned wisely and correctly when he taught:

And hereby we do know that we know him, if we keep his commandments.

He that saith, I know him, and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him.

But whoso keepeth his word, in him verily is the love of God perfected: hereby know we that we are in him.

He that saith he abideth in him ought himself also so to walk, even as he walked. (1 John 2:3-6.)

If all people walked as Christ walked, guided by the Holy Ghost, which is the spirit of truth, they would accept and follow his teachings and do the things which he did. This would unite them in one fold under the leadership of the true Shepherd, Christ our Lord.

In the midst of present-day religious confusion, false teachings, and questionable faith in the true purposes and power of God, it is most difficult, without honest effort and sincere searching, to find Christ's kingdom with its plan of life and salvation. Fortunately for us, God has not left mankind alone in this world of uncertainty, but has promised the guidance of his spirit to enlighten the understanding of his children upon the earth with truth and light if they will faithfully and prayerfully seek after him.

I testify to you, my brothers and sisters and friends, that there is only one true gospel plan, of which our Savior is the author, that embodies all the teachings, principles, and ordinances revealed for the salvation and exaltation of mankind. I testify also that there can be only one true kingdom of God on earth with the authority and power to teach and administer the sacred gospel ordinances for the blessing of the human family.

May God grant that through the restoration of his kingdom in this, the Dispensation of the Fulness of Times, his will shall be done on earth as it is in heaven, as our Savior taught us to pray, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Will Elder Hugh B. Brown please take his place with the Twelve, and will Brother Gordon B. Hinckley come forward and take his place among the Assistants to the Twelve, also Brother Henry D. Taylor.

We shall now hear from Elder Albert Theodore Tuttle, whom you have just sustained as one of the First Council of Seventy of the Church.

ELDER ALBERT THEODORE TUTTLE

Of the First Council of the Seventy

President McKay, my brothers and sisters: at this time I would surely like to have Brother Benson share with me the manuscript he has in his pocket.

I am sure I need not try to tell you what a humbling experience this is. Perhaps the only people who fully understand the impact of such an assignment are these Brethren who sit before you.

Knowing something of Brother Oscar A. Kirkham, his life and his tremendous stature, gives me no consolation in filling the vacancy which resulted from his passing. On the contrary, it has increased the weight of this responsibility. I must confess that at the present time I do not know why the Lord has called me to this position. I have been taught a principle all of my life to which President Clark has given expression, that we neither seek nor do we decline the calls that come to us in this Church. Acceptance of this principle coupled with my faith that the Brethren who direct the affairs of this Church are acting for the Lord, lends strength sufficient to accept this assignment, and to pledge my heart, mind, and strength to the future assignments which shall be given to me. I thank you for your sustaining vote. I trust that in the days to come you will feel inclined to carry out the admonition of President Clark and help sustain me with your prayers.

Occasions such as this give one cause for serious reflection. If I have a message today it is an expression of gratitude for those who have helped to bring me to this position of high honor. First, I want to express my gratitude to my Heavenly Father for the blessings and opportunities that he has made mine throughout my life; secondly to my sweet and devoted companion, who has been in every sense what Brother Cowley has termed a "companion-wife." For her sweet and silent and effective support, I express my appreciation.

I am thankful, too, to my five children from whom I have learned many lessons of life and who have given me a better understanding of my Father in heaven and his relationship to all of us, his children. To have them climb upon my knee and throw themselves upon my neck and express in their innocent way their love and their affection typifies, I am sure, what our Father in heaven wants us to do: to come to him, to rely upon him, to ask of him, that we may receive.

I think I have learned another lesson from my children, too, when they have remembered to express appreciation to me for some kind act. We all may well learn to express our appreciation to our Father in heaven for his many blessings.

I am grateful for my wonderful mother and father and for the boundless love and valuable teachings received in our home. I am grateful, too, for my only sister. In our home we had both precept and example, which, I think should be found in every Latter-day Saint home and to which I owe most of what I am.

I owe a debt of gratitude also to my other forebears who joined the Church when they heard the truth and came to the valleys of the mountains and built what we now enjoy. I am grateful that they had the courage to leave their homes and accept calls which came to them to colonize in the Great Basin area.

I am also deeply grateful for my teachers, both within and without the Church. I am a product of this Church. I hope and pray that I can be counted a worthy one, because from my early youth I have been taught in all of the organizations of the Church, in the Primary, the Mutual, the Sunday School, and the priesthood classes, and have had opportunity to learn and serve in them. Today I cannot help thinking of the lovely women and the fine men in these auxiliaries and priesthood quorums who have taught me the gospel and strengthened my testimony. To them I voice my appreciation.

Because of my association in the educational program of the Church (and all of my productive life has been spent in it), I feel a greater appreciation and kinship to my seminary and institute teachers and those at Brigham Young University than perhaps to others. I certainly would echo the eloquent plea of Elder Moyle that all parents in this Church see to it that their sons and daughters enroll in seminary, and that those college students who do not attend the Church schools should enroll in institutes of religion, where men of devotion and dedication can balance their religious education with their secular learning. It is my belief, my brothers and sisters, that we do not lose young people who go away to college and further their education if while they are so engaged secular learning is balanced with teachings of the restored gospel of Jesus Christ.

I realize that young people are under tremendous pressure from school to complete the requirements both for graduation and for entrance into a university, and sometimes we think we do not have time to get daily religious training. It seems to me that while we are in this life, sent here for the purpose of getting acquainted with the physical things of this earth, and to work out our salvation, that we might well pay attention first to the learning of the gospel plan and our part in it. And I would urge, because of my close experience with daily religious education and my testimony of its fruitfulness, that every young person in the Church enrol in seminaries. Such instructions will help prepare youth for life; will supplement the teachings in the home, the teachings of the auxiliaries of the Church; will more adequately prepare missionaries, as we have heard explained; will lead them into the temples for proper marriage, and help to make faithful members of them.

Now it is true that there are pressures on these young people for such courses as they should take, but may we ever keep in mind the admonition of our Lord and Savior to "... seek ... first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness;" (Matt. 6:33) and then add the other things where we can.

I would like to pay my respects to that corps of devoted men and women who teach in the Church educational system, for their devotion and their dedication to duty in going the extra mile.

In closing, I wish to leave my humble testimony with you that there has been a conviction borne upon my soul that God lives, that his Son, Jesus Christ, lives, that he was resurrected and now rules with his Father in the affairs and destinies of men, and that he is at the head of this Church.

I have a testimony in my heart that God the Father and his Son appeared to the Prophet Joseph Smith in the spring of 1820 and there commissioned him to restore the gospel which had been taken from the earth. I have a conviction also in my heart that these men before you are the commissioned servants of our Father in heaven, delegated to administer the affairs of this Church and kingdom until he shall come and reign.

I am grateful for this testimony.

My brothers and sisters, I pledge my life to the Lord in his cause and to your service, reserving only sufficient time and means to rear my children honorably before him and before my fellow men.

I pray for the blessings of the Lord to be upon me and trust that you, too, will join in that prayer that I might adequately serve.

This testimony I bear in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

You have just been listening to Elder Albert Theodore Tuttle, who this day was sustained as one of the First Council of Seventy. He fills a vacancy in that Council made by the death of Elder Oscar A. Kirkham. The Choir and congregation will now sing, "How Firm A Foundation," conducted by Brother Jay E. Welch. After the singing, we would like to hear from Brother Henry D. Taylor, who is today sustained as an Assistant to the Twelve.
